

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. You can search through the full text of this book on the web at <http://books.google.com/>

x
23
HISTORICAL INTRODUCTION 85

TO THE PRIVATE

LAW OF ROME

BY THE LATE

JAMES MUIRHEAD, LL.D. (GLASG.)

PROFESSOR OF ROMAN LAW IN THE UNIVERSITY OF EDINBURGH

SECOND EDITION

REVISED AND EDITED BY

HENRY GOUDY, LL.D.

REGIUS PROFESSOR OF CIVIL LAW, OXFORD

LONDON

ADAM AND CHARLES BLACK

1899

910

+

For TX
M 953
ed 2

Rec. Oct. 13, 1905,

PREFACE TO SECOND EDITION

IN preparing a new edition of this book my principal object has been to supplement the author's notes by references to the most recent authorities, viz. to such works of importance dealing with the history of Roman Law as have been published since the date of the first edition, and have come within my reach. No alteration has been made in the text, except by way of correcting a few verbal inaccuracies. Neither has any attempt been made to critically examine certain theories propounded by the author regarding primitive Roman institutions, such as the origin and effects of mancipation and nexum, even where I might not be disposed to accept all his conclusions. To have done so in detail would have swollen the notes and increased the size of the book to an inconvenient extent. It must always be kept in view that our knowledge of early Roman customs, at least till after the XII Tables, cannot be based upon historical evidence; it is almost entirely conjectural, and different writers will take different views according to the value they attach to this or that piece of presumptive evidence.

Among the works that I have consulted, I am specially indebted to the valuable and comprehensive treatises of Cuq, Les institutions juridiques des Romains, L'ancien droit; and P. F. Girard, Manuel élémentaire de droit romain. I have also consulted with advantage the useful notes appended to the French translation of this work by G. Bourcart of Nancy, and the Italian translation by L. Gaddi.

The notes I have made throughout the book are contained in square brackets. It has been thought advisable to insert in the appendix the conjecturally restored text of the XII Tables, along with a few notes. In doing so, the arrangement of the fragments made by Schoell, and adopted by Bruns in his Fontes Juris, has been followed, as it is the one with reference to which the laws are now usually cited. One or two notes on special topics have also been added to the appendix, and the index has been slightly enlarged.

For several useful suggestions, which have been given effect to in the notes, I have to thank Dr. Emerton of Christ Church, and Dr. Williams of Lincoln College, Oxford. I have also to express my grateful acknowledgments to Mr. W. M. Harrison, Fellow of All Souls College, who kindly read the whole of the proofs, and gave me much assistance by his valuable criticisms.

HENRY GOUDY.

OXFORD, December 1898.

PREFACE TO FIRST EDITION

THE following pages were written originally for the Encyclopædia Britannica, but had to be very much abridged in order to bring them within the limits of space the Editor could afford to devote to their subject. He did me the honour to express the opinion that their publication in extenso would prove of service to various classes of readers; and the Publishers of the Encyclopædia were so good as to urge me to adopt his suggestion. This book is the result.

I think it right to prefix this explanation; for the plan and execution might have been somewhat different had an independent volume been in contemplation from the first.

JAMES MUIRHEAD.

EDINBURGH, 1st October 1886.

CONTENTS

PART I

THE REGAL PERIOD

CHAPTER I

SOCIAL AND POLITICAL CONDITION OF ROME AND ITS POPULATION DOWN TO THE TIME OF SERVIUS TULLIUS

- SECT. 1. GENESIS OF THE ROMAN STATE.—Different races. Different customs.
Dualistic result 3-6
- SECT. 2. THE PATRICIANS.—They alone ranked as citizens or Quirites. Their gentes or clans. Gentile organisation. Relation between the gentes and their constituent families 6-8
- SECT. 3. THE CLIENTS.—How clientage arose. Relation between patron and client 8, 9
- SECT. 4. THE PLEBEIANS.—Origin of the plebs. Accessions to its ranks.
Different races and customs represented. Some of the plebeians belonged to guilds of craftsmen. The greater number engaged in agriculture. Had no gentile institutions and no share in government 9-13

CHAPTER II

REGULATIVES OF PUBLIC AND PRIVATE ORDER

- SECT. 5. ABSENCE OF ANY DEFINITE SYSTEM OF LAW.—Pomponius's account of the early law. Errors in it. Fas, jus, and boni mores 14, 15
- SECT. 6. FAS.—What understood by it. Its behests. Their enforcement.
The homo sacer 15-18
- SECT. 7. JUS.—Meaning and etymology. Its sources: custom and statute.
The leges regiae 18-21
- SECT. 8.—BONI MORES.—Their function; restraining jus and supplementing
it. Illustration: influencing faithfulness to engagements 21-23

CHAPTER III

INSTITUTIONS OF THE PRIVATE LAW

- SECT. 9. THE FAMILY ORGANISATION.—The familia and its head and members. The patrician family. Its perpetuation a religious duty. Confarreate marriage. The husband's resulting manus over his wife. His patria potestas over issue of the marriage. Recruitment of a family by adoption when marriage fruitless. Conjugal and parental (as distinguished from dominical) position of the paterfamilias. How and when the pat. potestas came to an end. Guardianship of wife, daughters, and pupil sons on death of paterfamilias. The family clients and slaves. Plebeian family relationships. No justae nuptiae. Their formless unions only matrimonia. Exercised a de facto pat. potestas. Having no gentes, set more store than the patricians on cognati and adfines 24-36
- SECT. 10. DISTRIBUTION OF LAND AND LAW OF PROPERTY.—Varro's bina jugera. Gentile settlements. Possessiones in ager publicus. Grants of land to plebeians. Were the heredia inalienable? Dominium ex jure Quiritium. Property in movables. 36-42
- SECT. 11. THE ORDER OF SUCCESSION.—Patrician practice. By law a man's wife and children, if in manu and in potestate at his death, were his proper heirs (sui heredes); failing them his gens succeeded. Children who had quitted the family by marriage or otherwise were not sui heredes. By law no preference of sex or age. Splitting up of a heredium avoided by testamentary arrangement. Testaments made with sanction of curies. Plebeian order of succession. De facto a plebeian's children in potestate succeeded. Having no gentiles, and being unable to make a testament, his succession was de jure vacant on failure of children. Its de facto appropriation by a kinsman,—the foundation of the later usucapio pro herede 42-49
- SECT. 12. BREACH OF CONTRACT, AND PRIVATE AND PUBLIC OFFENCES.—Social arrangements left narrow range for contractual engagement. The guarantees for good faith: invocation of Fides, jusjurandum, and de facto pledge. Redress for breach. Redress for wrongs outside contract. Private vengeance. Expiatio, supplicium, sacratio capitis. Compositions. 49-55

CHAPTER IV

THE SERVIAN REFORMS

- SECT. 13. EFFECT OF THE REFORMS OF SERVIUS TULLIUS ON THE LAW OF PROPERTY.—The census, and the necessity for regulating conveyances of censuable property. Mancipium or mancipation,—its origin and reformation by Servius. Meaning of mancipium. Res mancipi and nec mancipi. 55-63

SECT. 14. THEIR INCIDENTAL EFFECTS ON THE LAW OF THE FAMILY, OF SUCCESSION, AND OF CONTRACT.—Employment by plebeians of mancipium , under the name of coemptio , as a civil form of marriage and means of acquiring manus over their wives. Their employment of it for mortis causa disposal of their estates as a makeshift for a testament. Its employment, under the name of nexum , in contracting money loans. Its employment in emancipation and adoption of a filiusfamilias , and in release of a nexal debtor. In all those applications it involved acquisition of manus	63-67
SECT. 15. SERVIAN AMENDMENTS ON THE COURSE OF JUSTICE.—The state of matters before Servius. The king's criminal jurisdiction. Those of the paterfamilias and the gens . Origin of the king's jurisdiction inter privatos . Servian reforms. The centumviral court. The unus iudex	68-75

PART II

THE JUS CIVILE

(From the Establishment of the Republic till the Subjugation of Central and Southern Italy)

CHAPTER I

HISTORICAL EVENTS THAT INFLUENCED THE LAW

SECT. 16. THE CHANGE FROM KING TO CONSULS.—The strife between patricians and plebeians and its causes	79-81
SECT. 17. POLITICAL INEQUALITIES REMOVED.—The first secession and the tribunate. The concilium plebis and its plebiscita . The second secession and the comitia of the tribes. The third secession and the Hortensian law. The Canuleian law and repeal of the prohibition of intermarriage of patricians and plebeians. The Licinian laws, admission of the plebeians to the consulate, and institution of the praetorship. Plebeians in all the magistracies	81-86
SECT. 18. UNCERTAINTY OF THE LAW.—The Terentilian rogation, the Decemvirate, and the XII Tables	86, 87
SECT. 19. THE PUBLIC LANDS.—How these were dealt with. Patrician monopoly. The Cassian law of 268 U.C. The Licinian laws. Later agrarian legislation	87-89
SECT. 20. THE LAW OF DEBT.—Causes of plebeian poverty and patrician wealth. Nexal loans and sufferings of the nexi . Measures in relief. Poetilian law abolishing nexum . Subsequent enactments in aid of debtors	89-93

CHAPTER II

THE TWELVE TABLES

SECT. 21. THEIR COMPILATION	94, 95
SECT. 22. THEIR SOURCES	95, 96
SECT. 23. THEIR REMAINS AND RECONSTRUCTION	96-99
SECT. 24. GENERAL CHARACTERISTICS OF THE LAWS CONTAINED IN THEM	100-102

CHAPTER III

THE PRIVATE LAW WITHIN AND BEYOND THE TABLES

SECT. 25. CITIZEN AND NON-CITIZEN.—Early law personal, not territorial. Position of foreigners. Conubium, commercium, actio. Amicitia and hospitium. Conubium, commercium, and recuperatio under treaty arrangements	103-108
SECT. 26. THE GENS OR CLAN.—Effect of the XII Tables on gentile institutions	109, 110
SECT. 27. THE FAMILY RELATIONS PROPER.—Husband and wife. Manus -less marriage, and manus superinduced by a year's usus . The wife's dos or dowry. Divorce. Parent and child. The patria potestas . “ Si pater familias ter filium venum duuit, filius a patre liber esto. ” Adoption. Master and slave. Statu liberi. Noxae deditio	110-116
SECT. 28. GUARDIANSHIP AND INTRODUCTION OF THE ORDER OF AGNATES.—Impossibility of extending the gentile guardianships of the patricians to the citizens generally. Agnatic guardianship substituted by the Decemvirs. Agnation defined and illustrated. Order of devolution of tutory over females and male pupils under the Tables. The office of a tutor. Curatory of lunatics and spendthrifts	116-121
SECT. 29. CAPITIS DEMINUTIO.— Caput and capitis deminutio —what? Various degrees of capitis deminutio . Cap. dem. minima in particular. It was change of family, but not necessarily of status in the family. It dissolved patria potestas and agnation, and extinguished claims of creditors of the capite minutus	121-126
SECT. 30. MANCIPATION AND THE LAW OF PROPERTY.—Was there under the Tables any quiritarian ownership (manus) of res nec Mancipi ? Natural and civil modes of acquiring property. Mancipation of res Mancipi . Changes on the Servian mancipium consequent on the introduction of coined money. Effect of mancipation in passing property. Transferrer's auctoritas or obligation to maintain his title. Statutory limitation of the auctoritas . Leges Mancipii or concurrent engagements of transferrer and transferee. The fiducia or lex fiduciae in particular. Usureceptio fiduciae . Did mancipation avail to transfer ownership of res nec Mancipi ? In jure cessio . Adjudication. Usucapion. Offences against property. Jura in re aliena	126-142

- SECT. 31. NEXUM AND THE LAW OF OBLIGATIONS.—Sources of obligation, and preponderance in the XII Tables of obligations ex delicto. Mere agreement, unclothed in legal word and form, not creative of civil obligation. Conservatism in matters of form. The contracts of the earliest jus civile. Nexum in particular. Its origin. The ceremonial. Effects of the nexal contract. The creditor's right of manus injectio under the XII Tables. The nexus (or nexal debtor) in detention. Abuses of the system. Its practical abolition by the Poetilian law. Ordinary engagements,—how their fulfilment was guaranteed. Obligations ex re . . . 142-158
- SECT. 32. THE LAW OF SUCCESSION.—Testamentary succession. The old forms of testament and the “uti legassit” of the Tables. The testament per aes et libram in its inchoate condition. Its second and third stages. Application to it of the “uti legassit.” Necessity of institution or disherison of the testator's sui heredes. Intestate succession,—sui heredes, adgnati, gentiles. Succession of agnates introduced by the Decemvirs to meet the case of non-patrician citizens. Limitations. Résumé. Necessary and voluntary heirs, and how an inheritance vested in them. Representation, consortium, and accrual. “Heres eadem persona cum defuncto.” The heir and the family sacra. Usucapio pro herede . . . 158-171

CHAPTER IV

JUDICIAL PROCEDURE UNDER THE DECEMVIRAL SYSTEM

- SECT. 33. THE LEGIS ACTIONES GENERALLY.—Gaius's account of them. The five genera agendi. Preliminary in jus vocatio. Proceedings in jure and in judicio. Centumviral court, unus iudex, and tres arbitri . . . 172-177
- SECT. 34. THE LEGIS ACTIO SACRAMENTO.—General idea. The procedure in vindication of land. The manus consertio. The sacramento provocatio, etc. The judgment. What did it all mean? Effect of the judgment. Application of the sacramental action in other cases . . . 177-187
- SECT. 35. THE LEGIS ACTIO PER JUDICIS POSTULATIONEM . . . 187-190
- SECT. 36. THE LEGIS ACTIO PER MANUS INJECTIONEM.—Gellius's description of it. Against whom employed. Procedure when against a judgment-debtor. “Capite poenas dabat” and “partis secanto,”—meaning. Attempted reconstruction of provisions of XII Tables on subject. Effect of the Poetilian law. Man. injectio pro judicato and pura . . . 190-202
- SECT. 37. THE LEGIS ACTIO PER PIGNORIS CAPIONEM . . . 202-205
- SECT. 38. JUDICIAL AND QUASI-JUDICIAL PROCEDURE OUTSIDE THE LEGIS ACTIONES.—Magisterial intervention in exercise of the imperium. Plebeian processes before the judices decemviri. Pontifical jurisdiction. Censorial, familiar, and gentile intervention. International recuperatio . . . 205-212

CHAPTER V

THE STIPULATION AND THE LEGIS ACTIO PER CONDICTIONEM

- SECT. 39. INTRODUCTION OF THE STIPULATION.—Its importance in the history of the law. Theories as to its origin. Its forms—sponsio (σπένδειν and σπονδή), promissio, etc. A formal contract 213-216
- SECT. 40. THE SILIAN AND CALPURNIAN LAWS.—The Silian law apparently a result of the Poetilian. Its sponsio et restipulatio tertias partis the earliest statutory sanction of stipulation. The Calpurnian law 216-219
- SECT. 41. THE LEGIS ACTIO PER CONDICTIONEM.—Introduced by the Silian and Calpurnian laws. Its advantages. Procedure 219-222

PART III

THE JUS GENTIUM AND JUS HONORARIUM

(Latter Half of the Republic)

CHAPTER I

THE INFLUENCES THAT OPERATED ON THE LAW

- SECT. 42. GROWTH OF COMMERCE AND INFLUX OF FOREIGNERS.—Necessary consequence,—commencement of a jus gentium. This chiefly in contract, but more or less affected all branches of the law. Illustrations 225-228
- SECT. 43. INSTITUTION OF THE PEREGRIN PRAETORSHIP.—The urban praetorship. Date of, and reasons for, the introduction of the peregrin praetorship. Relation of the new magistrate to his urban colleague 228, 229
- SECT. 44. SIMPLIFICATION OF PROCEDURE AND INTRODUCTION OF NEW REMEDIES UNDER THE AEBUTIAN LAW.—Probable purpose of the Aebutian Law. Result,—the formular system of procedure. Characteristic of the new system 230, 231
- SECT. 45. PROVINCIAL CONQUESTS.—Roman officials brought face to face with new institutions. Some of these imported to Rome 231, 232
- SECT. 46. SPREAD OF LITERATURE AND PHILOSOPHY.—Aided equity. This not confined to praetors and their edict 232, 233
- SECT. 47. DECLINE OF RELIGION AND MORALS.—Effects on domestic relations. Divorce and judicium de moribus. Inofficious testaments and introduction of the law of legitim. Effects in social and mercantile life. New guarantees in contracting. Bankruptcy arrangements. Measures for repressing fraudulent dealings 233-236

CHAPTER II

FACTORS OF THE LAW

- SECT. 48. LEGISLATION.—Paucity of legislative enactments affecting the private law. Some of the more important (in footnote) 237
- SECT. 49. EDICTS OF THE MAGISTRATES.—Antiquity of practice of publishing edicts. The urban praetor's edict. Edicta repentina and perpetua. Edictum tralatitium. Its gradual enlargement. Edict proper and appendix of styles. Forms of the edictal provisions. The edicts of the peregrin praetor, the provincial governors, and the curule aediles 238-242
- SECT. 50. CONSUEITUDE, PROFESSIONAL JURISPRUDENCE, AND RES JUDICATAE.—The making of custom. The pontiffs and their "interpretatio." The Jus Flavianum, Tiberius Coruncanius, and the Jus Aelianum. The "veteres" of the later republic 243-248

CHAPTER III

SUBSTANTIVE CHANGES IN THE LAW DURING THE PERIOD

- SECT. 51. CITIZENS, LATINS, AND PEREGRINS. Jus Latii and colonial latins. Peregrins of lower grade 249, 250
- SECT. 52. THE LAW OF PROPERTY AND THE PUBLICIAN EDICT.—Changes in the law of property and of jura in re aliena generally. The Publician edict and the defects it was introduced to remove. Results,—the introduction of the in bonis (or bonitarian) tenure of res mancipi, and of bonae fidei possessio as a fictitious property 250-255
- SECT. 53. DEVELOPMENT OF THE LAW OF CONTRACT.—Development of the law of obligation generally. Popularisation of the stipulation. Indefinite stipulations, the stipulatio Aquiliana, and praetorian and judicial stipulations. The nomen transcripticium or litterarum obligatio. Evolution of the purely consensual contracts. Sale as an example: its beginnings. Sale in the XII Tables. How aided per aes et libram. How aided by nomina transcripticia, ancillary stipulations, etc. The actio empti originally an actio ex stipulatu. It becomes a bonae fidei action. Thereby sale becomes an independent consensual contract. The real contracts 255-270
- SECT. 54. AMENDMENTS ON THE LAW OF SUCCESSION.—Changes effected by legislation, interpretatio, and practice of the centumviral court. Praetorian bonorum possessio. Nature and probable origin. Bonor. poss. secundum tabulas. Bonor. poss. contra tabulas. Bonor. poss. ab intestato. Praetorian order of intestate succession. Admission of cognati. How bonor. possessio obtained. Its immediate effect 270-276

PART IV

THE JUS NATURALE AND MATURITY OF ROMAN JURISPRUDENCE*(The Empire until the time of Diocletian)*

CHAPTER I

CHARACTERISTICS AND FORMATIVE AGENCIES OF THE LAW
DURING THE PERIOD

- SECT. 55. CHARACTERISTICS GENERALLY, AND RECOGNITION OF A "JUS NATURALE" IN PARTICULAR.—Nature of the changes on the law during the period. Many of them not to be accounted for by advance of jus gentium, but due to growth of jus naturale. Characteristics and fundamental principles of latter. Naturalis ratio 279-283
- SECT. 56. INFLUENCE OF CONSTITUTIONAL CHANGES 283, 284
- SECT. 57. LEGISLATION OF COMITIA AND SENATE.—Comitial legislation of Augustus regarding marriage (and herein of the lex Julia et Papia Poppaea), manumission, and judicial procedure. Legislation of the senate from time of Tiberius onwards 284-288
- SECT. 58. THE CONSOLIDATED EDICTUM PERPETUUM.—History of the Julian consolidation. Its contents and arrangement 289-291
- SECT. 59. RESPONSES OF PATENTED COUNSEL.—Origin of the jus respondendi. Value of the responsa. Their regulation by Hadrian 291-293
- SECT. 60. CONSTITUTIONS OF THE EMPERORS.—Edicta, their character at this time. Rescripta and decreta 293-295

CHAPTER II

JURISPRUDENCE

- SECT. 61. LABEO AND CAPITO, AND THE SCHOOLS OF THE PROCULIANS AND SABINIANS 296-299
- SECT. 62. JULIAN, GAIUS, AND THE ANTONINIAN JURISTS.—Salvius Julianus. Sextus Pomponius. Sextus Caecilius Africanus. Gaius. Q. Cervidius Scaevola 299-303
- SECT. 63. PAPINIAN, ULPIAN, AND PAUL.—Aemilius Papinianus. Domitius Ulpianus. Julius Paulus 303-306

- SECT. 64. MODESTINE AND THE POST-SEVERAN JURISTS.—Herennius Modestinus. Paucity of jurisprudential literature after reign of Alexander Severus. Excellence of many of the rescripts of Gordian and Diocletian . . . 306-308
- SECT. 65. REMAINS OF THE JURISPRUDENCE OF THE PERIOD.—The Institutes of Gaius and the Verona Codex. Part of Ulpian's Liber Regularum. Paul's "Sentences." The Notae Juris of Valerius Probus, the Assis distributio of Maecianus, the Dosithean fragment on manumissions, and the Fragmentum de jure fisci. Minor fragments 308-314

CHAPTER III

SUBSTANTIVE CHANGES IN THE LAW DURING THE PERIOD

- SECT. 66. CITIZENSHIP, JUNIAN LATINITY, AND PEREGRINITY.—The inductive cause of the Aelia-Sentian law. Its provisions. The Junia-Norban law and the Junian latins. Caracalla's grant of citizenship to all his free subjects 315-319
- SECT. 67. CONCESSION OF PECULIAR PRIVILEGES TO SOLDIERS.—Exceptional position of soldiers. The testamentum militare. The peculium castrense 319-323
- SECT. 68. THE FAMILY.—Husband and wife, and the disappearance of marital manus. Parent and child, and relaxation of the patria potestas. Tutor, and disappearance of that of women. Curatory, and institution of that of minors 323-326
- SECT. 69. POSSESSION, PROPERTY, REAL RIGHTS, AND OBLIGATIONS . . . 327-328
- SECT. 70. THE LAW OF SUCCESSION AND PARTICULARLY TESTAMENTARY TRUSTS.—Testamentary succession. Legacies and the Senatusconsultum Neronianum. Fideicommissa (mortis causa trusts), universal and singular. Codicils. Intestate succession and the Tertullian and Orphitian senatusconsults 328-333

CHAPTER IV

JUDICIAL PROCEDURE

- SECT. 71. THE FORMULAR SYSTEM.—Characteristic. The Aebutian and Julian laws. Transition from earlier systems,—in personal actions by simplification of the procedure per conductionem, and in vindicationes by the introduction of that per sponsionem, paving the way for the formula petitoria. Formulae in jus and in factum conceptae. Actiones utiles. Actiones ficticiae. Actiones in factum. Actiones arbitrarias. Exceptiones, etc. Elasticity of the formula 334-344
- SECT. 72. PROCEDURE "EXTRA ORDINEM."—The extraordinaria cognitio and what occasioned it 344, 345
- SECT. 73. JURAL REMEDIES FLOWING DIRECTLY FROM THE MAGISTRATE'S IMPERIUM.—Interdicts. Uti possidetis and utrubi in particular. Praetorian stipulations. Missiones in possessionem. In integrum restitutio . . . 345-350

PART V

THE PERIOD OF CODIFICATION

(Diocletian to Justinian)

CHAPTER I

HISTORICAL EVENTS THAT INFLUENCED THE LAW

- SECT. 74. SUPREMACY OF THE EMPERORS AS SOLE LEGISLATORS.—The leges generales or edictales of the later empire 353-355
- SECT. 75. ESTABLISHMENT OF CHRISTIANITY AS THE STATE RELIGION.—Its influence generally. Repeal of the caducuary provisions of the Julian and Papia-Poppæan law. Legislation about divorce. Institution of the bishop's courts 355-357
- SECT. 76. SOCIAL AND AGRARIAN CHANGES.—In particular, the recognition and regulation of the colonate (or servitude of the glebe) 358-360
- SECT. 77. ABANDONMENT OF THE "FORMULAR" SYSTEM OF PROCEDURE.—Abolition of the two-staged procedure (1) in jure and (2) in judicio, and remit to a judex allowed only exceptionally. The ordinary fora. The new procedure per libellum conventionis, etc. Execution 360-363
- SECT. 78. THE VALENTINIANIAN "LAW OF CITATIONS."—Scientific jurisprudence gives place to mechanical 363-365

CHAPTER II

ANTE-JUSTINIANIAN COLLECTIONS OF STATUTE AND JURISPRUDENCE

- SECT. 79. THE GREGORIAN AND HERMOGENIAN CODES 366-367
- SECT. 80. THE THEODOSIAN CODE AND THEODOSIAN AND POST-THEODOSIAN NOVELS 367-369
- SECT. 81. THE "COLLATIO," THE VATICAN FRAGMENTS, AND THE "CONSULTATIO."—The Collatio Legum Mosaicarum et Romanarum. The Vatican Fragments. The Consultatio veteris jurisconsulti 369-371
- SECT. 82. THE ROMANO-BARBARIAN CODES.—The Edictum Theodorici. The Breviarium Alaricianum or Lex Romana Visigothorum. The Lex Romana Burgundionum 371-373
- SECT. 83. ORIENTAL COLLECTIONS.—Bernardakis's Sinaitic papyri. The Syrian "Leges Constantini, Theodosii, et Leonis" 373-375

CHAPTER III

THE JUSTINIANIAN LAW

- SECT. 84. JUSTINIAN'S COLLECTIONS AND HIS OWN LEGISLATION.—Justinian. Chronology of his collections. His first Code of statute-law. His commission for preparation of the Digest. The Quinquaginta Decisiones. The Institutes. Publication of the Digest. Its divisions, and the sources drawn upon. The order of sequence of books, titles, and fragments. The Codex Repetitae Prælectionis or second edition of his Code of statute-law. Its relation to the Digest. Its sources. The Novels. Characteristics of Justinian's own enactments 376-387
- SECT. 85. CHANGES IN THE LAW OF THE FAMILY.—Husband and wife—marriage, divorce, dos and donatio propter nuptias. Parent and child—still greater relaxation of the patria potestas, personally and patrimonially. Amendments in other branches of the law of the family—adoption legitimation, emancipation, tutory, slavery, manumission 387-391
- SECT. 86. CHANGES IN THE LAW OF PROPERTY AND OBLIGATION.—Abolition of distinction between res Mancipi and nec Mancipi and quiritarian and bonitarian ownership, and simple tradition made the universal mode of conveyance. Usucapion and long possession remodelled. Emphyteusis sanctioned and regulated. Changes in the law of obligation 392-394
- SECT. 87. CHANGES IN THE LAW OF SUCCESSION.—Testaments and codicils. Amendments in the law of intestate succession prior to the publication of the Code. The 118th and 127th Novels, eradicating agnation and settling a new order of succession on intestacy. Declaration of a child's right to be his parent's heir in a certain share of his estate, and practical abolition of bonorum possessio contra tabulas. Other amendments 394-398

CHAPTER IV

THE JUSTINIANIAN LAW-BOOKS

- SECT. 88. THEIR USE IN THE COURTS AND THE SCHOOLS.—Translations, abridgements, etc., of Digest and Code. New course of study for the law-schools. Greek paraphrase of the Institutes imputed to Theophilus 399-402
- SECT. 89. THEIR FATE IN THE EAST.—The Byzantine jurisprudence, and particularly the Basilica 402, 403
- SECT. 90. THEIR FATE IN THE WEST.—The Romano-Barbarian Codes the earliest instructors of Central and Western Europe in Roman law. Transmission of Justinian's collections to Italy. Literary indications of their currency there and elsewhere in Southern Europe between the sixth and eleventh centuries. Revival of their study at Bologna, and their treatment by the glossarists 403-407
- SECT. 91. THE PRINCIPAL MANUSCRIPTS, TEXTS, AND EDITIONS OF THE JUSTINIANIAN BOOKS 407-411

APPENDIX

NOTE A. On the use of the word cognati by the lay writers	413
NOTE B. On coemptio	413-415
NOTE C. On the definitions of nexum by Mamilius, Quint. Mucius Scaevola, and Ael. Gallus	415, 416
NOTE D. Jhering on the effect of the lex Papiria (de sacramentis exigundis) on the sacramental procedure	416, 417
NOTE E. On the deposit of the sacramental sheep, cattle, or money ad pontem	417
NOTE F. Argument from the L. colon. Juliae Genetivae that the aes confessum of the XII Tables meant nexal loan	417, 418
NOTE G. Kohler on the partis secanto of the XII Tables	418, 419
NOTE H. Cicero's anecdote of Canius and Pythius, as illustrative of the operation of the nomen transscripticium	419, 420

 ADDITIONAL BY EDITOR

NOTE a. Epochs in History of Roman Law	421, 422
NOTE b. On capitis deminutio	422-427
NOTE c. On furtum lance licioque	428-430
NOTE d. Voigt's theory regarding the contract litteris	430, 431
NOTE e. On the name of Gaius	431-433
The XII Tables	434-443
INDEX	445-457

ABBREVIATIONS IN REFERENCES TO LITERATURE

- Arch. Giurid.*—Archivio Giuridico, diretto di Filippo Serafini. Bologna, and now Pisa, 1868 [and subsequently].
- Baron, Gesch. d. r. R.—Geschichte des römischen Rechts, von Dr. J. Baron. Erster Theil: Institutionen u. Civil-prozess. Berlin, 1884. Vol. ii. not yet published.
- Bekker, Aktionen (or Akt.)—Die Aktionen des röm. Privatrechts, von Dr. E. I. Bekker. 2 vols. Berlin, 1871, 1878.
- Bekker u. Muther's Jahrb.*—Jahrbuch d. gemeinen deutschen Rechts, herausg. von Bekker, Muther, u. Stobbe. 6 vols. Leipsic, 1857-63.
- Bethmann-Hollweg, Röm. CP. (or Gesch. d. CP.)—Der röm. Civil-prozess, von (†) Dr. A. v. Bethmann-Hollweg. 3 vols. Bonn, 1864-66. (They form the first three of his 6 vols. on the Civil-prozess des gemeinen Rechts, Bonn, 1864-74.)
- Bruns (or Bruns, Fontes).—Fontes Juris Romani antiqui ed. (†) Car. Geo. Bruns. 4th ed. Tübingen, 1879 [5th ed. 1887; 6th ed., by Mommsen and Gradenwitz, 1893. Unless otherwise stated the references are to the 4th ed.]
- Buonamici, Procedura.—La Storia della procedura civile romana, per Francisco Buonamici. Vol. i. Pisa, 1886. Vol. ii. not yet published.
- [Buckler, Contract in Roman Law.—The Origin and History of Contract in Roman Law down to the end of the Republican Period. Cambridge, 1895.]
- Burckhard-Gluck*.—Glück's Ausführliche Erläuterung d. Pandekten . . . fortgesetzt von . . . Dr. Hugo Burckhard. Serie d. Bücher 39. u. 40. Erlangen, 1871-81. [Serie d. Bücher 41 und 42 (Erlangen, 1887-97, and S. d. Bücher 43 u. 44, Erlangen, 1890-96).]
- [Carle, Origini.—Le Origini del diritto romano, per Giuseppe Carle. Torino, 1888.]
- Clark, Early Rom. Law.—Early Roman Law: the Regal Period, by E. C. Clark, LL.D. (Prof. in Cambridge). London, 1872.
- Clark, Pract. Jurisprud.—Practical Jurisprudence: a Comment on Austin, by the same author. Cambridge, 1883.
- Cod.* (or Cod. Just.)—Codex Justiniani Augusti. See infra, p. 410.
- Collatio*.—Lex Dei, sive Mosaicarum et Romanarum legum collatio. See infra, p. 370.
- Collect. libror. jur. Antejust*.—Collectio librorum juris Antejustiniani in usum scholarum. Edid. P. Krueger, Th. Mommsen, G. Studemund. Vol. i. 2nd

- ed. Berlin, 1884 [3rd ed. 1891]; vol. ii. 1st ed. Berlin, 1878 [2nd ed. 1884; vol. iii. 1890].
- Corp. jur. Rom. Antejust.*—Corp. juris Romani Antejustiniani, consilio Böckingii, Bethmann-Hollwegii, Puggaei, aliorumque institutum. Bonn, 1831-44.
- [Cuq (or Cuq, Inst. Jurid.)—Les institutions juridiques des Romains (L'ancien droit), par Edouard Cuq. Paris, 1891.]
- Danz, Gesch. d. r. R.—Lehrbuch der Geschichte d. röm. Rechts, von (†) Dr. H. A. A. Danz. 2nd ed. 2 vols. Leipsic, 1871, 1873.
- Danz, Sacrale Schutz.—Der sacrale Schutz im röm. Rechtsverkehr, by the same author. Jena, 1857.
- Dig.*—Digesta (or Pandectae) Justiniani Augusti. See infra, p. 409.
- Dirksen, Hinterlass. Schrift.—Heinrich Ed. Dirksen's Hinterlassene Schriften zur Kritik u. Auslegung d. Quellen römischer Rechtsgeschichte, herausg. von Dr. Fr. D. Sanio. 2 vols. Leipsic, 1871.
- [Esmein, Mélanges.—Mélanges d'histoire du droit et de critique—droit romain—par A. Esmein. Paris, 1886.]
- Ferrini, Fonti.—Storia delle fonti del diritto romano e della giurisprudenza romana, di Contardo Ferrini. Milan, 1885.
- Fustel de Coulanges.*—La cité antique : étude sur le culte, le droit, les institutions de la Grèce et de Rome. 7th ed. Paris, 1879 [14th ed. 1895].
- Gai.*—Gaii Institutionum libri iv. See infra, p. 308.
- Gaii Epit.*—Gaii Epitomes Institutionum libri ii. In the Lex Romana Visigothorum. See infra, pp. 308, 372.
- Genz.—Das patricische Rom, von Dr. Hermann Genz. Berlin, 1878.
- [Girard (or Girard, Droit romain).—Manuel élémentaire de droit romain, par P. F. Girard. 2nd ed. Paris, 1898.]
- Glück-Burckhard.* See Burckhard-Glück.
- Glück-Leist.*—Glück's Erläuterungen d. Pandekten . . . fortgesetzt von Dr. Burkhard Wilh. Leist. Serie d. Bücher 37 u. 38. (As yet 5 vols.) Erlangen, 1870-79.
- Grünhut's ZSchr.*—Zeitschrift für das privat- und öffentliche-Recht der Gegenwart, unter Mitwirkung d. Wiener jurist. Facultät, herausg. von Dr. C. S. Grünhut. Vienna, 1874 [and subsequently].
- Hölder, Erbrecht.—Beiträge zur Geschichte d. röm. Erbrechts, von Dr. Ed. Hölder. Erlangen, 1881.
- Huschke, Jurisprud. Antejust.—Jurisprudentiae Antejustinianae quae supersunt. In usum max. academ. compos. recens. adnot. (†) Ph. Ed. Huschke. 4th ed., Leipsic, 1879 [5th ed. 1886].
- Huschke, Multa.—Die Multa u. das Sacramentum in ihren verschiedenen Anwendungen, by the same author. Leipsic, 1874.
- Huschke, Nexum.—Ueber das Recht des Nexum u. d. alte röm. Schuld-recht, by the same author. Leipsic, 1846.
- Huschke, Studien.—Studien des römischen Rechts, by the same author. Breslau, 1830.
- Inst.*—Justiniani Institutiones. See infra, p. 407.
- Jhering, Geist.—Geist d. röm. Rechts auf d. verschiedenen Stufen seiner Entwicklung, von Dr. Rudolph von Jhering (Prof. in Göttingen). As yet 4 vols., in several editions. Made use of in the following pages:—Vol. i. 3rd ed. Leips. 1873; vol. ii. 2nd ed. 1866; vol. iii. 2nd ed. 1869; vol. iv. 2nd ed. 1871. There is a French translation by Meulenaere, revised

- by the author, in 4 vols. Paris, 1877-78. [Prof. von Jhering died in 1891. Later editions of his Geist d. r. R. are—vol. i. 5th ed. Leips. 1891; vol. ii. 4th ed. 1888; vol. iii. 4th ed. 1883; vol. iv. 4th ed. 1888.]
- Jhering, Scherz u. Ernst.—Scherz und Ernst in der Jurisprudenz, by the same author. 2nd ed. Leipsic, 1885.
- Jhering, Zweck.—Der Zweck im Recht, by the same author. 2 vols. Leipsic, 1877, 1883.
- [Jobbé-Duval, La procédure civile.—Etudes sur l'histoire de la procédure civile chez les Romains, par E. Jobbé-Duval. Vol. i. Paris, 1896.]
- Jurisprud. Antejust.* See Huschke.
- Karlowa, Röm. CP.—Der römische Civilprozess zur Zeit d. Legisactionen, von Dr. Otto Karlowa (Prof. in Heidelberg). Berlin, 1872.
- Karlowa, Röm. Ehe.—Die Formen d. röm. Ehe u. Manus, by the same author. Bonn, 1868.
- Karlowa, Röm. RG.—Römische Rechtsgeschichte, Erster Band: Staatsrecht u. Rechtsquellen. By the same author. Leipsic, 1885. [Zweiter Band: Privatrecht, Civilprozess, Strafrecht und Strafprozess (Erste und zweite Abteilungen). Leipsic, 1892-93.]
- Keller, Röm. CP.—Der röm. Civilprocess u. die Actionen, von (†) Dr. Fried. Lud. von Keller. 1st ed. 1852; 6th ed., by Wach, Berlin, 1883.
- Kohler, Shakespeare.—Shakespeare vor dem Forum der Jurisprudenz, von Dr. Jos. Kohler. Würzburg, 1884.
- [Kovalewsky, Coutume contemporaine.—Coutume contemporaine et loi ancienne, par Maxime Kovalewsky. Paris, 1898.]
- Krit. VJS.* (or VJSchr.)—Kritische Vierteljahrschrift für Gesetzgebung u. Rechtswissenschaft, herausg. von Windscheid, Bekker, Brinz, Seydel, etc. Munich, 1853 [and subsequently].
- [Krüger, Gesch. der Quellen (or Quellen).—Geschichte der Quellen und Litteratur des römischen Rechts, von P. Krüger. Berlin, 1888.]
- [Krüger, H., Gesch. d. cap. dem.—Geschichte der Capitis Deminutio, von Hugo Krüger. Vol. i. Breslau, 1887. Vol. ii. not yet published.]
- Kuntze, Cursus.—Cursus des röm. Rechts, von Dr. Joh. Emil Kuntze (Prof. in Leipsic). 2nd ed. Leipsic, 1879.
- Kuntze, Excursus.—Excursus über röm. Recht, by the same author. 2nd ed. Leipsic, 1880.
- Lange, Röm. Alt.—Römische Alterthümer, von Dr. Ludwig Lange. 3 vols. Berlin, 1863-71 [3rd ed. 1876-79].
- Leist, Bonor. Poss.—Die Bonorum Possessio: ihre geschichtliche Entwicklung, etc., dargestellt von Dr. Burkhard Wilh. Leist. 2 vols. Göttingen, 1844.
- Leist-Glück.* See Glück-Leist.
- Leist, Graeco-ital. RG.—Graeco-italische Rechtsgeschichte, by the same author. Jena, 1884.
- Lenel, Beiträge.—Beiträge zur Kunde des praetorischen Edicts, von Dr. Otto Lenel. Stuttgart, 1878.
- Lenel, Edict.—Das Edictum Perpetuum: ein Versuch zu dessen Wiederherstellung, by the same author. Leipsic, 1883.
- [Lenel, Palingenesia. See infra, p. 383, n. 21.]
- Maine, Anc. Law.—Ancient Law: its Connection with the Early History of Society, etc., by Sir Henry Sumner Maine (1st ed. 1861), 9th ed. London, 1883 [11th ed. 1887].

- Marculf.*—Marculfi monachi Formularum libri ii. Lut. Par. 1513. (Many editions.)
- Marquardt, Röm. Staatsverwalt.—Römische Staatsverwaltung, von Joachim Marquardt. 4 vols. Leipsic, 1873-82 [2nd ed. 1881-85]. (Vols. iv.-vii. of his and Mommsen's Handbuch d. röm. Alterthümer.) [There is a French translation by Girard, Weiss, etc. 1889-1895.]
- [Mitteis, Reichsrecht.—Reichsrecht und Volksrecht in römischen Kaiserreichs, von L. Mitteis. Leipsic, 1891.]
- Mommsen, Röm. Forsch.—Römische Forschungen, von Th. Mommsen. 2 vols. Berlin, 1864, 1879.
- Mommsen, Röm. Staatsrecht (or SR.)—Römisches Staatsrecht, by the same author. 2 vols. Leipsic, 1871-75, and later editions. Vols. i. and ii. of Marquardt and M.'s Handbuch d. röm. Alterthümer. [Vol. iii. published in two parts, 1887-1888; French trans. by Girard, etc.]
- Moyle, Inst.—Imp. Just. Institution. libri iv. with English commentary, etc., by J. B. Moyle, D.C.L. 2 vols. Oxford, 1883 [3rd ed. 1896].
- Nouv. Rev. Hist.*—Nouvelle Revue historique de droit français et étranger, publ. sous la direction de Laboulaye, de Rozière, Dareste, Gide, Esmein, etc. (Continuation of the Revue de Législation, etc.) Paris, 1877, and subsequently.
- Nov.*—Novellae Constitutiones Justiniani. See infra, p. 410.
- [Padelletti-Cogliolo (or Pad.-Cogl.).—Storia del diritto romano, di G. Padelletti, con note di Pietro Cogliolo. Firenze, 1886.]
- Paul.*—Pauli Sententiae. See infra, p. 311.
- Pernice, Labeo.—Marcus Antistius Labeo: das röm. Privatrecht im ersten Jahrhunderte d. Kaiserzeit, von Dr. Alfred Pernice. [Vol. i. 1873; vol. ii. 1878; 2nd ed. (Abteil. 1), 1895; vol. iii. (Abteil. 1), 1892.]
- Puchta, Inst.—Cursus der Institutionen d. röm. Rechts, von (†) Dr. G. F. Puchta; 8. Aufl., besorgt von Dr. Paul Krüger. 2 vols. Leipsic, 1875. [10th ed. 1893.]
- Rev. de Legislat.*—Revue de Législation ancienne et moderne, publ. sous la direction de Laboulaye, de Rozière, et Dareste. (Continuation of the Revue historique de droit français et étranger.) 6 vols. Paris, 1870-76.
- Richter's Krit. Jahrb.* (or JB.).—Kritische Jahrbücher für deutsche Rechtswissenschaft, herausg. von Dr. Aem. Lud. Richter. 12 vols. Leipsic, 1837-48.
- Rivier, Introd.—Introduction historique au droit romain, par Dr. Alphonse Rivier. 2nd ed. Brussels, 1881.
- Roby, Introd.—An Introduction to the Study of Justinian's Digest, etc., by H. J. Roby, M.A. (formerly Prof. of Jurisprud. in Univ. College, London). Cambridge, 1884.
- Rossbach, Röm. Ehe.—Untersuchungen über die röm. Ehe, von Dr. Aug. Rossbach, Stuttgart, 1853.
- Rudorff, Röm. RG.—Römische Rechtsgeschichte zum akademischen Gebrauch, von (†) Dr. Ad. Fr. Rudorff. 2 vols. Leipsic, 1857-59.
- Savigny, Gesch.—Geschichte d. röm. Rechts im Mittelalter, von Fried. Carl von Savigny. 2nd ed. 7 vols. Heidelberg, 1836-51. [English translation of 1st vol. by Cathcart, 1829.]
- Savigny, System.—System des heutigen röm. Rechts, by the same author. 8 vols. Berlin, 1840-49. [French translation by Guenoux. Paris, 1840-

51. The 8th vol. translated into English by Guthrie. 2nd ed. Edin. 1880.]
- Savigny, Verm. Schr.—Vermischte Schriften, by the same author. 5 vols. Berlin, 1850.
- [Schulin, Lehrbuch.—Lehrbuch der Geschichte des römischen Rechts. Stuttgart, 1889.]
- Sohm, Inst. d. r. R. (or Inst.)—Institutionen des röm. Rechts, von Dr. Rudolph Sohm. Leipsic, 1884 (2nd ed. 1886) [5th ed. 1891. English translation of 4th ed. by Ledlie. Oxford, 1892.]
- Theod. Cod.*—Theodosianus Codex. See infra, p. 367.
- Theoph.*—Theophili Antecessoris Paraphrasis Graeca Institutionum Caesararum. Standard edition that of Reitz, 2 vols. Hag. Com. 1751. New ed. by E. C. Ferrini, 2 vols. Berlin, 1884-97.
- Ulp.*—Ulpiani Fragmenta ex libro singulari Regularum. See infra, p. 310.
- Vat. Frag.*—Vaticana Fragmenta. See infra, p. 370.
- Voigt, Jus nat.—Das jus naturale, aequum et bonum, und das jus gentium der Römer, von Dr. Moritz Voigt. 4 vols. Leipsic, 1856-75.
- Voigt, XII Tafeln.—Die XII Tafeln. Geschichte u. System d. Civil- und Criminal-Rechtes, wie Processes, der XII Tafeln, nebst deren Fragmenten, by the same author. 2 vols. Leipsic, 1883.
- [Voigt, Röm. RG.—Römische Rechtsgeschichte, by the same author. Vol. i. Leipsic, 1892. Vol. ii. not yet published.]
- [Willems, Sénat.—Le sénat de la république romaine, par P. Willems. 2nd ed. Paris, 1885.]
- [Wlassak, Processgesetze.—Römische Processgesetze, von Moriz Wlassak (2 Abteilungen). Vol. i. Leipsic, 1888 ; vol. ii. 1891.]
- Z. d. Sav. Stift. R. A.*—Zeitschrift der Savigny Stiftung für Rechtsgeschichte, herausg. von Bruns, Bekker, v. Roth, Böhlau, Pernice, etc. (Continuation of the Z. f. RG.) Weimar, 1880 [and subsequently]. Each vol. contains a Romanistische and a Germanistische Abteilung, separately paged ; R. A. stands for the former.
- Z. f. gesch. RW.*—Zeitschrift für geschichtliche Rechtswissenschaft, herausg. von F. C. v. Savigny, Göschen, Rudorff, etc. 15 vols. Berlin, 1815-50.
- Z. f. RG.*—Zeitschrift für Rechtsgeschichte, herausg. von Rudorff, Bruns, v. Roth, etc. 13 vols. Weimar, 1861-78.
- Z. f. vergl. RW.*—Zeitschrift für vergleichende Rechtswissenschaft, herausg. von Bernhöft, Cohn, Kohler, etc. Stuttgart, 1878 [and subsequently].

PART I
THE REGAL PERIOD

PART I

THE REGAL PERIOD¹

CHAPTER I

SOCIAL AND POLITICAL CONDITION OF ROME AND ITS POPULATION DOWN TO THE TIME OF SERVIUS TULLIUS

SECTION 1.—GENESIS OF THE ROMAN STATE

THE union of the Latin, Sabine, and, to a small extent, Etruscan bands that, as conquerors or conquered, old settlers or new immigrants, together constituted the first elements of the Roman people, did not necessarily involve contemporaneous adoption of identical institutions or identical notions of law. Though descended from the same Indo-European stock, and inheriting the same primitive ideas about religion and government, yet those ideas must have been more or less modified in the course of centuries of separate and independent development.² It is said that the characteristic of the Latin race was its sense of the importance of discipline, and the homage it paid to power and might; that of the Sabines, their religious feeling and their reverence for the gods; that of the Etruscans, their subservience to forms and ceremonies in matters both divine and human. Corresponding influences are very manifest in the growth of Rome's early public institutions, civil, military, and religious. It does not seem too much to say that they are traceable also in the institutions of the private law. The patria potestas, with the father's power of life and death over his children; the manus and the husband's power over his wife; the doctrine that those things chiefly which a man entitled to call his own which he had taken by the strength of his arm;³ the right which a creditor had of apprehending and imprisoning his defaulting debtor, and, if need were, reducing him to slavery,—all these seem to point to a persuasion that might made right. The religious marriage ceremony, and the recognition of the wife as mistress of the household and participant in its sacred offices as well as its domestic cares; the family council of kinsmen, maternal as well as paternal, who advised the paterfamilias in the exercise of the domestic jurisdiction; the practice of adoption, on purpose to prevent the extinction of a family and deprivation of its deceased members of the prayers and sacrifices necessary for the repose of their souls,—these seem to have flowed from a different order of ideas, and to bear evidence of Sabine descent. Etruscan influence could make itself felt only at a later date; but to it may possibly be attributed the strict regard that came to be required to the observance of ceremonials and words of style

¹ See especially Puchta, Cursus der Institutionen d. röm. Rechts (1st ed. Leipsic, 1841), 8th ed. by Krüger, Leipsic, 1875, vol. i. §§ 36-50; Clark, Early Roman Law: Regal Period, London, 1872; Genz, Das Patricische Rom, Berlin, 1878; Kuntze, Cursus der Institutionen, 2nd ed. Leipsic, 1879, §§ 47-68; Bernhöft, Staat und Recht der röm. Königszeit im Verhältniss zu verwandten Rechten, Stuttgart, 1882. [Among the more recent treatises attempting to throw light on this period may be specially mentioned Carle, Le origini del diritto romano, Turin, 1888; Padelletti-Cogliolo, Storia del diritto romano, Florence, 1886; Cuq, Institutions juridiques des Romains (L'ancien droit), Paris, 1891. As to the author's arrangement of the subject matter into periods, see Appendix a, p. 421.]

² The Aryan origin of several of the most important religious notions and public and private institutions of early Rome, and their resemblance to corresponding ones in India and Greece, have been shown by Fustel de Coulanges, La cité antique (1st ed. Paris, 1857), 7th ed. 1879; Sir H. S. Maine, Ancient Law (1st ed. London, 1862), 9th ed. 1883; Bernhöft, as above; Leist, Graeco-italische Rechtsgeschichte, Jena, 1884. [Add Jhering, Vorgeschichte der Indoeuropäer, 1894; Bernhöft, "Zur Geschichte des Europäischen Familienrechts," ZSchr. f. vergl. Rechtsw. vol. viii. (1889), p. 1 sq., p. 161 sq. and p. 384 sq.]

³ "Maxime sua esse credebant quae ex hostibus cepissent" (Gai. iv. 16)—a doctrine rather pre-Roman than Roman. [On this text see Jhering, Vorgesch. d. Indoeurop. p. 399.]

in the more important transactions both of public and private life.⁴

While the result of the union of Latins and Sabines was that regulations were at once adopted which should apply to their public life as a united people, yet it is not only conceivable but probable that, as regarded the private relations of its members, each tribe continued for a time to accord a preference to its own ideas and traditions of right and law, and that the amalgamation was a gradual process, partly silent, partly due to regal or pontifical intervention. Just as there is little reason to believe in any nicely organised constitution down at least to the time of the Servian reforms, so is there little reason to believe in the existence of any very definite system of private law. Mixed races must, in minor matters at least, have made mixed customs and usages; and, though there is lack of material for establishing with certainty the coexistence of different systems among different branches of the population, yet it is difficult to resist the conviction that something at all events of the dualism⁵ so marked in many of Rome's

⁴ [Too much importance must not be attached to this theory of a descent from three stocks. The institutions here attributed to Sabine and Etruscan influence are, as has been pointed out, common to peoples of Greek-Italian stock: Carle, Origini d. d. r. p. 304; cf. Cuq, Inst. Jurid. pp. 26-29; Pad.-Cogl. Storia, pp. 25-28; Willems, Le Sénat de la république romaine, Paris, 1885, p. 7 sq. In his most recent work Voigt traces the characteristics of the early Roman law to a threefold influence, expressing the ethnographical descent of the people, viz. (1) an Indo-Germanic, (2) an Italic, and (3) the union of those groups which under Romulus made up the original Roman State, to wit, Latins, Sabines, and Aborigines. See Voigt, Röm. Rechtsgeschichte (Leipsic, 1892), vol. i. p. 12.]

⁵ Jhering, Geist, vol. i. § 19 (while tracing it to another source), has thus tabulated some of its more prominent manifestations:—

	Religious System.	Profane System.
	Fas.	Jus, vis.
Symbol	Aqua et ignis.	Hasta (quiris), manus.
Representative . .	Numa.	Romulus.
Marriage	Confarreatio (fax, aqua et ignis).	Coemptio (hasta coelibaris).
Contract	Oath, sacramentum, sponsio, foedus.	Public guarantee, mancipatio, nexum.
Procedure	Legis actio sacramento.	Private justice, vindicatio, manus injectio, etc.
Criminal law . . .	Homo sacer.	Vindicta publica.
	Pœna , a means of expiation.	Pœna , a means of reparation.

early institutions may be accounted for by ethnical considerations.⁶

SECTION 2.—THE PATRICIANS¹

There was part of the law of Rome that got the distinctive name of jus Quiritium, the law of the Spearman. The Quirites were the members of the gentile houses, organised in their curies, primarily for military, and secondarily for political purposes. They alone of the settlers around the urbs quadrata ranked as citizens, down at least to the time of Servius Tullius. They alone could consult the gods through the medium of auspicia, and participate in the services offered to the tutelary deities of Rome. From their number the king drew his council of elders, and they alone could take part in the curiate comitia, the assembly of the warriors.² They alone could contract a lawful marriage and make a testament; in a word, it was they alone that were entitled directly to the benefit of Rome's peculiar institutions.

But those prerogatives of the patrician burgesses were theirs as members of the gentile houses. Patrician Rome was a federation of gentes or clans; the clans aggregations of families, bearing a common name, and theoretically at least tracing their descent from a common ancestor.³ Whether or not the traditional account of the numerical proportion of families to clans and of clans to curies have any substantial historical foundation, and whatever may be the explanation of the method by which the symmetry on which the old

⁶ [See criticism of this theory of a dualism in Voigt, Röm. RG. p. 13 sq.]

¹ Jhering, Geist, vol. i. § 14; Genz, as above, p. 1 sq.; Voigt, XII Tafeln, vol. ii. §§ 169, 170; [Mommsen, Röm. Staatsrecht, iii. p. 13 sq.; Carle, Origini, p. 17 sq.]

² [See infra, pp. 48 and 64.]

³ [On the gens and gentiles see Carle, Origini, p. 35 sq.; Mommsen, SR. iii. p. 9 sq.; Cuq, Inst. Jurid. pp. 30-36, 70 sq.; Bloch, Origines du sénat romain, p. 105 sq. Recent writers are agreed in the main that the gens was originally just the familia in the widest sense of that term, or aggregation of familias in a narrower sense. The term "clan" is the nearest equivalent in English, and suggests a correspondence with the Celtic and other primitive clans, and there are many analogies—for example, as regards the use of a common name and supposed descent from a common ancestor. See Kovalewsky, Coutume contemporaine et loi ancienne, Paris, 1893. The English word "house," as we have it in the expression "the great houses," may be used as a convenient translation of gens.]

writers dwell with so much complacency was attained, it is beyond doubt that the gentile organisation was common to the two races at least that contributed most largely to the citizenship of Rome, and that it was made the basis of the new arrangements. Federation necessitated the appointment of a common chieftain, and common institutions, religious, military, political, and judicial. But it was long before these displaced entirely the separate institutions of the federated gentes. Every clan had its own cult, peculiar to its own members; this was the universal bond of association in those early times. It had its common property (p. 38) and its common burial-place. It must have had some common council or assembly; for we read not only of special gentile customs, but of gentile statutes and decrees. Instances are on record of wars waged by individual gentes; so they must have had the right to require military service alike from their gentiles and gentilicii.⁴ Widows and orphans of deceased clansmen were under the guardianship of the gens, or of some particular member of it to whom the trust was specially confided. If a clansman left no heirs, his property passed to his fellow-gentiles. Over the morals of its members the gens exercised supervision and discipline; interfering to prevent prodigality and improvidence, restraining abuses of the domestic authority, and visiting with censure, and probably in grave cases with punishment, any breach of faith or other dishonourable conduct.⁵ It is said that there is no evidence of the exercise by it of any proper jurisdiction; but, in the presence of all those other powers that it undoubtedly possessed, it is difficult to suppose that, within its own limits, it was not constantly called upon, through the medium of its chief, to act the part of peacemaker and arbiter. Finally, its members were always entitled to rely upon its assistance, to have maintenance when indigent, to be ransomed from captivity, to be upheld in their just disputes and quarrels, to be avenged when killed or injured.

⁴ It was the heads of the constituent families of a gens that were properly gentiles; the dependant members of those families and the clients attached to them were only gentilicii. [Cf. Karlowa, Röm. RG. i. pp. 84, 85.]

⁵ [See e.g. Livy, vi. 20, § 14; Val. Max. iii. 5, 1.]

How all this was worked out in detail it is impossible to say. We do not know even whether the chieftainship or presidency of a clan was hereditary or elective, and, if the latter, whether for life or for a shorter term. Probably in this, as well as in other matters, there was no uniform practice. But in the gentile system there was undoubtedly an imperium in imperio that must for two or three centuries have exercised a powerful influence on the private law, and that must not be lost sight of in noting the conditions that accelerated or retarded its progress.⁶

SECTION 3.—THE CLIENTS¹

It was very early in its history that Rome gave promise of its future eminence. Successful in one petty war after another, it deprived many small communities of their independent existence, leaving their members bereft alike of their religion, their territory, and their means of existence. These had to turn elsewhere for protection, and in large numbers they sought it from their conquerors. To many others, both voluntary immigrants and refugees from other cities, the new settlement proved a centre of attraction. It was quite ready to receive them; but as subjects only—not as citizens. Following a custom familiar to both Latins and Sabines, the newcomers invoked the protection of the heads of patrician families of repute, to whom they attached themselves as free vassals. The relationship was known as that of patron and client. It made the latter an independent member of his patron's gens, and thus indirectly brought him into relation to the state. But it was to his individual patron that he looked primarily for support and maintenance, and to him that his allegiance and service were due in the first instance. Dionysius describes the relation between them as of the most sacred character, the duty the patron owed to his client coming next in order to that he owed to his children and his wards.² He had to provide his vassal with all that was necessary for his sustenance and that of his wife and children; and, as private holdings increased in extent, it was not unusual for the patron or his gens to give a client during pleasure a plot of land to cultivate for himself. The patron had, moreover, to assist his client in his transactions with third parties, obtain redress for him for his injuries, and represent him before the tribunals when he became involved in litigation. The client, on the other hand, had to maintain his patron's interests by every means in his power. What Dionysius says of his contributing to endow his patron's daughters, and the like, obviously refers to an advanced period of the history of Rome, when it sometimes happened that the position of parties, so far as wealth was concerned, was reversed; for the relation was hereditary on both sides; and there may have been instances of families that had risen to good social position and ample fortune recognising at the distance of many generations that they were still clients of patrician houses in embarrassed circumstances, and rendering them assistance as in duty bound. But in the regal period the advantage must have been chiefly on the side of the client, who, without becoming a citizen, obtained directly the protection of the patron and his clan, and indirectly that of the state.

⁶ It deserves to be kept in mind that, with a very few exceptions, the individual patrician gentes were not numerically strong. Whatever may be the explanation, it seems to be the fact that, notwithstanding the admission to their ranks of the principal Alban families by Tullus Hostilius, and the creation of the minores gentes by the elder Tarquin, they died out so rapidly that by the end of the regal period the original three hundred had been reduced by more than a half (see Genz, l.c. p. 9 sq.). The reported great strength of the Tarquinian and Claudian gentes was due to their clients; that of the Fabian may have been due to the rule in observance amongst them prohibiting the exposure of infants, and requiring all their men to marry.

¹ See Mommsen, "Die röm. Clientel," in his Röm. Forsch. vol. ii. p. 355 sq.; Voigt, "Ueber die Clientel u. die Libertinität," in the Berichte d. phil.-hist. Classe d. K. Sächs. Gesellsch. d. Wissensch. 1878, pp. 147-219; Marquardt, Privatleben d. Römer (Leipsic, 1879), p. 196 sq.; Voigt, XII Tafeln, vol. ii. pp. 667-679; [Mommsen, SR. iii. p. 63 sq.; Cuq, Inst. Jurid. pp. 33-36; Carle, Origini, p. 46 sq.]

SECTION 4.—THE PLEBEIANS

The plebs included all those freemen who, being neither

² [As to the rule of the XII Tables "Patronus si clienti fraudem faxit sacer esto," which is attributed by Dionysius to Romulus, see Voigt, Leges Regiae p. 574 sq.; Mommsen, SR. iii. 82 n.]

patrician citizens nor clients, had settled in Rome as permanent residents, hoping to make a living within her bounds, and enjoy de facto at least the benefit of her institutions. The commencement of this body, as distinct from that of the clients, is usually associated with the overthrow of Alba; the idea being that those of its population who were not of sufficient distinction to be admitted into the ranks of the patriciate, and yet were too independent to brook submission to a private patron, put themselves under the direct protection of the sovereign, and thus, as Cicero says,—though he no doubt meant the words only in a popular sense,—became royal clients. Their number is said to have been largely augmented in the ensuing reign by the conquest of many Latin towns that had broken the treaty made with them after the fall of Alba, and the removal of their inhabitants to Rome.¹ It is very doubtful, however, whether it be possible to specify any particular settlement as the origin of the plebs. It seems more consistent with history to regard them as a heterogeneous mass of non-gentile freemen, small probably in numbers at first, but augmenting with ever-greater rapidity, who had of choice or compulsion made Rome their domicile, but declined to subject themselves to a patron. Some may have been on the spot when Rome was founded, others were voluntary immigrants in pursuit of trade; some may have been refugees, exiles from earlier homes because of their misdeeds; many had been driven to seek their new shelter by the hard fate of war, which had subverted their native cities and left them godless, landless, and houseless; while in course of time there were accessions to their numbers from amongst the descendants of clients, who either were disinclined to continue their allegiance, or were relieved from it by the extinction of their patronal gentes.

That there was any general cohesion amongst them before the time of Servius there is not the slightest reason to believe. They were of different races, settling in Rome from different motives, practising in many matters different customs. If Livy be right in the statement he makes with every appearance of assurance that the worship of Hercules at the ara maxima was Greek, we may almost infer that among the earliest representatives of this class of unattached non-citizen subjects may have been some of Hellenic descent. The existence at a very early date of a vicus Tuscus in the valley below the Palatine speaks of the presence of a contingent from Etruria. The bulk of them, however, were undoubtedly Latins, with traditions and customs much the same as those of the greater number of the patrician houses; and this it was that in time caused the triumph of Latinism, and the predominance of the masterful spirit in the jus Quiritium.

¹ [Cf. Cuij, Inst. Jurid. p. 35 and n. 1, where an enumeration is given of cities conquered by the first four kings of Rome.]

History attributes to Numa the distribution of the artisans and craftsmen into guilds, eight or nine in number (collegia opificum).² In view of the accounts we have of later date as to the relations that subsisted between guild brethren, this action of Numa's is of special interest and significance. It was the creation of associations among the plebeians that to some extent compensated for the absence among them of gentile organisation. Those associations did not affect their position politically, but they conferred upon them advantages in private life which otherwise they would not have enjoyed. They got a common cult, and possibly a common burial-place, with a master and his council to manage their affairs, consolidate customs, and arrange disputes. Between the brethren there was a bond, not indeed of descent, real or fictitious, from a common ancestor, but of close alliance and interdependence, each owing duty to the other similar to what might be claimed from him by a ward, a guest, or a kinsman.³

² Plut. Numa, 17. Mommsen, in his treatise De collegiis et sodaliciis Romanorum (Kiliae, 1848), spoke of this as a fable; but in his history he accepts it as fact to this extent,—that the guilds must have been established in the earliest years of the City.

³ See in Mommsen, De collegiis, p. 8, various extracts from Cicero illustrating the closeness of the relationship between sodales. M. Albert Gérard, in his Étude sur les corporations ouvrières à Rome (Montbéliard, 1884), p. 4, is of opinion that the guilds were no invention of Numa's, but only a reproduction by him in Rome of an institution already well known elsewhere. There is a passage in Livy (iv. 9) in which, speaking of the revolt in 311 U.C. of the plebs of Ardea against the optimates, he says that, after the former had withdrawn from the city, the opifices resolved to side with them in hope of plunder; his language suggests that the craftsmen had an independent organisation, and were to some

The Latin contingents that helped to swell the ranks of the plebeians in the reigns of Numa's immediate successors were more addicted to rural pursuits than to trade, but they seem to have been treated by the sovereign in the same indulgent spirit as the craftsmen had been previously. Not that they were incorporated in any way; that in their case was not so necessary as in that of the traders, and might politically have been inexpedient. But they got—what to them was of most importance—allotments of lands for culture, and a weekly market was established in Rome, at which they might dispose of their produce. The accounts are conflicting as to the tenure on which they held their farms; but whatever may have been the case originally, and whether the lands they occupied had been derived from the king individually or from the state, and whether acquired by assignation or purchase, it is clear that by the time of Servius they were freeholders; for they were enrolled in his "classes" in large numbers, and the qualification was ownership of real estate on quiritarian title. It is in view of this that some authorities are disposed to regard the plebeians, even before the Servian reforms, as half-fledged citizens—cives sine suffragio; but the application to them of such an epithet seems to put their right too high. Admitted that they had the right to hold property both movable and immovable, to transfer it by quiritarian modes of conveyance, and to have the protection for it of the tribunals, yet not only had they no share in the government of the city, but they were denied any participation in its religion. As men to whom the auspicia were incompetent, their inter-marriage with the gentile houses was out of the question; while by the more unbending of the patricians their unions amongst themselves were often decried as wanting in the effects of lawful marriage, because unhallowed by the religious ceremony to which the higher order was accustomed (p. 34). Gentes they had none during the first four centuries of Rome,—a fact which placed them at a disadvantage in the matter of inheritance and guardianship (§§ 9, 11); but there are extent a separate class. [On collegia as associations for purposes of trade, and sodalitates as associations for purposes of religion (e.g. the fratres Arvales, the Salii), see Cuq, p. 49; Karlowa, Röm. RG. ii. pp. 59-69.]

indications that for certain purposes the circle of near kinsfolk and connections by marriage held amongst the plebeians the same place that fellow-gentiles did amongst the patricians (p. 35).⁴

⁴ [On the plebeians, about whose origin there are many divergent theories, almost wholly conjectural, see Mommsen, SR. III. i. pp. 66-68, and pp. 130-141. In Mommsen's view there was originally no body of plebeians distinct from the clientes; all non-patricians were clients attached to patrician houses; it was only gradually that the order of plebeians arose, owing mainly to the fact of clientage falling into disuse. See also Cuq, p. 43 sq.; Bloch, Origines du sénat romain, p. 255 sq.; Willems, Sénat, pp. 1-19; Karlowa, Röm. RG. i. p. 62, gives reasons for dissenting from Mommsen's view.]

CHAPTER II

REGULATIVES OF PUBLIC AND PRIVATE ORDER

SECTION 5.—ABSENCE OF ANY DEFINITE SYSTEM OF LAW

POMPONIUS,¹ who was a contemporary of Gaius's, describes the state of the law in regal Rome as follows:—

In the early years of our City the people lived for a time without actual statute or any definite law; in everything they were subject to the uncontrolled power (manus) of the kings. But it is related that after the City had grown somewhat, Romulus divided the populace into thirty parts, which he called curiae, because it was in accordance with the opinions expressed by them that he managed the guardianship of the state (reipublicae curam per sententias earum expediebat). He himself carried some enactments through the curiate assembly; so did the subsequent kings; all of which are extant in the collection of Sextus Papirius, who was one of the leading citizens in the time of Tarquin the Proud, the son of Demaratus of Corinth. His book bears the name of jus civile Papirianum; not because Papirius contributed to it anything of his own, but because the previously isolated laws it contains were arranged by him in a sort of order. On the expulsion of the kings by the Junian law (lege tribunicia) all those royal laws fell aside, and the people once more began to be governed by undefined law and usage, rather than by legislative enactment. This state of matters lasted for about twenty years.

Such is the account of the beginnings of Roman law, which Justinian places in the forefront of the chief part of the Corpus Juris. It abounds in historical errors; yet is interesting as the record of what a jurist of the time of the Antonines believed to be fact, and which Justinian nearly 400 years later was content to accept as accurate. The only part of it that can be received without reserve is the statement that originally the law was far from definite. It may at once be admitted also that much of what there was fell short of the conditions which philosophical jurists hold essential to the conception of law. There was no single sovereign authority that set it; its quality was not always the same; its sanctions were often such as would be resented by modern jurisprudence; and in many cases their enforcement was the care of individuals rather than of the state. But, whether in the shape of fas or jus, or merely precepts of boni mores, there were rules in very considerable number for defining men's rights and preventing their infringement,—regulatives, in a word, of public and private order, out of which was to be evolved in the course of centuries the matured jurisprudence of the Corpus Juris Civilis.

¹ Pomp. lib. sing. Enchiridii, in Dig. i. 2, fr. 2, §§ 1-3.

SECTION 6.—FAS¹

While the very frequent references to fas as distinct from jus bear testimony to its importance as one of the factors of early Roman law, yet it is extremely difficult to define its nature and limits. This may to some extent be accounted for by the fact that much of what was originally within its domain, once it had come to be enforced by secular tribunals, and thus had the sanction of human authority, was no longer distinguishable from jus; while it may be that others of its behests, once pontifical punishments for their contravention had gone into desuetude, sank to nothing higher than precepts of boni mores.²

By fas was understood the will of the gods,—the laws given by heaven for men on earth.³ Among a people that

¹ Jhering, Geist, vol. i. §§ 18, 18a; Voigt, XII Tafeln, vol. i. §§ 13, 46. [Cf. Carle, Origini, p. 93; Esmarch, Röm. Rechtsgesch. 3rd ed. 1888, § 11.]

² [An illustration of this may be found in the old action de sponsu for enforcement of sponsalia: see Bourcart, trad. Muirhead, p. 600.]

³ Isid. Orig. v. 2,—“Fas lex divina, jus lex humana est ;” Serv. ad Georg. i. 269,—“Fas et jura sinunt, i.e. divina humanaque jura permittunt; nam ad religionem fas, ad homines jura pertinent.” These definitions are comparatively modern, and hardly express the idea. Ausonius identifies Fas and Themis,—“Prima Deum Fas, quae Themis est Graiis.” [Technopaeg. Edyll. xii. 343.] Certainly fas was sometimes personified, especially in the formulae employed by the fetials, e.g. Liv. i. 32. See Bréal, “Sur l'origine des mots désignant le droit en Latin,” Nouv. Rev. Hist. vol. vii. (1883), p. 607 sq.

believed so profoundly as did those early Romans that in the gods they lived and moved and had their being, it could not fail to be regarded with the utmost consideration, and to exercise an influence more potent than any merely human rules. So far as can be gathered from the scattered references to it, it occupied a higher place and had a wider range than these last.⁴ There were but few of its commands, prohibitions, or precepts that were addressed to men as citizens of any particular state; all mankind came within its scope. It forbade that a war should be undertaken without the prescribed fetial ceremonial; otherwise it was not a purum piumque bellum, but an act of violence by the invaders, which their gods had not sanctioned, against others who were equally god-protected. It required that faith should be kept even with an enemy when a promise had been made to him under sanction of an oath. It enjoined hospitality to foreigners, because the stranger guest was presumed, equally with his entertainer, to be an object of solicitude to a higher power. It punished murder, for it was the taking of a god-given life; the sale of a wife by her husband, for she had become his partner in all things human and divine; the lifting of a hand against a parent, for it was subversive of the first bond of society and religion,—the reverence due by a child to those to whom he owed his existence; incestuous connections, for they defiled the altar; the false oath and the broken vow, for they were an insult to the divinities invoked. To displace a boundary or a landmark was a most heinous offence, not so much because the act was provocative of feud, as because the march-stone itself, as the guarantee of peaceful neighbourhood, was especially under the guardianship of the gods. No locus sacer whatever could be interfered with without a breach of the fas; and on a day that the ministers of religion had declared holy⁵ it was a sin for a magistrate to exercise any branch of his jurisdiction in which he required to pronounce one of the three solemn words of style—do, dico, addico.⁶

⁴ Fas sometimes allowed what jus forbade,—“transire per alienum fas est, jus non est” (Isid. Orig. v. 2, 2, in Bruns, p. 326 [6th ed. ii. p. 88]).

⁵ [Dies nefasti mean not so much holy as unlawful days. See Marquardt, Röm. Staatsverwalt. iii. p. 291, on the distinction between dies fasti, nefasti, intercisi, and comitiales; also Voigt, XII Tafeln, i. p. 517; Girard, p. 951.]

To give an answer to the question, How were those rules of the fas enforced? is beset with difficulties. Breach of any of them rendered the offender impius; but his sin was sometimes expiable, sometimes not. Expiation required a peace-offering to the offended deity (piacularis hostia), accompanied possibly with satisfaction to any injured third party. What happened in consequence of an inexpiable breach of the fas depended apparently on circumstances. Take the case of the perjurer. He had solemnly invoked the wrath of heaven upon himself and all that belonged to him in the event of his knowingly swearing falsely. It was for the pontiff to say whether he had done so, or whether his offence was attributable to his imprudence and therefore expiable. If it was not, what then? Did the pontiffs content themselves with their finding, abstaining from any express sentence, and leaving the party injured to be the instrument of the irate deity in punishing the offender by reprisals?⁷ Or did they formally excommunicate the sinner, declaring him sacer, i.e. devoting him to the infernal gods, and forfeiting his estate to the service of the deity he had primarily offended? This was expressly the penalty of several of the contraventions referred to above,—selling a wife, striking a parent, removing a landmark, etc. (pp. 27 and 53). The homo sacer was in every sense of the word an outcast,—one with whom it was pollution to associate, who dared take no part in any of the institutions of the state, civil or religious, whose life the gods would not accept as a sacrifice, but whom, nevertheless, any one might put to death with impunity as no longer god-protected.⁸ Those precepts of the fas, therefore, were not mere exhortations to a blameless life, but closely approached to laws, whose violation was visited with punishments none the less effective that they were religious rather than civil.

⁶ The above are illustrations merely, and not intended as an exhaustive enumeration of what fell within the fas. Such an enumeration is impossible. Cicero speaks of the adoption of the elder by the younger as not only contra naturam but contra fas; and Paul uses the same expression in speaking of the purchase of a freeman to take effect in the event of his becoming a slave. It is doubtful, however, whether they meant more than that the acts they were condemning were contrary to the unwritten law of nature. The same dubiety arises in other instances of the employment of the word by the later writers.

⁷ This is the view of Danz, Sacrale Schutz, p. 47 sq. He lays considerable stress on the words of Livy (v. 11),—"Numquam deos ipsos admovere nocentibus manus; satis esse, si occasione ulciscendi laesos arment."

SECTION 7.—JUS

There is no word in the vocabulary of Roman law that had more meanings than jus,—"law" as the rule of action (norma agendi), "right" as the faculty conferred by the rule (facultas agendi), "right" as opposed to wrong, "strict law" as opposed to equity, "justice" as in the phrase jus reddere (to dispense justice), "the place where justice was dispensed," as in the phrase in jus vocatio, and so on.¹ It can admit of little doubt that the first of these was the original idea the word conveyed; and it has been well said that if we can ascertain the meaning of the name jus we shall thus have an unconscious definition of what the Romans understood by law.² The older form of it was jous; and Ennius is said to have regarded it as connected with Jove.³ Some modern authorities entertain the same opinion.⁴ Recent philology derives it from the Sanscrit ju, to join, bind, or unite; from which some deduce as the signification of jus "that which binds," "the bond of society," others "that which is regular, orderly, or fitting."⁵ The latest inquirer (M. Bréal) identifies it with the jos, jaos, or jaus of the Vedas, and the jaes of the Zend-Avesta,—words whose exact meaning is controverted, but which he interprets as "the divine will."⁶ Jubeo is generally allowed to be a contraction of jus hibeo, hold or take as jus. If Bréal's definition can be adopted we ⁸ Festus, v. Sacer (Bruns, p. 288). See § 12, notes 14, 15.

¹ See Dig. i. 1, frs. 11, 12.

² Clark, Pract. Jurisprud. p. 14.

³ Apuleius, De deo Socratis, 5.

⁴ E.g. Lasaulx, Ueber den Eid bei den Römern, Würzburg, 1844, p. 9; Huschke, Das alte römische Jahr, Breslau, 1869, p. 214.

⁵ See references in Clark's Pract. Jurisprud. pp. 16-20. He himself adopts the latter definition.

⁶ Bréal (as in § 6, note 2), p. 606. [Schmidt in Mommsen, SR. iii. p. 310, n. 1, 2.]

obtain a very significant interpretation of the words addressed by the presiding magistrate to the assembled comitia in asking them whether they assented to a law proposed by him, — Velitis, jubeatis, Quirites, etc., "Is it your pleasure, Quirites, and do you hold it as the divine will, that," and so on. As legislation by the comitia of the curies and centuries was regarded as a divine office, and their vote might be nullified by the fathers on the ground that there had been a defect in the auspicia, and the will of the gods consequently not clearly ascertained, this explanation of Bréal's seems not without support,—vox populi vox dei. If it be right, then the only difference between fas and jus was this,—that the will of the gods, which both embodied, was in the one declared by inspired and in the other by merely human agency.⁷

This jus might be the result either of traditional and inveterate custom (jus moribus constitutum) or of statute (lex).⁸ We look in vain for any legislative enactment establishing such an institution, for example, as the patria potestas, or fixing the early rules of succession on death. Statute may have regulated some of their details; but they had taken shape and consistency before Rome had its beginnings. It can well be believed, however, that in the outset the customs in observance may have been far from uniform,—that not only those of the different races but those also of the different gentes may at first have varied in some respects, but undergoing a gradual approximation, and in course of time con-

⁷ [Fas and jus are frequently contrasted by non-legal writers, e.g. Liv. vii. 31; Virg. Aen. ii. 157.]

⁸ There is controversy about the etymology of the word lex. It was used by the jurists in two distinct senses—(1) as meaning a comitial enactment (Gai. i. 3), and hence occasionally called lex publica (Gai. ii. 104, iii. 174) [Cf. Gellius, x. 20, 2]; (2) as meaning an obligation, restriction, condition, declaration, or what not, expressly incorporated in a private deed (lex privata), as in the phrases lex mancipii, lex contractus, lex testamenti, etc. Its most likely derivation is from λέγειν, to say or to speak. The lex publica was originally always put to and voted by the comitia by word of mouth; and the XII Tables, in declaring the binding effect of a lex privata when engrafted on a conveyance or contract per aes et libram (§ 13), use in reference to it the phrase uti lingua nuncupassit (Festus, v. Nuncupata, Bruns, p. 23). [Cf. Voigt, Röm. RG. i. p. 21. Mommsen, SR. iii. pp. 308-310 and notes. In later juristic usage lex had various other meanings than the above, e.g. an imperial constitution. See also Soltau, Gültigkeit der Plebiscite (Berlin, 1884), p. 90 sq.]

solidating into a general jus Quiritium.⁹ That the bulk of the law was customary is universally admitted. But Pomponius speaks of certain laws enacted by the comitia of the curies, which he calls leges regiae. The opinion of the best authorities is that it is a mistake to attribute those so-called "royal laws"¹⁰ to that assembly. According to the testimony of the old writers it had very little share in the work of legislation. Romulus jura dedit in his own right,—not jura tulit. As Bernhöft remarks, we read not a word of the co-operation of the people when he united the old Romans and Sabines, when Numa regulated the cult, when Tullus Hostilius admitted the Alban gentes to the patriciate and reorganised the army, when Ancus Marcius formulated the fetial law, when the elder Tarquin augmented the senate, or when Servius Tullius created the centuries. Tarquin's attempt to double the strength of each century of the cavalry had to be abandoned; but that was because it had been fixed by Romulus auspicatim, and his proposal therefore an interference with divine arrangements; he got over the difficulty by doubling the centuries themselves. When the king did consult the comitia it was in minor matters of a semi-private nature, and probably as matter of policy,—the sanctioning of testaments, adrogations, and the like.¹¹ Mommsen is probably near the mark when he describes the leges regiae as mostly rules of the fas, which were of interest not merely for the pontiffs but for the public,—with which it was of importance the latter should be acquainted, that they might know the risks they incurred from their contravention.¹² Instead of remaining buried in the pontifical books, along with the more esoteric rules of ritual, etc., they were published in some form or other; but whether by the kings whose names they bear, or by the pontiffs under their direction, can only be matter of speculation. It is not to be assumed that there was no legislation beyond this; some of the laws of which we have record were of a different character.¹³ But on the whole it seems beyond doubt that it was custom rather than statute that was the main factor of the jus of the regal period.¹⁴ //

⁹ Yet without necessarily extinguishing particular customs. E.g. the common law conferred upon a parent a qualified right to abandon his offspring, while the gens Fabia required its members to rear all their children (Dion. ix. 22). "There can be no community without rules,—law in the widest sense; family, clan, etc., all must have them; but even when the state is reached, state law does not necessarily overwhelm the rules of the lesser communities" (Bekker, Z. f. vergleich. R. W. vol. i. p. 109).

¹⁰ The most recent and comprehensive treatise on the subject of the so-called Royal Laws, and containing references to the earlier literature, is that of Voigt, Ueber die Leges Regiae, Leipzig, 1876, 1877 (republished from the Transactions of the Saxon Academy). A collection of them from Livy, Dionysius, Plutarch, Servius, Macrobius, etc., will be found in Bruns, p. 1 sq. Of the Jus Papirianum referred to by Pomponius no remains are extant; but Paul (Dig. l. 16, fr. 144) mentions incidentally that it was commented by one Granius Flaccus (who was of the time of Julius Caesar). Marliani's Laws of Romulus, in his Topographia urbis Romae, lib. 2, cap. 8 (Graevii Thes. vol. iii. p. 86 sq.), are now on all hands regarded as without authenticity. [Cuq, p. 6 and p. 55 sq.; Voigt, Röm. RG. i. p. 16; Krüger, Gesch. der Quellen, § 1.]

¹¹ Bernhöft, Staat u. Recht, pp. 116, 117. See also Karlowa, Röm. RG. i. pp. 52, 53.

SECTION 8.—BONI MORES

As something different from the jus moribus constitutum mention must be made of boni mores as one of the regulatives of public and private order.¹ Part of what fell within their sphere might also be expressly regulated by fas or jus; but there was much also that was only gradually brought within the domain of these last, and even down to the end of the republic not a little that remained solely under the guardianship of the family tribunal or the censor's regimen morum. Its function was twofold: for sometimes it operated in restraint of law by condemning—though it could not prevent—the ruthless and unnecessary exercise of legal right, as, for

¹² Mommsen, Römisches Staatsrecht, vol. ii. 1, p. 41. Clark (Pract. Jurisprud. p. 284) thinks that the pontiffs, as “the repositories of those primeval customs which formed the first Roman law,” threw “into the form of general rules such applications of general custom and opinion as required declaration or penal enforcement.”

¹³ [Cuq, Inst. Jurid. p. 57 sq. describes the leges regiae as the work of the kings acting as legislative interpreters of the law under the inspiration of the gods, in matters relating to fas, as contrasted with leges curiatae which were proper legislative enactments.]

¹⁴ [See infra, p. 49 n.]

¹ See Voigt, XII Tafeln, vol. i. § 15. [Mos is defined by Festus as institutum patrum, id est memoria veterum pertinens maxime ad religiones caerimoniasque antiquorum, Bruns, 6th ed. ii. p. 14.]

example, that of the head of a house over his dependants; and sometimes it operated supplementarily, by requiring observance of duties that could not be enforced by any compulsitor of law. Dutiful service, respect, and obedience (obsequium et reverentia) from inferiors to superiors, chastity (pudicitia), and fidelity to engagements express or implied (fides), were among the officia that were thus inculcated, and whose neglect or contravention not only affected the reputation but often entailed punishments and disabilities, social, political, or religious.² To increase the respect for such virtues, and make their observance in a manner a religious duty, some of them were deified and provided with a temple and a cult. Fides was one of them (p. 49). There was none of the minor numina for which the ancient Roman had greater reverence.³ Whether in public or private life, an engagement in his eyes was sacred.⁴ An avoidable breach of it is said to have been extremely rare. If he failed the jus had no punishment for him. It might reach a man if he had engaged per aes et libram (§§ 14, 30) or by a formal sponsio (§ 39); but then the ground of action was the nexum or sponsio in which his engagement was clothed, not the engagement itself. "He agreed, but has not stood to his agreement," was a plaint of which the ordinary civil tribunal took no cognisance. Whether the pontiffs ever did so, viewing it as a dishonour of Fides,

² The constant reference in the pages of both the lay and professional writers to infamia, ignominia, turpitude, improbilas, etc. as imposing disqualifications, shows how much store continued to be set, theoretically at least, on integrity of character. Even in Justinian's law we find ingratitude regarded as justifying a donor in revoking a donation, a patron in again reducing his freedman to slavery, a parent in disinheriting his son, and a court of law in refusing to allow an heir to take an inheritance left him by testament.

³ [Thus Horace (Od. i. 24),

—cul Pudor, et Justitiae soror incorrupta Fides, nudaque Veritas quando ullum inveniet parem?

See also Hor. Carm. Sec. 57; Virg. Aen. i. 292.]

⁴ "Populus Romanus . . . omnium [virtutum] maxime et praecipue Fidem coluit sanctamque habuit tam privatim quam publice" (Gell. xx. 1, 39). "Fides, i.e. dictorum conventorumque constantia et veritas" (Cic. De Off. i. 7, 23). See also De Off. iii. 81, 11. On Numa's institution of the cult of Fides, see Liv. i. 21, 4; Dion. ii. 75. See also infra, p. 50, n. 2.

does not appear; but as a contravention of boni mores it was undoubtedly a matter for the animadversion of those who exercised the regimen morum,—the king over the citizens generally, the gentes over their members, and probably the collegia opificum over their sodales.

CHAPTER III

INSTITUTIONS OF THE PRIVATE LAW

SECTION 9.—THE FAMILY ORGANISATION¹

IN describing the domestic organisation of the Romans it would be pedantic to be always using the Latin word familia instead of the English "family."² Yet there would be reason for it; for the ideas they respectively convey are by no means identical. Husband, wife, and children did not necessarily constitute an independent family among the Romans, nor were they all necessarily of the same family. Those formed a family who were all subject to the right or power—originally manus,³ but latterly jus—of the same family head (paterfamilias). He might have a whole host dependent on him,—wife and sons and daughters, and daughters-in-law, and grandchildren by his sons, and possibly remoter descendants related through males; so long as they remained subject to him they constituted but one family, that was split up only on his death or loss of citizenship. But if his wife had not passed in manum—and that was common enough even during the republic and universal in the later empire—she did not become a member of his family; she remained a member of the family in which she was born, or, if its head was deceased, or she had been emancipated, was the sole member of a family of her own. Both sons and daughters on emancipation ceased to be of the family of the paterfamilias who had emancipated them. A daughter's children could never under any circumstances be members of the family of their maternal grandfather; for children born in lawful marriage followed the family of their father, while those who were illegitimate ranked from the moment of birth as patresfamilias and matresfamilias. It is very evident, therefore, that the Roman familia was an association of which the word “family” in its ordinary acceptation conveys but an imperfect and inaccurate representation.

¹ See Schupfer, La Famiglia secondo il diritto romano, Padua, 1876. [On primitive marriage see Westermarck, Hist. of Human Marriage (London, 1891), pp. 96-113; also Bourcart (trad. Muirhead), p. 575, sq.]

² Familia and "family" are used in this section solely to designate the group of persons subject to the same paterfamilias [familia proprio jure]. Occasionally they meant (1) a gens or group of families in the stricter sense; or (2) the family estate proper, as in the provisions of the XII Tables about succession—adgnatus proximus familiam habeto; or (3) the family slaves collectively, as in the phrases familia urbana, familia rustica. [Familia had other meanings. Thus it was applied to the separate branches of a gens; see Mommsen, SR. iii. p. 10 n. and p. 16 n.; and to the whole body of agnates (familia communi jure); Dig. l. 16, fr. 195; and to cognates; see Rivier, Précis du droit de famille romain (Paris, 1891), §§ 1, 2. Cuq, Inst. Jurid. p. 152, has attempted to make out that in the expression "domus familiaque" the former term (domus) indicated originally a group of persons envisaged from the point of view of the rights of a master (pater, dominus), while the latter indicated a group subject to the power of the same head, but also forming a religious organisation in which the paterfamilias is conceived as subject to duties as well as exercising rights. As to the meaning of familia in the expression "familia pecuniaque," see infra, p. 63.]

³ This word manus, though in progress of time used chiefly to express the power a husband had over the wife who had become a member of his family, was originally the generic term for all the rights exercised not only over the things

With the early Romans, as with the Hindus and the Greeks, marriage was a religious duty,⁴—a duty a man owed alike to his ancestors and himself. Believing that the happiness of the dead in another world depended on their proper burial, and on the periodical renewal by their descendants of prayers and feasts and offerings for the repose of their souls, it was incumbent upon him above all things to perpetuate his race and his family cult.⁵ In taking to himself a wife, he was belonging but also the persons subject to him; for a slave when enfranchised was said to be “manumitted,” and the same phrase was also employed occasionally to express the condition of a filiusfamilias released from the potestas, although “emancipated” was the usual one. [Livy, xxxiv. 2, uses the term as equivalent for tutela. Manus is also used by Pomponius, Dig. i. 1, fr. 2 § 1, to indicate the power of the kings. As to manus generally and the etymological connection of the word with the mund or munt (mundium) of old German law, see Carle, Origini, pp. 196, 201; Gérardin, “La tutelle et la curatelle dans l'ancien droit romain,” Nouv. Rev. Hist. 1889, p. 4 n.; cf. also infra, p. 60.]

⁴ See Fustel de Coulanges, La cité antique, pp. 41-54.

⁵ “Sacra privata perpetua manento. Deorum manium jura sancta sunt.” about to separate her from her father's house and make her a partner of his family mysteries. With the patrician at least this was to be done only with divine approval, ascertained by auspicia. His choice was limited to a woman with whom he had conubium (ἐπιγαμία) or right of intermarriage.⁶ This was a matter of state arrangement; and in the regal period Roman citizens could have it outside their own bounds only with members of states with which they were in alliance, and with which they were connected by the bond of common religious observances. A patrician citizen, therefore, if his marriage was to be reckoned lawful (justae nuptiae), had to wed either a fellow-patrician or a woman who was a member of an allied community. In either case it was essential that she should not be one of his sobrial circle, i.e. of kin to him within the seventh degree;⁷ second cousins, therefore, being related in the sixth degree according to Roman computation, could not intermarry.⁸

The ceremony itself was a religious one, conducted by the high priests of the state, in presence of ten witnesses, representatives probably of the ten curies of the bridegroom's tribe, and known as confarreatio;⁹ for it may be affirmed with all

Sos (=suos) leto datos divos habento" (Cic. in his draft of a code De Leg. ii. 9, 22). "Animas placare paternas" (Ov. Fast. ii. 533). See also Cic. De Leg. ii. 22, § 55; Aug. De Civ. Dei, viii. cap. 26.

⁶ It was the want of conubium between the early settlement of Romulus and the neighbouring cities and villages that, according to the story (Liv. i. 9), caused the abduction of the Sabine maidens. Romulus is said to have sued for it in the first instance; but his overtures were repulsed with the advice to open an asylum for women as well as men, as his only chance of finding equal mates for his followers; and it was only then that they resorted to their rough mode of wooing and wedding. [Cf. Gaddi; Traduzione di Muirhead, p. 26, n. 48.]

⁷ According to the old phraseology there could be no intermarriage within the circle of the jus osculi. On this old institution, "the right of kiss," see Klenze, Das Familienrecht der Cognaten und Affinen nach röm. u. verwandten Rechten (Berlin, 1828), p. 16 sq. [This jus osculi must not be confounded with osculum interveniens. See Gaddi, op. cit. p. 26, n. 49.]

⁸ In time this was relaxed, and eventually marriage permitted even between first cousins, Just. Inst. i. 10, 4. [Marriage of first cousins, competent in Cicero's age, was for a time under the empire forbidden, and again expressly sanctioned by the emperors Arcadius and Honorius (Cod. v. 4, 19).]

⁹ Gai. i. 112. See Rossbach, Die römische Ehe (Stuttgart, 1853), p. 95 sq.; Karlowa, Die Formen d. röm. Ehe u. Manus (Bonn, 1868), p. 5 sq. [Rein's 1st Excursus in 2nd vol. of Becker's Gallus. Jhering supposes that the ten but absolute certainty that it was not until after the Canuleian law (309 U.C.) had legalised intermarriage with a plebeian, that a patrician condescended to any less sacred form of completing the bond of marriage.¹⁰ Its effect was to dissociate the wife entirely from her father's house and to make her a member of her husband's; for confarreate marriage involved what was called in manum conventio, the passage of the wife into her husband's "hand" or power (but this always on the assumption that her husband was himself paterfamilias; if he was not, then, though nominally in his hand, she was really subject like himself to his family head). Any property she had of her own—which was a possible state of matters only if she had been independent before marriage—passed to him as a matter of course; if she had none, her paterfamilias provided her a dowry (dos), which shared the same fate. Whatever she acquired by her industry or otherwise while the marriage lasted also as a matter of course fell to her husband. In fact, so far as her pecuniary interests were concerned, she was in much the same position as her children; and on her husband's death (according to Gaius) she had a share with them in his inheritance, as if she had been one of his daughters. In other respects manus conferred more limited rights than patria potestas; for Romulus is said to have ordained that if a man put away his wife except for adultery or one of two or three other very grave offences, he forfeited his estate half to her and half to Ceres;¹¹ while if he sold her he was to be given over to the infernal gods.¹²

The patria potestas was the name given to the power witnesses originally represented the ten gentes of the wife's curia, and that they were present to legalise the marriage by attesting that the woman was not marrying outside her curia without sanction, Vorgesch. d. Indoeurop. p. 407.]

¹⁰ [Cuq, Inst. Jurid. p. 215 sq. suggests a novel theory of confarreatio—viz. that it originally applied only to exogamous marriages (gentis enuptio).]

¹¹ One wonders how in such a case children were provided for. [See Gaddi, trad. Muirhead, p. 28 n.]

¹² Plut. Rom. 22 (Brunn, p. 6). On the subject of the early law of divorce, see von Wächter, Ueber Ehescheidungen bei den Römern (Stuttgart, 1822), p. 1 sq.; Berner, De divortiiis apud Romanos (Berolini, 1842), p. 1 sq.; Schlesinger, Z. f. RG. vol. viii. (1867), p. 58 sq. [On the meaning of the law of Romulus in Plutarch here referred to, see Jhering, Vorgesch. d. Indoeurop. p. 419. As to sacratio bonorum, see infra, p. 53.]

exercised by a father, or by his paterfamilias if he was himself in potestate, over the issue of such justae nuptiae. The Roman jurists boasted that it was a right enjoyed by none but a Roman citizen,¹³—a statement not strictly accurate, seeing that in the early empire the Latin municipalities of Spain and some other western provinces, though their burgesses were not Roman citizens, yet had manus and patria potestas modelled on those of Rome.¹⁴ But it certainly was peculiar to the Romans in this sense, that nowhere else, except among the Latin race from which they had sprung, did the paternal power attain such an intensity. It seems originally to have entitled a father, or his paterfamilias if he was himself in domestic subjection, to decide—not arbitrarily, of course, but judicially—whether or not he should rear the child with which his wife had presented him. But this right of his was very early restricted; for Romulus has the credit of having ordained (1) that he should rear all his male descendants, and at least his first-born daughter; (2) that he should not put any child to death before it had reached its third year, unless it was grievously deformed, and then he might expose it at once, after showing it to his neighbours; and (3) that if he transgressed he should forfeit half of his estate, and submit to other undefined penalties, probably religious.¹⁵ But this did not affect his right to determine whether or not he should admit the child whose life was thus secured to membership in his family (liberi susceptio), with all its privileges, social and religious; apparently it was not until the early empire that he was deprived of his power to decide himself the question of his child's legitimacy.¹⁶

The practical omnipotence of the paterfamilias and condition of utter subjection to him of his children in potestate became greatly modified in course of centuries; but originally the latter, though in public life on an equality with the house father, yet in private life, and so long as the potestas lasted,

¹³ "Jus proprium civium Romanorum" (Gai. i. §§ 55, 189; Just. Inst. i. 9). [Gaius, however, excepts the Galatians.]

¹⁴ Lex Salpensana (temp. Domit.), cap. 22 (Bruns, p. 181).

¹⁵ Dion. Hal. ii. 15, 26, 27 (Bruns, p. 7). [See Cuq, p. 158.]

¹⁶ See Voigt, Leges Regiae (as in § 7, note 10), p. 24 note. [As to liberi susceptio (liberos tollere), see Cuq, p. 161; Labbé, "Du mariage romain," Nouv. Rev. Hist. 1887, pp. 9, 11.]

were subordinated to him to such an extent as, according to the letter of the law, to be in his hands little better than his slaves. They could have nothing of their own,—all they earned was his; and though it was quite common, when they grew up, for him to give them peculia, “cattle of their own,” to manage for their own benefit, yet these were only de facto theirs but de jure his. For offences committed by them outside the family circle, for which he was not prepared to make amends, he had to surrender them to the injured party, just like slaves or animals that had done mischief. If his right to them was disputed he used the same action for its vindication that he employed for asserting his ownership of his field or his house: if they were stolen, he proceeded against the thief by an ordinary action of theft; if for any reason he had to transfer them to a third party, it was by the same form of conveyance he used for the transfer of things inanimate.¹⁷ Nor was this all; for according to the old formula recited in that sort of adoption known as adrogation, he had over them the power of life and death, jus vitae necisque.¹⁸ This power, as already noticed, was subject to certain restrictions during the infancy¹⁹ of a child; but when he had grown up, his father, in the exercise of the domestic jurisdiction, might visit his misconduct, not only in private but in public life, with such punishment as he thought fit, even banishment, slavery, or death.²⁰

It might happen that a marriage was fruitless, or that a man saw all his sons go to the grave before him, and that the paterfamilias had thus to face the prospect of the extinction of his family and of his own descent to the tomb without posterity to make him blessed. To obviate so dire a misfortune two alternatives were open to him,—either to give himself in adoption and pass into another family, or to adopt some one

¹⁷ [These are just illustrations of the effects of manus in its wider meaning.]

¹⁸ Aul. Gell. v. 18, 9. [Cuq, p. 155 n., points out that the texts use the expression potestas (not jus) vitae necisque, with reference to early law.]

¹⁹ In the Roman, not the English, sense of the word.

²⁰ A law attributed to Numa forbade a man to sell a son he had permitted to marry (Dion. Hal. ii. 20, Bruns, p. 9). [Paul, in Dig. xxviii. 2, fr. 11, expressly affirms the existence of potestas occidendi in the early law. See also Collatio, iv. 8, 1.]

as a son, who should perpetuate his own. The latter was the course usually followed.²¹ If it was a paterfamilias that he adopted, the process was called adrogation (adrogatio); if it was a filiusfamilias, it was simply adoptio. The latter, unknown probably in the earlier regal period, was a somewhat complicated conveyance of a son by his natural parent to his adopter, the purpose of course being expressed; its effect was simply to transfer the child from the one family to the other.²² But the former was much more serious; for it involved the extinction of one family²³ that another might be perpetuated. It was therefore an affair of state. It had to be approved by the pontiffs, who probably had to satisfy themselves that there were brothers enough of the adrogee to attend to the interests of the ancestors whose cult he was renouncing; and on their favourable report it had to be sanctioned by the vote of a comitia of the curies, as it involved the possible deprivation of his gens of their right of succession to him.²⁴ If it was sanctioned, then the adrogeus, from being himself the head of a house, sank to the position of a filiusfamilias in the house of his adoptive parent; if he had had wife or children subject to him, they passed with him into his new family; and so did everything that belonged to him and that was capable of transmission from one person to another. The adopting parent acquired potestas and power of life and death over the adopted child exactly as if he were the issue of his body; while the latter enjoyed in his new family the same rights exactly that he would have had if he had been born in it.

The manus and the patria potestas represent the masterful aspects of the patrician's domestic establishment. Its conjugal

²¹ [As to adoption in other early codes and the alternative custom of levirate, see authorities cited in Bourcart (trad. Muirhead), p. 38 n.; also Viollet, Précis de l'histoire du droit français, p. 401 (2nd ed. p. 482) sq.; Gortyn Tables, § 14.]

²² [It is uncertain whether it was known prior to the XII Tables, but there is no improbability in the view that it did exist in some form. See Sohm, Inst. (Eng. transl.), p. 387; Mommsen, SR. iii. p. 37; infra, p. 48.]

²³ A paterfamilias who had no person subject to him constituted a "family" in his own person. [As to adrogation, see Cuq, p. 285.]

²⁴ [It involved also prejudice to creditors through capitis deminutio. The final stage in the adrogation was the detestatio sacrorum, by which the adrogee renounced the cult of his gens. On this d. s. see Becker-Marquardt, Handbuch d. r. A. iv. 239, 240.]

and parental ones, however, though not so prominent in the pages of the jurists, are not to be lost sight of. The Roman family in the early history of the law was governed quite as much by fas as jus. It was an association hallowed by religion, and held together not by might merely but by conjugal affection, parental piety, and filial reverence.²⁵ The purpose of marriage was to rear sons who might perpetuate the house and the family sacra. In entering into the relationship the wife renounced her rights and privileges as a member of her father's house; but it was that she might enter into a lifelong partnership with her husband, and be associated with him in all his family interests sacred and civil.²⁶ The husband was priest in the family; but wife and children alike assisted in its prayers, and took part in the sacrifices to its lares and penates. As the Greek called his wife the house-mistress, δέσποινα, so did the Roman speak of his as materfamilias, the house-mother.²⁷ She was treated as her husband's equal.²⁸ As for their children, the potestas was so tempered by the natural sense of parental duty on the one side and filial affection on the other, that in daily life it was rarely felt as a grievance; while the risk of an arbitrary exercise of the domestic jurisdiction,²⁹ whether in the heat of passion or under the impulse of justifiable resentment, was guarded against by the rule which required the paterfamilias to consult in the first place the near kinsmen of his child, maternal as well as paternal.³⁰ Even the incapacity of the subject members of the family to hold property of their own cannot in those times have been regarded as any serious hardship; for, though the legal title to all their acquisitions was in the house-father, yet in truth they were acquired for and belonged to the family as a whole, and he was but a trustee to hold and administer them for the common benefit.³¹ What had come to him by descent, the bona paterna avitague, he was in a peculiar manner bound to preserve for his children, any squandering of them to their prejudice entitling them to have him deprived of his administration.³²

²⁵ "Matrem et patrem . . . venerari oportet" (Ulp. in Dig. xxxvii. 15, fr. 1, § 2). "Patria potestas in pietate debet, non in atrocitate consistere" (Hadr. in Dig. xlviii. 9, fr. 5). Cicero (Cato Maj. 11, 37), speaking of App. Claudius Caecus, thus depicts the ancient household régime: "Quattuor robustos filios, quinque filias, tantam domum, tantas clientelas Appius regebat et caecus et senex. . . . Tenebat non modo auctoritatem, sed etiam imperium in suos; metuebant servi, verebantur liberi, carum omnes habebant; vigeat in illa domo mos patrius et disciplina." Denis, in his Histoire des idées morales dans l'antiquité (vol. ii. p. 112), says: "Instead of that terrible power (the patria potestas) of which the historians of Roman law speak so much, we read rather in the writers of the early empire of nothing but the sacred duties of father and mother. . . . I might cite from Quintilian, and Pliny, and Tacitus, and Juvenal the most beautiful passages on the necessity and importance of education in the family, the inconvenience and mistake of confiding children to slaves, the respect due to the innocence of their infancy and youth, the tenderness that ought to be displayed towards them, and which forbids the use of the rod in training them as if they were mere animals."

²⁶ Dion. Hal. (ii. 25) says that so it was expressly declared by Romulus. The old idea still survived in the imperial jurisprudence, when technically, in consequence of the disuse of in manum conventio, husband and wife were no longer members of the same family; as, for instance, in the words of the emperor Gordian (Cod. Just. ix. 32, 4), "uxor quae socia rei humanae atque divinae domus suscipitur." See also Modest. in Dig. xxiii. 2, fr. 1.

²⁷ Materfamilias is used in the texts in two distinct senses, (1) a woman sui juris, i.e. not subject to any family head, and (2) a wife in manu mariti. [See Gellius xviii. 6, "in mariti manu mancipioque." According to Paul Diac. materfamilias in the old law meant wife of a paterfamilias. The term was also in later law applied to a woman of good character, whether married or not, e.g. Dig. l. 16, fr. 46, § 1; xxiii. 2, fr. 41, § 1. Cf. Labbé, "Du mariage romain," Nouv. Rev. Hist. 1887, p. 14 sq. It had also other meanings.]

✓ In Greece the patria potestas never reached such dimensions as in Rome, and there it ceased, de facto at least, when a son had grown up to manhood and started a household of his own. But in Rome, unless the paterfamilias voluntarily put an end to it, it lasted as long as the latter lived and retained his status. The marriage of a son, unlike that of a daughter passing into the hand of a husband, did not release him from it, nor did his children become subject to him so long as he himself was in potestate. On the contrary, his wife passed on

²⁸ [On Aryan influence on the early Roman matrimonial relation, see Jhering, Vorgesch. d. Indoeurop. p. 411 sq.]

²⁹ Seneca speaks of the paterfamilias as judex domesticus (Controv. ii. 3), and domesticus magistratus (De benef. iii. 11).

³⁰ [As to the concilium propinquorum, see infra, p. 35, n. 44.]

³¹ Under the Servian constitution the valuation of a man's freehold was really the valuation of the family freehold,—his filiifamilias as well as he had political and military rights and duties in respect of it. See Paul. Diac. v. Duicensus (Bruns, p. 266).

³² Paul. Sent. iii. 4a, 7. There can be little doubt that in regal Rome the interdiction of a patrician proceeded from his gens, who were his children's proper guardians, and on their failure his own heirs. The Greeks manifested the same solicitude for the preservation of the πατρῴα παππῴα.

marriage into the power of her father-in-law, and their children as they were born fell under that of their paternal grandfather; and the latter was entitled to exercise over his daughter-in-law and grandchildren the same rights he had over his sons and unmarried daughters. But there was this difference,—that, when the paterfamilias died, his sons and daughters who had remained in potestate, and his grandchildren by a predeceased son, instantly became their own masters (sui juris), whereas grandchildren by a surviving son simply passed from the potestas of their grandfather into that of their father.³³

The acquisition of domestic independence by the death of the family head frequently involved the substitution of the guardianship of tutors (tutela) for the potestas that had come to an end. This was so invariably in the case of females sui juris, no matter what their age; they remained under guardianship until they had passed by marriage in manum mariti.³⁴ It was only during pupillarity, however, that males required tutors, and the office came to an end when puberty was attained. It is doubtful whether during the regal period a testamentary appointment of tutors by a husband or parent to wife or children was known in practice,—probably not. If so, the office devolved upon the gens to which the deceased paterfamilias belonged; and it may reasonably be assumed that it delegated the duties to one of its members in particular, retaining in its collective capacity a right of supervision.

The position of the clients attached to a family has already been referred to (§ 3). The only persons belonging to it that have not been mentioned, were its slaves. In the regal period they were socially more intimately related to the family than in later centuries; few in number, sitting at table with their masters, and treated with a consideration due to them as reasonable human beings, rather than as the mere chattels that they were in contemplation of law. The existence of slavery and its enormous expansion in the latter half of the republic not only told on the social and political institutions of Rome, but exercised a very considerable influence on the complexion of many branches of the private law. But this can be better indicated in dealing with later periods than that of the kings.

³³ [In his Vorgeschichte der Indoeuropäer, pp. 52-54, Jhering treats the patria potestas as a non-Aryan institution. Among the primitive Aryans, in his view, the rule of physical force prevailed—the eldest son on his marriage, frequently taking the headship of the house, and ousting his aged or weakly sire from the control. But this is a hazardous supposition. Comparative history has shown that something like patria potestas is to be found among many primitive races. See Girard, p. 130, n. 1; supra, p. 28.]

³⁴ Gaius (i. 190) makes the extraordinary statement that it was not easy to assign any sufficient reason for the perpetual tutory of females sui juris. No doubt by his time its stringency had been much relaxed; but the manifest reason originally was to put it out of the power of such women to dispose of any part of their family estate to the prejudice of their gens without its co-operation (see p. 44).

The preceding observations on the early organisation of the family refer for the most part to the state of matters amongst the patricians. In the debates that took place about the proposal of C. Canuleius to repeal the declaration in the XII Tables that intermarriage between the orders was unlawful, it was urged by patrician orators, in language of supremest contempt, that the plebeians in practice knew nothing of marriage; that their unions amongst themselves were promiscuous,—no better than those of the beasts of the field, and could not possibly be creative of any of the rights that resulted from justae nuptiae.⁸⁵ The picture was overdrawn and over-coloured by the prejudice of caste; for, although the plebeians were strangers to the religious marriage confarreatio, and it could not have been until after the Servian reforms that they became familiar with the civil one effected coemptio,⁸⁶ yet they had amongst themselves alliances completed by interchange of consent, and doubtless accompanied by customary social observances, which they regarded as marriages.⁸⁷ In the eye of law, it is true, these were not creative either of manus or potestas; neither did they bring the wife into her husband's family. Nay, more, as a plebeian was not esteemed a citizen, and could not therefore have conubium in the sense of the right to contract a lawful marriage,⁸⁸ his children were in patrician estimation illegit-

⁸⁵ Liv. iv. 2.

⁸⁶ On coemption, see p. 63 [and Appendix, Note B].

⁸⁷ [See infra, p. 111 n. as to marriage by usus.]

⁸⁸ "Uxoris jure ducendae facultas" (Ulp. v. 3).

imate,—not so much his as their mother's.³⁹ In this may be discovered the origin of matrimonium as distinguished from justae nuptiae,—alliance with a woman in order to make her a mother of children,⁴⁰ but that did not make her—still from the patrician's point of view—"a partner in all the affairs of the household, human and divine."⁴¹ Being of different races, and the traditions of some of them, for instance the Etruscan, tinged more or less with gynæocratic notions,⁴² the domestic customs and institutions of the plebeians may well have varied; but the majority being of Latin origin, it is reasonable to assume that de facto they regarded their children as in patria potestate,⁴³ and asserted in respect of it the same powers as their patrician superiors. They were at a disadvantage as compared with the latter, however, in having no gentes to stand by them in emergencies, to avenge their quarrels and their deaths, and to act as guardians of their widows and orphans. To compensate for this they seem to have set more store than did the patricians upon the circle of their relatives by blood and marriage (cognati et adfines). It is remarkable that, notwithstanding the pre-eminence given to agnates by the XII Tables in matters of tutory and succession (§§ 28, 32), the law reserved to the cognates as distinguished from the agnates certain rights and duties that in patrician Rome must have belonged to the gens; for example, the duty of acting as assessors in the concilium domesticum, the duty of prosecuting the murderer—originally of avenging the death—of a kinsman, and the right of appeal against a capital sentence pronounced upon the latter.⁴⁴ This can only have been ³⁹ Gai. i. 67; Ulp. v. 8.

⁴⁰ [Liberorum quaerendorum causa.]

⁴¹ This accounts also for the grammatically untenable explanation of patricii in Liv. x. 8, 10, "Qui patrem ciere possunt": i.e. patricians were father's sons, while plebeians, before they were admitted to citizenship and conubium, were only reckoned mother's sons.

⁴² Bachofen, Das Mutterrecht, Stuttgart, 1861, p. 92.

⁴³ Their recognition of manus may not have been so general. While the XII Tables declared that it should be the legal result of a year's matrimonial cohabitation, they reserved power to a wife and her family to prevent it; which would hardly have been the case had not some at least of the plebeians had a preference for marriage without it.

⁴⁴ See Klenze (as in note 1), pp. 43, 46, and passim. [The meeting of a because in olden times, when agnation was unknown as distinct from the gens, it was plebeian practice to entrust those rights and duties to the sobrinal circle of cognates.⁴⁵

SECTION 10.—DISTRIBUTION OF LAND AND LAW OF PROPERTY¹

The distribution of land amongst the early Romans is one of the puzzling problems of their history. The Servian constitution classified the citizens and determined their privileges, duties, and burdens according to the extent of their freeholds; and yet we know very little with certainty of the way in which these were acquired.

The story goes that Romulus divided the little territory of his original settlement into three parts, not necessarily of equal dimensions, one of which was intended for the maintenance of the state and its institutions, civil and religious, the second (ager publicus) for the use of the citizens and profit of the state, and the third (ager privatus) for subdivision among his followers.² Varro and Pliny³ relate that to each council of cognates, distinct from the gens or agnati, at this early period is questionable. It is more likely that the domestic council was one of agnates at first and that in time cognati and affines were admitted to it. See Rivier, Précis du droit de famille romain, p. 22. Jhering, Geist, ii. p. 213 and Cuq, p. 212, support the view taken in the text. Cf. Esmein, Mélanges, pp. 76, 77. Priscian, vi. p. 710 (p. 254 Hertz), quoting Cato, Origin. iv. No. 5, says: 'Si quis membrum rupit, aut os fregit, talione proximus cognatus ulciscitur.' This cannot have been a law of the XII Tables, as some writers have held, the penalty imposed by the XII Tables for os fractum being pecuniary. H. Jordan (ed. Cato, 1860) thinks that it refers to Punic Law (see Prolegom. of Jordan, p. 4), but it may, as Mommsen suggests, refer to a rule of Roman law, older than the Decemviral code. Relics of the concilium propinquorum may still be traced in France and some other continental countries in the family council (conseille de famille), which is called together where matters of serious importance affecting a family have to be considered.]

⁴⁵ See Appendix, note A.

¹ Giraud, Recherches sur le droit de propriété chez les Romains, Aix, 1838 (only first vol. published); Macé, Histoire de la propriété, du domaine public, et des lois agraires chez les Romains, Paris, 1851; Hildebrand, De antiquissimae agri Romani distributionis fide, Jena, 1862; Voigt, "Ueber die bina jugera d. ältesten röm. Agrarverfassung," in the Rhein. Mus. f. Phil. vol. xxiv. (1869), p. 52 sq., the opinions in which are somewhat modified in his XII Tafeln, vol. i. § 102; Karlowa, Röm. RG. vol. i. § 15. [Padell.-Cogliolo, ch. xviii. Appendix; Cuq, Inst. Jurid. p. 74 sq.]

² [Dion. ii. 7.]

³ Varro, De R. R. i. 10, 2 (Bruns, p. 309); Plin. H. N. xviii. 2, 7.

of these he assigned a homestead (heredium) of two jugers, equal to about an acre and a quarter, to be held to him and his heirs (quæ heredem sequerentur); Pliny adding that to none of them did the king give more. The credibility of this statement is disputed on two grounds,—that so small a plot was utterly inadequate to supply the wants of a family, and that there is evidence elsewhere that the practice was to assign lands, not to an individual or a family, but to a gens.⁴ But it is not to be lost sight of that this distribution is spoken of as made in the very first days of Rome, amongst a handful of adventurers, the nuclei of future gentes, but as yet without family ties; whose occupations as herdsmen were carried on upon the open hills, and for whom an acre and a quarter afforded ample space for a dwelling for themselves, shelter for their herds, and tillage ground for their personal requirements.⁵

It is not necessary, however, to assume, nor do Pliny's words imply, that this first distribution was a final one. The Sabines and others who from time to time threw in their lot with the new settlement, recognised rights of property either in the gens or the family,—it was from the former, we are told, that came the worship of Terminus and the idea of the sacredness of the landmark; and most of them when they formed their union with the followers of Romulus must have had their own lands and possessions, which had possibly descended to them through many generations. It would be unreasonable to suppose that, joining Rome, as some of them did, as equals rather than conquered, they would be content to resign their hereditary possessions for so inconsiderable a substitute. The majority of the Servian local tribes bore the names of well-known patrician gentes; whence it may be inferred that the families of the various clans did not disperse,

⁴ See Mommsen, Hist. vol. i. p. 194 sq. [Cf. Röm. Staatsrecht, iii. p. 22 sq.]

⁵ [A view which seems to be much favoured by the latest writers on the subject is that (adopting Varro's statement) the heredia should be regarded as garden grounds with dwelling-house, situated within the bounds of the city, while lands outside the city (ager) belonged to the gentes or the State. The heredia were not strictly individual but family property, and as such practically inalienable. See Cuq, Inst. Jurid. p. 80 sq. and p. 246; cf. Girard, p. 253 sq. This view is certainly supported by the results of recent inquiries in comparative law. See Laveleye, La propriété et ses formes primitives; Kovalevsky, Tableau des origines de la famille et de la propriété, 1890, p. 52 sq.; infra, n. 9.]

but continued settled alongside each other, either in their original localities or on estates newly assigned to them. This view is confirmed by the fact mentioned by Livy, that when Appius Claudius and his followers came to Rome they were drafted as a body to a district north of the Anio, which was afterwards known as the tribus Claudia.

It is highly probable that, as the surviving Romulian families developed into gentes, they also acquired gentile settlements proportioned to their numerical strength and expectations. In their subdivision the practice may not have been uniform; but apparently there was a reserve retained in the hands of the gens as a corporation as long as possible,⁶ from which allotments were made from time to time to new constituent families as they arose, and which were held by them in independent ownership under the old name of heredia. As agriculture gained ground these must have been of greater extent than those originally granted by Romulus. Seven jugers, about $4\frac{1}{2}$ acres, seem to have been the normal extent of royal grants to plebeians,⁷ and a patrician's freehold is not likely to have been less; probably in the ordinary case it was larger, seeing the minimum qualification for the third Servian class was ten jugers, and for the first twenty.⁸ To enable him to make grants during pleasure to his clients he must have held more than seven. But he did not necessarily hold all his lands by gratuitous assignation either from the state or from his gens; purchase from the former was by no means uncommon; and it may have been on his purchased lands, outside his heredium proper, that his clients were usually employed. Those dependents were also employed in large numbers upon those parts of the ager publicus which were occupied by the patricians under the name of possessiones. It was these, and not their heredia, that were the great source of wealth to the patricians in the early republic, and that formed such a fertile cause of contention between the orders. But as their monopolisation by the former did not begin to manifest itself ostentatiously or to be felt as a grievance during the period of the kings, further reference to it may be reserved for a subsequent section (§ 19).

⁶ [I.e. retained by the gentiles collectively.]

⁷ [Plin. H. N. xviii. 3, 18; see infra, n. 9.]

⁸ At the same time the writers of the empire frequently refer to the early heredium of seven jugera, as having been amply sufficient for its frugal owner, content to till it himself with the aid of his sons. The case of Cincinnatus in the year 293 U.C. is often mentioned: having a freehold of just that extent, he had to sell three jugers to meet engagements for which he believed himself in honour responsible, and yet found the remaining four ample to enable him to maintain himself with all the dignity of a man who had been consul and became dictator. [See Livy, iii. 13, 26; Val. Max. iv. 4, 7. On the qualification for the Servian classes, see Mommsen, SR. iii. 281; Cuq, Inst. Jurid. p. 97 sq.]

The accounts of the early distributions of land amongst the plebeians are even more uncertain than those we have of its distribution amongst the patricians. They had undoubtedly become freeholders in large numbers before the Servian reforms. But they probably attained that position only by gradual stages. There are indications that their earliest grants from the kings were only during pleasure; but latterly, as they increased in numbers and importance, they obtained concessions of heredia, varying in extent from two to seven jugers. That those who had the means also frequently acquired land by purchase from the state may be taken for granted. In fact, there is good reason to believe that by the time of Servius the plebeians were as free to hold land in private property as the patricians, although the stages by which they reached equality in this respect are uncertain and difficult to follow.⁹

The language of Varro in reference to the heredia—two jugers which should follow the heir (quae heredem sequerentur)—is sometimes interpreted as implying that those of them at least which were acquired by gratuitous grant from the state were declared inalienable.¹⁰ Such an interpretation is

⁹ [This may be true, but one must note that the notion of freehold in land is alien to this early period, if one is to accept the conclusions of inquirers into primitive law. It is a question if private property in it was recognised save in possession—what the Germans call Besitzenthum. See Bourcart (trad. Muirhead), p. 580, and authorities there cited; Cuq, op. cit. p. 95 sq.]

¹⁰ Schwegler (vol. ii. p. 444 sq.) and Rudorff (Gromatiche Institutionen, Berlin, 1852, p. 303) are of this opinion, and base it to some extent on the consideration that until the time of Servius there was no process by which lands could be alienated. But this is assumed. There may possibly have been something akin to the resignatio in favorem of the feudal law—resignation of them into the hands of the king for regrant to an alienee. There may not inadmissible; for the Sempronian law of 621 expressly declared inalienable the allotments of thirty jugers which it authorised.¹¹ It is very likely that sale of them was never contemplated; they were assigned to families rather than individuals; and it has been observed already (p. 32) that a man was not allowed to alienate recklessly the estate that had come to him from his ancestors and ought to descend to his children. At the same time the interpretation seems somewhat strained. A grant to the original grantee and his heirs is all that the words fairly cover, in contradistinction to a more limited grant during pleasure or for life. It was a grant in absolute ownership,—what came to be called dominium ex jure Quiritium. The epithet was not applied from the first; for dominium was not a word in early use, the owner being originally spoken of as herus,¹² and his right as manus.¹³ The qualification ex jure Quiritium was derived from the words of style employed in an action for vindication of a right of property; the condition of the vindicant's obtaining the protection of the state through its ordinary tribunals being that he held on a title which the state, i.e. the Quirites, regarded as sufficient.

It is sometimes said that the law of the regal period anterior to the reign of Servius Tullius knew no property in movables.¹⁴ The proposition is startling. How could it be that men who held separate property in land should be indifferent to the distinction between mine and thine in other things!¹⁵ It is inconceivable that a man's slaves and cattle even have been already in practice the surrender in court (in jure cessio), which, we are told, was confirmed by the XII Tables, and which is explained on p. 137. [For criticism of Rudorff's view, see Jhering, Vorrede to zweiter Theil, zweite Abth. of his Geist d. r. R. (vol. ii.); cf. supra, p. 37 n.]

¹¹ The restriction, however, was found unworkable, and had to be removed.

¹² The word is common in Plautus as a form of address by a slave to his master, and occurs in the Aquilian law of 467 u.c. (Dig. ix. 2, fr. 11, § 6) in the sense of owner (dominus). Paul. Diao. v. Heres (Bruns, p. 269), and Justinian (Inst. ii. 19, 7) declare that with the ancients heres had the same meaning. Corssen (Beiträge, p. 40) connects them with the Sanscrit har, to take.

¹³ As evidenced by the manum conserere (p. 180) of the actio sacramenti in rem, and other considerations referred to in § 13.

¹⁴ [See Mommsen in his Röm. Staatsrecht, 1st ed. ii. 363, n. 5 (2nd ed. p. 377); Cuq, p. 92; cf. Girard, p. 243.]

¹⁵ [But see supra, p. 37, n. 5 and p. 39, n. 9.]

and sheep, his plough and other instruments of husbandry or trade, the crops he raised from his farm and the wares he manufactured by his industry, were not regarded by him as just as much his, de facto at least, as the lands he tilled or the house he occupied. The proposition is maintained on the strength of a dictum of Gaius's, in which, referring to the distinction that arose in the later republic between quiritarian ownership and the inferior tenure which he designates as in bonis habere,¹⁶ he says that formerly (olim) matters were different,—that a man was either owner ex jure Quiritium or was not owner at all.¹⁷ But from the standpoint of Gaius his olim refers only to the state of the law immediately before this bonitarian tenure of res Mancipi (§ 13)—for it was to them only that it applied—was introduced; and does not exclude the possibility that at a still earlier period the law recognised a distinction between natural and legal or civil ownership.¹⁸ The fact that the praetors and the jurists of the early empire strove successfully to mitigate the rigour of the pure jus civile by leavening it with principles of natural law, is apt to induce the belief that this element was altogether novel. Yet Justinian warns us to the contrary. “Natural law,” he says, “is clearly the older, for it began with the human race; whereas civil laws commenced only when states began to be founded, magistracies to be created, and laws to be written.”¹⁹

It is quite conceivable that the law might refuse a real

¹⁶ The rule of the jus civile was that what were called res Mancipi could be transferred in full or quiritarian ownership only by mancipation or surrender in court (p. 62). The result was that a transfer by simple delivery left the legal title in the transferrer; so that the transferee was unable to maintain a real action for vindication of his right until he had cured his defective title by prescriptive possession upon it. This was amended by a praetorian edict, which, on certain conditions, allowed him an action even before the prescriptive period had expired (§ 52). The transferrer was not thereby divested of his quiritarian title; but, by concession to the transferee of an action in rem, the latter was also recognised as owner on an inferior title, which got the name of in bonis habere (Gai. ii. 40). Hence the epithet of δεσπότης βουτάριος which Theophilus applies to the equitable owner.

¹⁷ Gai. ii. 40.

¹⁸ Ἔστι φυσικὴ καὶ ἐννομὸς δεσποτεία (Theoph. i. 5, 4).

¹⁹ Just. Inst. ii. 1, § 11. [Justinian, however, can hardly be regarded as an authority on a question of ancient law. See comments on this text by Cuq, Inst. Jurid. pp. 76-78.]

action for determining a question of legal right over a thing to a man who was unable to found on a title that conferred quiritarian ownership, and yet have no hesitation in protecting his possession of it when disturbed, or allowing him a remedy when he was deprived of it by theft or violence; indeed, such a state of matters is not only conceivable but manifest beyond possibility of dispute. There can be little doubt that it was so down to the time of the introduction of the bonitarian tenure,—that just as the possession of an occupant of the ager publicus, who notoriously was not a quiritarian owner, was protected by an interdict, so was that of the purchaser of a few acres of ager privatus who had been content to take conveyance by simple delivery, at least against any one but the quiritarian vendor; and that if a movable res Mancipi, acquired by purchase without mancipation or surrender in court, was stolen from the purchaser, the latter would have his penal action against the thief. It comes, therefore, to be very much a question of words. If by ownership or dominium be meant quiritarian ownership, such as was sufficient for a real action in a court of law, then it may be admitted that, down to the time of Servius, with exception perhaps of captured slaves and cattle, there was no property in movables; but if no more be meant than a right in a man to alienate by tradition what he held as his own, and to protect himself, or have protection from the authorities, against any attempt to deprive him of it by theft or violence, then the existence of an ownership of movables—a natural ownership—cannot well be denied.²⁰ Theft was theft, even though the stolen article had been acquired only by natural means,—by barter in the market, by the industry of the maker, or as the product of something already belonging to its holder.

SECTION 11.—ORDER OF SUCCESSION

The story of the grant by Romulus of little homesteads that were “to follow the heir” indicates clearly that from earliest times the Romans recognised inheritance and an order of succession. Imposing, as they did, on a man's descendants the duty of perpetuating the family and its sacra, it would have been strange if those descendants had been deprived of their estate.

²⁰ By the reforms of Servius Tullius certain movables came to be classed along with lands and houses as res Mancipi, and thus became objects of quiritarian right. [See supra, p. 87, n. 5.]

The difference of the family organisation of patricians and plebeians necessarily involved a divergence to some extent in their rules of succession. Amongst the former the order was this,—that on the death of a paterfamilias his patrimony devolved upon those of his children in potestate who by that event became sui juris, his widow taking an equal share with them, and no distinction being made between movables and immovables, personalty and realty; and that, failing widow and children, it went to his gens.¹ The notion that between the descendants and the gens came an intermediate class under the name of agnates does not seem well founded as regards the regal period;² they were introduced by the XII Tables to meet the case of the plebeians, who, having no gentes, were without legal heirs in default of children (p. 164).³

In India, as it was sons alone that could perpetuate a family, daughters had no right of succession. And so was it also in Athens,—in presence of a son daughters were excluded. There are some historical jurists who maintain that so it must have been in patrician Rome.⁴ The texts, however, afford no

¹ Although the words of the XII Tables were "gentiles familiam habento" Ulpian, in Collat. xvi. 4, 2), yet Cicero's reference to the cause célèbre between the Claudii and Claudii Marcelli (De Orat. i. 39, 176) seems to indicate that the gens took as a corporation. But opinions differ; and Götting (Röm. Staatsverfassung, p. 71 sq.) may be right in thinking practice varied.

² The supposed mention of agnates in a law attributed to Numa rests simply on a conjecture of Ph. E. Huschke's, in I. G. Huschke's Analecta litteraria (Leipsic, 1826), p. 375. The law is preserved in narrative by Servius in Virg. Bucol. iv. 43, which runs thus: "In Numae legibus cautum est, ut si quis imprudens occidisset hominem, pro capite occisi et natis ejus in cautione (Scalig. concione) offerret arietem." Huschke's substitution of agnatis for et natis is all but universally adopted; but, even were it necessary, need mean nothing more than the deceased's children in potestate or his gens. [See Karlowa, Röm. RG. ii. p. 881.]

³ It is quite true, nevertheless, that from the first the order of succession was agnatic; for it was those only of a man's children who were agnate as well as cognate that had any claim to his inheritance; and the gens was, theoretically at least, just a body of agnates. [See § 82, n. 22, p. 164 infra.]

⁴ Genz (p. 11) holds this opinion very decidedly. M. Fustel de Coulanges (p. 80 sq.) is of opinion that, if not expressly, yet practically, women were support to this theory.⁵ Justinian more than once refers to the perfect equality of the sexes in this matter in the ancient law. But it was nominal rather than real. A daughter who had passed into the hand of a husband during her father's lifetime of course could have no share in her father's inheritance, for she had ceased to be a member of his family. One who was in potestate at his death, and thereby became sui juris, did become his heir, unless he had prevented such a result by testamentary arrangements; but even then the risk of prejudice to the gens was in their own hands to prevent. For she could not marry, and so carry her fortune into another family without their consent; neither could she without their consent alienate any of the more valuable items of it;⁶ nor, even with their consent, could she make a testament disposing of it in prospect of death.⁷ Her inheritance, therefore, was hers in name only; in reality it was in the hands of her guardians.

excluded. [See generally as to the succession of females in primitive systems of law, Viollet, Histoire du droit civil français, Paris, 1886, p. 707; Kovalewsky, Coutume contemporaine et loi ancienne, 1893, p. 217 sq.]

⁵ The Voconian law of 585 avowedly introduced something new in prohibiting a man of fortune instituting a woman, even his only daughter, as his testamentary heir; but it did not touch the law of intestacy. [The application of this law to daughters has been disputed, e.g. by Savigny, Verm. Schr. i. 438; but it seems well established. See Girard, p. 798.]

⁶ [I.e. her res Mancipi. See infra, p. 139, n. 58.]

⁷ Cic. Top. iv. 18. The primary reason of this disability may have been that a woman had no admission to the curies, and so could not make a testament in the only way known in the regal period, however willing her tutors might have been to consent. But in time it came to be represented as a disability peculiar to women in the legal tutory of their agnates or their gens,—as a disability of the guardians rather than of the ward, that might be avoided by the substitution of fiduciary for legal tutors. It was, as Cicero says (Pro Mur. xii. 27), a gross subversion of the spirit of the law while adhering strictly to its letter. The tutors-at-law, knowing quite well what was the object in view, gave their authority to their ward to pass herself, by coemption, into the hand (in manum) of a man she had no intention of regarding as her husband, on the understanding that he was at once to remancipate her (Gai. i. 137) to a person of her own selection, it might be one of the very tutors-at-law of whom she was getting rid. The latter was bound at once to manumit her, whereby she again became sui juris, and her manumitter ipso jure became her fiduciary tutor, bound in honour to comply with all her wishes, and even to sanction her testament (Gai. i. 115; ii. 112). [Though the prevailing view is that a freeborn woman under tutory could not make a testament even with auctoritas of her legal tutors, some writers controvert this. The question is discussed in Cohn, Beiträge zur Bearbeitung des röm. Rechts, pp. 1-17.]

Daughters in potestate having been admitted to participate along with sons, a fortiori there was no exclusion of younger sons by the first-born. There is not a trace of the existence in Rome at any time of a law of primogeniture, even to the extent, as in India, of entitling the elder to some trifling share beyond that of his younger brothers. And yet we find record of heredia remaining in a family not for generations merely but for centuries,—a state of matters that would have been impossible had every death of a paterfamilias involved a splitting up of the family estate. It is conceivable that this was sometimes avoided by arrangement amongst the heirs themselves. The practice was by no means uncommon for brothers to abstain from dividing their patrimony, continuing to possess it as partners (consortes).⁸ We have no details about it; but it is quite possible that by some understanding amongst them the heredium eventually remained in the hands of one only, who in turn transmitted it to his posterity. The practice of drafting younger members of a family to colonies may also have aided; and no doubt a paterfamilias often withheld his consent to the marriage of younger sons, and so prevented the multiplication of heirs in a later generation. But the simplest plan was the regulation of his succession by testament. This was had recourse to, not so much for instituting a stranger heir when a man had no issue,—according to patrician notions his duty then was to perpetuate his family by adopting a son,—as for partitioning the succession when he had more children than one. There was more than one way in which in the later law a settlement of a particular part of the inheritance might be made upon a particular heir, with substitution of another on failure of the first; and there is no reason to suppose that a similar device was not resorted to when necessary in the oral testament of the regal period.

During the republic and afterwards it was held to be within the power of a paterfamilias testamentarily to disinherit any or all of his children in potestate, and so with his last breath to deprive them of their interest in the family estate. We have no evidence of this having ever been done by the early patricians. The practice seems rather to have crept in on the strength of the uti legassit⁹ suae rei, ita jus esto of the XII Tables,—“as a man shall settle in reference to his estate (res = res familiaris), so shall it be law”; words, we are told, which were interpreted with the utmost latitude, as sanctioning and confirming every provision in a testament that dealt either with the interests of the subject members of the testator’s family or the disposal of his property.¹⁰ But so repugnant was it to the ideas entertained of the relation of a filiusfamilias to the family estate as one of its joint-owners, that it was in every way discountenanced. Nothing short of express disherison could deprive him of his birthright (p. 162). The omission by his father either to institute or disinherit him in a testament conceived in favour of a stranger was not legare in the sense of the statute; consequently it did not deprive him of his inheritance, but, on the contrary, rendered the will ineffectual (p. 162). And so impressed was Justinian with the undutifulness of disherison of children, that he forbade it except on the ground of gross misconduct specially narrated in the testament (p. 396).

⁸ Gell. i. 9, 12, "Societas inseparabilis, tamquam illud fuit antiquum consortium, quod jure atque verbo Romano appellabatur 'ercto non cito.'" Serv. in Aen. viii. 624, "Ercto non cito, i.e. patrimonio vel hereditate non divisa." See Leist, Zur Gesch. der röm. Societas, Jena, 1881, p. 20 sq. Festus, v. Sors, [Bruna, 6th ed. ii. p. 41] says sors meant patrimonium; hence consortium. But literally it was the allotment of land—what was assigned by lot—to its original owner. [Cf. Cuq, pp. 86, 289, and Karlowa, Röm. RG. ii. p. 652.]

It is hardly credible, therefore, that the practice could have found acceptance amongst the patricians of the time of the kings. It was foreign to early Aryan notions. A testament was unknown to the Hindus. There was no such thing in Sparta. There was none in Athens until introduced by the legislation of Solon, and it could never prejudice the inheritance of a son; while, if made by a man who had none, it was substantially a mortis causa deed of adoption, artificially supplying the descendant that nature had not seen fit to grant.¹¹ That the Romans had testaments from very early times is probably the fact: those made in the comitia of the curies and in presence of the army on the eve of battle bear the impress of antiquity.¹² But the first at least—and the second was just a substitute for it on an emergency—had in it nothing of the uti legassit ita jus esto. For, though in the course of time the curies may have become merely the recipients of the oral declaration by the testator of his last will (p. 159), in order that they might testify to it after his death, it is impossible not to see in the comitial testament what must originally have been a legislative act, whereby the testator's peers, for reasons which they and the presiding pontiffs thought sufficient, sanctioned in the particular case a departure from the ordinary rules of succession.¹³ The pontiffs were there to protect the interests of religion, and the curies to protect those of the testator's gens; and it is hardly conceivable that a testament could have been sanctioned by them which so far set at nought old traditions as to deprive a filiusfamilias of his birthright, at least in favour of a stranger.

⁹ Legare in the XII Tables did not, as in later times, bear the limited signification of bequeathing to a legatee, but embraced the whole expression of will of a testator. It meant legem dicere de re sua mortis causa. Justinian, in Nov. xxii. cap. 2, renders it by νομοθερεῖν.

¹⁰ [See Karlowa, Röm. RG. ii. p. 886; contra Girard, p. 830.]

¹¹ [On the absence of testamentary succession among primitive societies, see De Coulanges, Cité antique, ii. 7, 5. Beaudouin in Nouv. Rev. Hist. xii. 649—

It may be assumed that, de facto at all events, the children in potestate of a plebeian becoming sui juris by his death took his succession in the same way as the children of a patrician; (or rather, in regard to both, acquired by that event the free administration of the family estate, from which they had been excluded during their parent's lifetime).¹⁴ But as a plebeian was not a member of a gens, there was no provision for the devolution of his succession on failure of children. The want of them he could not supply by adroga-

"Le testament est une institution purement romaine inconnue non seulement du droit primitif (Tacite, Germ. 20) mais encore de toutes les lois qui ont conservé la physionomie germanique." Consult also Kovalewsky, Coutume contemporaine, p. 220; Pollock and Maitland, Hist. of English Law, i. p. 108.]

¹² Calatis comitiis and in procinctu, Gai. ii. 101. Comp. Gell. xv. 27, 3. [On the testamentum in procinctu, see Mommsen, SR. iii. 307, n. 2.]

¹³ Mommsen, SR. vol. ii. p. 37; Jhering, Geist, vol. i. § 11 b. [Bourcart (trad. Muirhead), p. 61 n. Whether an actual vote was taken in the comitia calata is a disputed question. See Girard, p. 780 sq.; Karlowa, Röm. RG. ii. p. 851.]

¹⁴ "Domestici heredes sunt, et vivo quoque parente quodammodo domini existimantur" (Gai. ii. 157); "itaque post mortem patris non hereditatem percipere videntur, sed magis liberam bonorum administrationem consequuntur" (Paul. in Dig. xxviii. 2, fr. 11). See infra, § 32.

tion, as for long he had no access to the assembly of the curies;¹⁵ and it is very doubtful if adoption of a filiusfamilias was known before the reforms of Servius Tullius. The same cause that disqualified him from adrogating a paterfamilias disqualified him for making a testament calatis comitiis;¹⁶ and even one in procinctu was impossible, since, even though before the time of Servius plebeians may occasionally have served in the army, yet they were not citizens, and so had not the requisite capacity for making it.¹⁷ Until, therefore, the Twelve Tables introduced the succession of agnates (p. 163), a plebeian unsurvived by children in potestate was necessarily heirless,—that is to say, heirless in law. But custom seems to have looked without disfavour on the appropriation of his heredium by an outsider,—a brother or other near kinsman would have the earliest opportunity; and if he maintained his possession of it in the character of heir for a reasonable period, fixed by the XII Tables at a year,¹⁸ the law dealt with him as heir, and the pontiffs in time imposed upon him the duty of maintaining the family sacra. This was the origin, and a very innocent and laudable one, of the usucapio pro herede (p. 170), which Gaius condemns as an incomprehensible and infamous institution, and which undoubtedly lost some of its

¹⁵ [See supra, p. 6, and infra, p. 64. The theory propounded by Niebuhr that the comitia curiata was always a purely patrician assembly and that the plebeians could not take part in it is not now universally accepted. It is opposed among others by Mommsen, SR. iii. pp. 92-94 (whose opinion however rests on the assumption that the plebeians and clientes were originally one and the same), and by Seeley, in his edition of Livy, pp. 62-69. Cf. Bloch, Les origines du sénat romain, p. 290 sq., who takes a modified view in restricting the eligibility to plebeians enrolled in the urban tribes. However this be, it seems to be generally admitted that the right to vote in the comitia curiata was restricted to the patricians. See also Karlowa, Röm. RG. i. 63 sq.; Bourcart (trad. Muirhead), p. 573.]

¹⁶ Gellius (as in note 9) says that there were calata comitia of the centuries as well as of the curies; but that, according to the general opinion, cannot have been until after the establishment of the republic. [There is no evidence that the comitia (calata) of the centuries was ever used for making testaments.]

¹⁷ Citizenship was, and to the last continued to be, the fundamental requisite of testamentary capacity: see Gai. ii. 147; Just. Inst. ii. 17, 6. "Testamenti factio est juris publici," says Papinian; it had originally been the act of a citizen in his public character as a member of the comitia, and, although the reason probably was forgotten, the consequences remained.

¹⁸ Gai. ii. §§ 53, 54.

raison d'être once the right of succession of agnates had been introduced.¹⁹

SECTION 12.—BREACH OF CONTRACT, AND PRIVATE AND PUBLIC OFFENCES

To speak of a law of obligations in connection with the regal period, in the sense in which the words were understood in the later jurisprudence, would be a misapplication of language. It would be going too far to say, as is sometimes done, that before the time of Servius Rome had no law of contract; for men must have bought and sold, or at least bartered, from earliest times,—must have rented houses, hired labour, made loans, carried goods, and been parties to a variety of other transactions inevitable amongst a people engaged to any extent in pastoral, agricultural, or trading pursuits. It is true that a patrician family with a good establishment of clients and slaves had within itself ample machinery for supplying its ordinary wants, and was thus to some extent independent of outside aid; but there were not many such families; and the plebeian farmers and the artisans of the guilds were in no such fortunate position. There must therefore have been contracts and a law of contract; but the latter was very imperfect. In barter,—for at that time money was not in use,—with instant exchange and delivery of one commodity against another, the transaction was complete at once without the creation of any obligation. But in other cases, such as those alluded to, one of the parties at least must have trusted to the good faith of the other. What was his guarantee, and what remedy had he for breach of engagement? His reliance in the first place was on the probity of the party with whom he was dealing,—on the latter's reverence for Fides (p. 22), and the dread he had of the disapprobation of his fellows should he prove false, and of the penalties, social, religious, or pecuniary, that might consequently be imposed on him by his gens or his guild.¹ If the party who had to rely on the other's good faith was not satisfied with his promise, and the grasp of the right hand that was its seal,² he might require his solemn oath (jusjurandum). Cicero speaks again and again of the sanctity of an oath, and its potency in holding men to their word;³ and Gellius remarks on the extreme rarity of failure to perform an undertaking entered into in sight and hearing of a deity (deo teste).⁴ Dionysius mentions that the altar of Hercules (ara maxima) in the cattle-market, and which is said to have existed before Rome itself, was the resort of those who desired to bind each other by covenant;⁵ and it can hardly be doubted that, whatever may have been the case at a later period, in the time of the earlier kings he who forswore himself was amenable to pontifical discipline.

¹⁹ [Carle, Origini, pp. 182, 183, has a theory regarding the legal position of the plebeians which deserves notice in this connection—viz. that while none of the ordinary fixed rules of the jus or fas were properly applicable to them they were governed by custom—usus—alone. Long and notorious usus became the sanction of their rights: hence their marriages became legal usæ; possession was thus converted into property; and on death a title was acquired by usucapio pro herede.]

If the promisee desired a more substantial security, he took something in pledge or pawn from the other contractor; and though he had no legal title to it, and so could not recover it by judicial process if he lost possession, yet so long as he retained it he had in his own hand a de facto compulsitor to performance. Upon performance he could be forced to return it or suffer a penalty; not by reason of obligation resulting from a contract of pledge, for the law as yet recognised none, but because, in retaining it after the purpose was served for which he had received it, he was committing theft and liable to its punishment.

¹ Such as debarment from gentile or guild privileges, exclusion from right of burial in the gentile or guild sepulchre, fines in the form of cattle and sheep, etc.

² Some of the old writers (e.g. Liv. i. 21, § 4, xxiii. 9, 3; Plin. H. N. xi. 45; Serv. in Aen. iii. 607) say that the seat of Fides was in the right hand, and that to give it (promittere dextram,—is this the origin of the word “promise”?) in making an engagement was emphatically a pledge of faith. See a variety of texts illustrating the significance of the practice, and testifying to the regard paid to Fides before foreign influences and example had begun to corrupt men's probity and trustworthiness, in Lasaulx, Ueber d. Eid bei d. Römern (Würzburg, 1844), p. 5 sq.; Danz, Sacrale Schutz, pp. 139, 140; Pernice, Labeo, vol. i. p. 408 sq.

³ E.g. De Off. iii. 31, § 111.

⁴ “Jusjurandum apud Romanos inviolate sancteque habitum servatumque est. Id et moribus legibusque multis ostenditur” (Noct. Att. vii. 18, 1).

⁵ Dion. Hal. i. 40.

At this stage breach of contract, as such, founded no action for damages or reparation before the tribunals; but it is not improbable that, where actual loss had been sustained, the injured party was permitted to resort immediately to self-redress by seizure of the wrongdoer or his goods. Self-help was according to the spirit of the time; not self-defence merely, in presence of imminent danger, but active measures for redress of wrongs already completed. Vindication of a right of property (p. 182) was originally, and possibly still in the first days of the kings, an actual display of force,—a fight between the contending parties; and manus injectio (§ 36) and pignoris capio (§ 37), arrest of a debtor and distraint on his goods, both of them acts not of officers of the law but of the creditor himself, survived, under statutory or customary restrictions, all through the republic.

For anything like a clear line of demarcation between crimes, offences, and civil injuries we look in vain in regal Rome. Offences against the state itself, such as trafficking with an enemy for its overthrow (proditio) or treasonable practices at home (perduellio), were of course matter of state concern, prosecution, and punishment from the first. But in the case of those that primarily affected an individual or his estate, there was a halting between, and to some extent a confusion of the three systems of private vengeance, sacral atonement, and public or private penalty.⁶ The coexistence of those systems has been attempted to be explained by reference to the different temperaments of the races that constituted united Rome;⁷ and this certainly is a consideration that cannot be left out of view. But the same sequence is observable in the history of the laws of other nations whose original elements were not so mixed, the later system gradually gaining ground upon the earlier and eventually overwhelming it.

The remarkable thing in Rome is that private vengeance should so long not only have left traces but continued to be an active power. It must still have been an admitted right of the gens or kinsmen of a murdered man in the days of Numa ; otherwise we should not have had that law of his providing that where a homicide was due to misadventure, the offering to them of a ram should stay their hands.⁸ To avenge the death of a kinsman was more than a right—it was a religious duty, for his manes had to be appeased ; and so strongly was this idea entertained, that, even long after the state had interfered and made murder a matter of public prosecution, a kinsman was so imperatively bound to set it in motion that, if he failed, he was not permitted to take anything of the inheritance of the deceased.⁹ Private vengeance was lawful too at the instance of a husband or father who surprised his wife or daughter in an act of adultery ; he might kill her and her paramour on the spot, though, if he allowed his wrath to cool, he could afterwards deal with her only judicially in his domestic tribunal. The talion we read of in the Twelve Tables¹⁰ is also redolent of the vindicta privata, although practically it had become no more than a compulsitor to reparation.¹¹ And even the nexal creditor's imprisonment of his defaulting debtor (§ 31), which was not abolished until the fifth century of the city, may not unfittingly, in view of the cruelties that too often attended it, be said to have savoured more of private vengeance than either punishment or procedure in reparation.

⁶ See Abegg, De antiquissimo Romanorum jure criminali (Regiom. 1823), p. 36 sq.; Rein, Das Criminalrecht der Römer (Leipsic, 1844), p. 24 sq.; Clark, Early Roman Law, p. 34 sq.

⁷ Rein (as in last note), p. 39 sq.

Expiatio, supplicium, sacratio capitis, all suggest offences against the gods rather than against either an individual or the state. But it is difficult to draw the line between different classes of offences, and predicate of one that it was a sin, of another that it was a crime, and of a third that it was but civil injury done to an individual.¹² They ran into each other

⁸ See § 11, note 2 ; Clark, Early Rom. Law, p. 47 sq. [Probably the ram was offered up as a propitiatory sacrifice. See infra, p. 102.]

⁹ [A survival of this kind of blood revenge may be traced in the vendetta of the south of Europe. The Judaic law similarly recognised blood revenge.—Deuteronomy xxiv. 16. See also Kovalewsky, Coutume contemporaine, chap. vi.]

¹⁰ Gell. xx. 1, 14.

¹¹ [Infra, p. 102.]

¹² Voigt (XII Tafeln, vol. i. p. 484) observes that the patrician looked upon every offence as committed at once against gods and men, and held that the punishment should be one that satisfied both ; hence the deo necari, sacratio capitis, and consecratio bonorum. The plebeians regarded its two moments as separable ; and (as appears from the spirit of the XII Tables) left it to the

in a way that is somewhat perplexing. Apparently the majority of those specially mentioned in the so-called leges regiae (p. 20) and other records of the regal period were regarded as violations of divine law, and the punishments appropriate to them determined upon that footing. Yet in many of them the prosecution was left to the state or to private individuals. It is not clear, indeed, that there was any machinery for public prosecution except in treason and murder,—the former because it was essentially a state offence, the latter because it was comparatively early deemed expedient to repress the blood-feud, which was apt to lead to deplorable results when friends and neighbours appeared to defend the alleged assassin.¹³

Take some of those offences whose recognised sanction was sacratio capitis. Breach of duty resulting from the fiduciary relation between patron and client, maltreatment of a parent by his child, exposure or killing of a child by its father contrary to the Romulian rules, the ploughing up or removal of a boundary stone, the slaughter of a plough-ox,—all these were capital offences; the offender, by the formula sacer esto, was devoted to the infernal gods. Festus says that, although the rules of divine law did not allow that he should be offered as a sacrifice to the deity he had especially offended (nec fas est eum immolari), yet he was so utterly beyond the pale of the law and its protection that any one might kill him with impunity.¹⁴ But, as the sacratio was usually coupled with forfeiture of the offender's estate or part of it to religious uses, it is probable that steps were taken to have the outlawry pontiffs to protect the gods, putting it on the state to protect itself by ordinary death punishment, addition into slavery, declaration of improbilas or intestability, talion, and pecuniary penalties. [See Beaudouin, Nouv. Rev. Hist. vol. xi. p. 643, n. 1.]

¹³ On murder (parricidium) in regal Rome see Osenbrüggen, Das altrömische Parricidium (Kiel, 1841), and review by Dollmann in Richter's Krit. Jahrb. vol. xi. (1842), p. 144 sq.; Clark, Early Roman Law, p. 41 sq.

¹⁴ Festus, v. Sacer mons (Bruns, p. 288). This penalty is thought by Niebuhr and others to have been a survival of actual human sacrifice in pre-Roman Italy. The matter is discussed by Rein (as in note 6), p. 33 sq. On the position of the homo sacer see Lange, De consecratione capitis et bonorum, Giessen, 1867, and literature referred to there on pp. 9, 10; also Jhering, Geist, vol. i. § 18. [Gaddi (trad. Muirhead), p. 28, note 52.]

or excommunication judicially declared, though whether by the pontiffs, the king, or the curies does not appear;¹⁵ such a declaration would, besides, relieve the private avenger of the incensed god of the chance of future question as to whether or not the citizen he had slain was sacer in the eye of law.

That there must have been numerous other wrongful acts that were regarded in early Rome as deserving of punishment or penalty of some sort, besides those visited with death, sacration, or forfeiture of estate total or partial, cannot be doubted; no community has ever been so happy as to know nothing of thefts, robberies, and assaults. The XII Tables contained numerous provisions in reference to them; but it is extremely probable that, down at least to the time of Servius Tullius, the manner of dealing with them rested on custom, and was in the main self-redress, restrained by the intervention of the king when it appeared to him the injured party was going beyond the bounds of fair reprisal, and frequently bought off with a composition. When the offence was strictly within the family, the gens, and perhaps the guild, it was for those who exercised jurisdiction over those corporations to judge of the wrong and prescribe and enforce the penalty.

¹⁵ Festus (as in last note) says the sacratio was a sentence by the assembly of the people. But he is referring specially to the sacratio resulting from a contravention of the leges sacratae of the early republic. In time it was displaced by "interdiction of fire and water"—practically a sentence of exile.

CHAPTER IV

REFORMS OF SERVIUS TULLIUS¹

SECTION 13.—EFFECT OF HIS REFORMS ON THE LAW OF PROPERTY

THE aim of the constitutional, military, and financial reforms of Servius was to promote an advance towards equality between patricians and plebeians. While it may be an open question whether the institution of the comitia of the centuries was of his doing, or only a result of his arrangements in after years, yet it seems clear that he had it in view to admit the plebeians to some at least of the privileges of citizenship, imposing on them at the same time a proportionate share of its duties and burdens. Privileges, duties, and burdens were alike to be measured by the citizen's position as a freeholder; the amount of the real estate with its appurtenances held by him on quiritarian title was to determine the nature of the military service he was to render, the extent to which he was to be liable for tribute, and, assuming Servius to have contemplated the creation of a new assembly, the influence he was to exercise in it.²

To facilitate his scheme he established a register of the citizens (census), which was to contain, in addition to a record of the strength of their families, a statement of the value of their lands and appurtenances, and which was to be revised periodically. In order to ensure as far as possible certainty of title, and to relieve the officials of troublesome investigations of the genuineness of every alleged change of ownership between two valuations, it was declared that no transfer would be recognised which had not been effected publicly, with observance of certain solemnities, or else by surrender in court before the supreme magistrate (in jure cessio).³ The form of conveyance thus introduced got the name of mancipium, and at a later period mancipatio, while the lands and other things that were to pass by it came to be known—whether from the first or not is of little moment—as res Mancipi. Hence arose a distinction of great importance in the law of property (and which was only abolished by Justinian more than a thousand years later)⁴ between res Mancipi, transferable in quiritarian right only by mancipation or surrender in court, and res nec Mancipi, transferable by simple delivery.

¹ Huschke, Die Verfassung d. Königs Servius Tullius, Heidelberg, 1838.

² [Concurrence in this view depends upon the acceptance of the author's theory that the Romans recognised individual ownership in land, apart from the hereditas, as early as Servius Tullius. The terms "freeholder" and "real estate" must not, of course, be taken in a technical sense.]

Mancipation⁵ is described by Gaius, but with particular reference to the conveyance of movable res Mancipi, as a pretended sale in presence of five citizens as witnesses and a libripens holding a pair of copper scales. The transferee, with one hand on the thing being transferred, and using certain words of style, declared it his by purchase with an as (which he held in his other hand) and the scales (hoc aere aeneaque libra); and simultaneously he struck the scales with the coin, which he then handed to the transferrer as figurative of the price.⁶ The principal variation when it was an immovable that was being transferred was that the mancipation did not require to be on the spot;⁷ the land was simply described by its known name in the valuation roll. Although in the time of Gaius only a fictitious sale,—in fact the formal conveyance

³ The nature of in jure cessio is explained on p. 137.

⁴ Cod. Just. vii. 31 (de usucap. transform. et de sublata differentia rerum Mancipi et nec Mancipi). [As to the date of mancipatio see Girard, p. 278.]

⁵ Leist, Mancipation und Eigentumstradition (Jena, 1865), §§ 2-39, and rev. by Bekker, in Krit. VJS. vol. ix. (1867), p. 232 sq.; Jhering, Geist, vol. ii. § 46; Maine, Ancient Law, p. 318 sq.; Clark, Early Roman Law, p. 108 sq.; Bechmann, Gesch. d. Kaufes im röm. Recht (Erlangen, 1876), §§ 5-36; Voigt, XII Tafeln, vol. i. § 22, vol. ii. §§ 84-88, 126. [Carle, Origini, p. 203 and p. 490 sq.]

⁶ Gai. i. 121. [As to the origin of the words of style see a suggestion of Jhering, Vorgesch. d. Indoeurop. p. 256, n. 232.]

⁷ Gai. i. 121; Ulp. Frag. xix. 6. [See infra, p. 60, n. 21.]

upon a relative contract,—yet it was not always so. Its history is very simple. The use of the scales fixes its introduction to a time when coined money was not yet current, but raw copper nevertheless had become a standard of value and in a manner a medium of exchange. That, however, was not in the first days of Rome. Then, and for a long time, values were estimated in cattle or sheep, fines were imposed in them,⁸ and the deposits in the legis actio sacramento (§ 34) took the same form.⁹ The use of copper as a substitute for them in private transactions was probably derived from Etruria. But, being only raw metal or foreign coins, it could be made available for loans or payments only when weighed in the scales; it passed by weight, not by tale.¹⁰ There is no reason for supposing that the weighing was a solemnity,—that it had any significance beyond its obvious purpose of enabling parties to ascertain that a vendor or borrower was getting the amount of copper for which he had bargained.

It was this very simple practice of everyday life in private transactions that Servius adopted as the basis of his mancipatory conveyance, engrafting on it one or two new features intended to give it publicity and as it were state sanction, and thus render it more serviceable in the transfer of censuable property. Instead of the parties themselves using the scales, an impartial balance holder, probably an official,¹¹ was required to undertake the duty, and five citizens were required to attend as witnesses, who were to be the vouchers to the census officials of the

⁸ “Romulus . . . multae dictione ovium et bovis—quod tum erat res in pecore et locorum possessionibus, ex quo pecuniosi et locupletes vocabantur—non vi et suppliciis coercebat” (Cic. De Rep. ii. 9, § 16). The Aternian law of 300 u.c., in fixing the maximum of magisterial mulcts, still did so in sheep and oxen; it was only by the lex Julia Papiria of 324 that they were converted into money (Marquardt, Röm. Staatsverwalt. vol. ii. p. 6). Pecus gave its name to pecunia (Varro, De L. L. v. 95, Bruns, p. 301). [Cf. Karlowa, Röm. RG. ii. p. 363.]

⁹ Huschke, Die Multa und das Sacramentum (Leipsic, 1874), p. 387. The XII Tables fixed the amount of these deposits in money. [Vide infra, p. 188, n. 18.]

¹⁰ Gai. i. 122.

¹¹ Danz (Gesch. d. r. R. § 143, note 6) refers to an inscription (preserved in Orelli's collection, No. 4012, and Willmann's, No. 1895) in which two persons are designated “Iiviri libripendes.” The scales, too, may have been state scales; for Varro (De L. L. v. 183, Bruns, p. 303) mentions that in his day a pair was still preserved in the temple of Saturn. [Kuntze, Excursus, p. 172.]

regularity of the procedure. They are generally supposed to have been intended as representatives of the five classes in which Servius had distributed the population, and thus virtually of the state; and the fact that, when the parties appealed to them for their testimony, they were addressed not as testes but as Quirites,¹² lends some colour to this view. Servius is also credited with the introduction of rectangular pieces of copper of different but carefully adjusted weights, stamped by his authority with various devices (aes signatum),¹³ which are supposed to have been intended to come in place of the raw metal (aes rude)¹⁴ formerly in use, and so facilitate the process of weighing.¹⁵ If so, it is not easy to understand why weighing should have continued to be the characteristic feature of the transaction down to the time of the XII Tables; for what could be gained by passing through the scales ten bars which were known to weigh each a certain number of pounds? It is more likely that they were cast and stamped as standards, which were put into one scale while the raw metal whose weight was to be ascertained was put into the other.

Instead, therefore, of being a fictitious sale as Gaius describes it, and as it became after the introduction of coined money early in the fourth century (p. 129), the mancipium or mancipation, as regulated by Servius, was an actual completed sale in the strictest sense of the term. What were the precise words of style addressed by the transferee to the transferrer, or what exactly the form of the ceremonial, we know not. But, as attendance during all the time that

¹² Gai. ii. 104. [Objections to the above theory are stated by Cuq, p. 255. See also Bourcart (trad. Muirhead), p. 172; Karlowa, Röm. RG. ii. p. 370.]

¹³ Plin. H. N. xviii. 3, "Servius rex ovum bovumque effigie primus aes signavit." Specimens exist in many museums.

¹⁴ Varro, De L. L. v. 163 (Bruns, p. 302); Festus, v. Rodius (Bruns, p. 288).

¹⁵ Mommsen (Gesch. d. röm. Münzwesens, Leipsic, 1860) suggests that the stamping was a guarantee not of the weight but of the purity of the metal. The notion is entertained by some jurists that the solemn weighing of the copper, whether stamped bars, rough lumps, or foreign coins, converted it into money. This is as meaningless as it is fanciful. The metal was no more money after it was weighed and handed to a vendor or borrower than it had been before,—it was still just so many pounds' weight of copper. If he had to use it next day in a transaction per aes et libram it would have to be weighed afresh.

some thousands of pounds perhaps of copper were being weighed would have been an intolerable burden upon the five citizens convoked to discharge a public duty, it may be surmised that it early became the practice to have the price weighed beforehand, and then to reweigh, or pretend to reweigh, before the witnesses only a single little bit of metal (raudusculum),¹⁶ which the transferee then handed to the transferrer as "the first pound and the last," and thus representative of the whole.¹⁷ Whatever may have been its form, however, its effect was instant exchange of property against a price weighed in the scales. The resulting obligation on the vendor to maintain the title of the vendee, and the qualifications that might be superinduced on the conveyance by agreement of parties,—the so-called leges Mancipii,—will be considered in connection with the provisions of the XII Tables on the subject (§ 30).

Why this form of conveyance got the name of mancipium or mancipatio, why those things, to whose effectual transfer by a private party in quiritarian right either it or surrender in court was essential, were called res Mancipi, and what were the considerations that determined the selection of the things that should or should not be included in this class, are questions that have been much discussed. The explanation of Gaius,¹⁸ that mancipation was so called because in the process the transferee took with his hand the thing that was being transferred to him (quia manu res capitur), has been accepted in many quarters much too readily. Great as is the authority of Gaius, he was not infallible, least of all in a question of etymology. If there was one point on which Roman jurists and grammarians displayed weakness it was this, as witness their derivation, apparently in all seriousness, of testamentum from testatio mentis, mutuum from de meo tuum, oratio from oris ratio.¹⁹

¹⁶ Hence the request the scale-bearer made to the transferee, "touch the scales with a small piece of the metal" (raudusculo libram ferito),—words, says Festus, that were still used after coined money (which was counted, not weighed) had taken the place of the raw copper, and when it was with a coin and not a bit of metal that the scales were struck. [s. v. Rodus, in Bruns, 6th ed. ii. p. 33.]

¹⁷ The conjecture is suggested by the words of style in the solutio per aes et libram, Gai. iii. §§ 173, 174. There were some debts from which a man could be effectually discharged only by payment (latterly fictitious) by copper and scales, in the presence of a libripens and the usual five witnesses. In the words addressed to the creditor by the debtor making payment these occurred—hanc tibi libram primam postremamque expendo ("I weigh out to you this the first and last pound"). The idea is manifestly archaic, and the words in their letter quite inappropriate to the transaction in the form it had reached long before the time of Gaius.

¹⁸ Gai. i. 121.

The fundamental mistake lies in supposing that the notion embodied in the word is manu capere instead of manum capere.²⁰ There was no taking with the hand when land or a house was being conveyed, for the parties did not require to be near them;²¹ and there could be none in the mancipation of a praedial servitude, for it was intangible. As already observed, the early law had no word that specially denoted ownership. The generic manus answered the purpose. By it was understood the power or right of the head of a house over the persons and things that were subject to him.²² Mancipere or mancipare, therefore, was simply to acquire manus, i.e. dominion or ownership.²³ Possibly the acquirer

¹⁹ See many other instances in Duker, Opusc. de latinitate JCorum veterum, Leyden, 1711, p. 462 sq.

²⁰ No aid can be taken from usucapere, for that really meant manum usucapere.

²¹ Gai. i. 121; Ulp. Frag. xix. 6. [It may be, however, that originally lands did require to be mancipated in praesentia, and that afterwards a sod or other symbol was used to represent them, though this was not adhered to in practice as it was in the actio sacramento. There would thus be a proper harmony between the forms of the conveyance and of the action. But the absence of the parties from the lands conveyed is better explained by the theory that mancipation was at first confined to certain movables and afterwards extended to lands and other immovables. The language of Gaius, i. § 121, seems to support this theory. See also Bourcart, (trad. Muirhead), p. 186, n. 46 and authorities there cited; Cuq, Inst. Jurid. pp. 82, 258; Karlowa, Röm. RG. ii. p. 352.]

²² See § 9, note 3. For examples of the employment of the word in reference to one and all of the subject members of the household, see Rossbach, Die röm. Ehe, p. 28, and Voigt, XII Tafeln, vol. ii. p. 84. We have evidence of its employment in reference to things in the manum conserere of the sacramental action in rem (see § 34, note 6).

²³ [This theory of the origin of mancipatio is open to the serious objection that it places the abstract idea of power before the natural or physical symbol of power. Manus, the hand, is the natural symbol, and seizing or holding with the hand is the exercise of power. Among primitive societies it is certain that the progression of ideas is from the simple and obvious to the abstract. So conventio in manum in marriage did not mean originally agreement for manus, but the junction of right hands of the spouses—dextrarum junctio—which accompanied the ceremony was sometimes called manceps.²⁴ Mancipium (or mancupium) was used in three distinct though cognate senses,—(1) the power or mastery of the manceps, and thus synonymous with manus; ²⁵ (2) the thing over which that mastery extended, but most frequently a slave; ²⁶ (3) the process of law whereby any person and some things in manu mancipiove were transferred and acquired.²⁷ It must have been from mancipium in the last of these senses that the phrase res Mancipi (i.e. mancipi) was derived; if from the first it would more properly have been rendered res in mancipio; and it is out of the question that it can have been derived from the second. We reach, therefore, the same conclusion as Gaius,²⁸—that res Mancipi meant a thing passing by mancipatory process.

According to the enumeration of Gaius and Ulpian, the things included in the class of res Mancipi were lands and houses in Italy or in those districts in the provinces enjoying jus italicum (§ 52, n. 4),—in other words, lands and houses held on quiritarian title, together with rights of way and aqueduct, slaves, and domestic beasts of draught or burden (oxen, horses, mules, and donkeys); all other things, including of marriage. Compare the use of caput in capitis deminutio. As to capio in its juristic sense being joined with the ablative case (e.g. usucapio, usureceptio), see Carle, Origini, p. 204 n. and 490 n.]

²⁴ The progression is the same as in primus, princeps, principium; avis, auceps, aucupium, aucupari, etc. Manceps occurs in the sense of owner in Tertull. De idolol. 1. In the later republic and early empire it had many special meanings, for which see Forcellini. [See H. Krüger, Gesch. der cap. dem. p. 115 sq.]

²⁵ As in Gell. xviii. 6, 9.

²⁶ Just. Inst. i. 3, 3.

²⁷ As in the famous provision in the XII Tables, “cum nexum faciet mancipiumque, uti lingua nuncupasset ita jus esto.” In every case, without exception, in which the process of mancipium was resorted to there was acquisition of manus in the old meaning of the word,—mancipation of things, coemption (p. 66), giving of a filiusfamilias in adoption, passing a filiusfamilias into the hand of a third party as a mancipium with a view to his emancipation, the same with a woman in order to effect her release from marital manus, the noxal upgiving of a filiusfamilias or slave to the party he had wronged (p. 116), and the familiae emptio of the testament per aes et libram (p. 161).

²⁸ Gai. ii. 22. [Sohm describes res Mancipi as wörtlich “Manzipationssachen.” Inst. d. r. R. p. 199 n. Emancipatio had originally the same signification as mancipatio (e.g. Gell. xv. 27, 3: Cic. De Fin. i. 7, 24; De Senect. ii. 38), though usually restricted by the classical jurists to the liberation of a child from potestas.]

provincial lands generally (their ownership being in the state), were res nec Mancipi. In the time of Servius and during the greater part of the republic the domain land (ager publicus) in Italy, until it was appropriated by private owners, was also reckoned as res nec Mancipi; like all other things of the same class it passed by simple delivery, whereas res Mancipi could not be transferred in full ownership except by mancipation or surrender in court. Many are the theories that have been propounded to account for the distinction between these two classes of things, and to explain the principle of selection that admitted oxen and horses into the one, but relegated sheep and swine, ships and vehicles to the other.²⁹ But there is really little difficulty. Under the arrangement of Servius what was to determine the nature and extent of a citizen's political qualifications, military duties, and financial burdens was the value of his heredium (and other freeholds, if he had any), and what may be called its appurtenances,—the slaves that worked for the household, the slaves and beasts of draught and burden that worked the farm, and the servitudes of way and water that ran with the latter. It may be that in course of time slaves without exception were dealt with as res Mancipi,—without consideration, that is to say, whether they were employed on their owner's house or farm or on any part of the public lands in his occupancy (§ 19); and reasonably, because they were often shifted from the one to the other. But the cattle a man depastured on the public meadows were no more res Mancipi than his sheep.³⁰ To say that the things classed as res Mancipi

²⁹ See a summary of the principal ones in Danz, Gesch. d. r. R. vol. i. § 119. [Bourcart (trad. Muirhead, p. 82 n.) supports in the main the view expressed in the text and cites recent authorities. See Carle, Origini, pp. 432-435; Karlowa, Röm. RG. ii. p. 356, explains res Mancipi as things which the paterfamilias needed for "Bewirthschaftung."]

³⁰ Ulpian (Frag. xix. 1), in enumerating the animals that were res Mancipi, expressly limits them to those broken to yoke or burden; and Gaius, though in one passage he mentions oxen without any qualification, yet in another (ii. 15) records it as the opinion of some jurists that animals did not become res Mancipi on birth, but only when broken in, or at least when they had reached the usual age for putting them under yoke or girth. [The Sabinian view, that it was immaterial whether the animals had or had not in fact been used for draught or burden, seems ultimately to have prevailed; see Girard, p. 242, n. 7.]

were selected for that distinction by Servius because they were what were essential to a family engaged in agricultural pursuits would be to fall short of the truth. They constituted the familia in the sense of the family estate proper;⁸¹ whereas the herds and flocks, and in time everything else belonging to the paterfamilias, fell under the denomination of pecunia. So the words are to be understood in the well-known phraseology of a testament, familia pecuniæque mea.⁸²

SECTION 14.—INCIDENTAL EFFECTS OF HIS REFORMS ON THE LAW OF THE FAMILY, OF SUCCESSION, AND OF CONTRACT

In alluding in a previous section (p. 34) to the family institutions of the plebeians it was explained that prior to the time of Servius their unions were not, in the estimation of the patricians at least, regarded as lawful marriages (justæ nuptiæ), although amongst themselves they may have been held effectual, and productive, if not of manus, at all events of patria potestas. For this there were two reasons—(1) that, not being citizens, they did not possess the preliminary qualification for justæ nuptiæ, namely, conubium, and (2) that, not being patricians, the only ceremony of marriage known to the law was incompetent to them. The first obstacle was removed by their admission by Servius to the ordinary rights of citizenship, the second by the introduction of the civil marriage ceremony of coemption.¹ This was an adaptation of the mancipatio described in the preceding section. Once the efficacy of the latter as a mode of acquiring manus over things was established, its adoption by the plebeians, now citizens enjoying conubium, as a method of acquiring manus over their wives,² was extremely natural. The scales, the libripens, and ⁸¹ See § 9, note 2.

⁸² Gai. ii. 104. [See supra, § 9, n. 2; Cuq, Inst. Jurid. p. 92; Jhering, Vorgesch. d. Indoeurop. p. 84; cf. Girard, p. 243, n. 3, and p. 782, n. 3, who thinks that by the time of the XII Tables the two terms were used indiscriminately to indicate a man's patrimonium; Mommsen, SR. iii. p. 23.]

¹ See Rossbach, Röm. Ehe, p. 65 sq.; Karlowa, Röm. Ehe, p. 43 sq.; Voigt, XII Tafeln, vol. ii. §§ 158, 159. [Rein's 1st Excursus in 2nd vol. of Becker's Gallus.]

² It was not necessary for creation of the patria potestas; that, as the history of the later marriage law amply testifies, was a necessary civil consequence of the five witnesses were all there; but, as there was no real price to be paid, the only copper that was needed was a single raudusculum. The words recited in the ceremonial, unfortunately not preserved, were necessarily different from those of an ordinary mancipation.³ According to the testimony of a considerable number of ancient writers, and as the word coemptio itself seems to indicate (though disputed by most modern civilians), the nominal purchase was mutual; the man acquired a materfamilias, who was to bear him children and enable him to perpetuate his family, while she acquired a paterfamilias, who was to maintain her while the marriage lasted, and in whose succession she was to share when a widow.⁴ It was accompanied with other observances described by many of the lay writers, but which were matters of usage and fashion rather than law; and might be, and often was, accompanied also with religious rites, which, however, were private, not public, as in confarreatio.

To the introduction of mancipation is also due a device resorted to by the plebeians for disposing of their estates in contemplation of death. Their elevation to the rank of citizens did not apparently give them admission to the comitia of the curies; ⁵ and, as it was many years after the assassination of Servius before that of the centuries was ever convened, they had still no means of making testaments unless perhaps in the field on the eve of battle. So here again the expedient of mancipation was taken advantage of,⁶ not indeed to make a testament instituting an heir, and to take effect only on the death of the testator,—the form of the transaction, as an instant acquisition in exchange for a price real or nominal, could not lend itself to that without statutory intervention,—but to carry the transferrer's *familia*⁷ to a friend, technically familiae emptor, on trust to let the former have the use of it justae nuptiae, although there might have been neither confarreatio nor coemptio.

³ Gai. i. 123.

⁴ On coemptio, see Appendix, Note B.

⁵ [See supra, p. 48.]

⁶ [See infra, p. 161.]

⁷ The familia was the collective name for a man's heredium and other lands, with their slaves and other mancipable appurtenances (§ 13 in fine),—an aggregate of res mancipi, and therefore itself capable of mancipation. The conveyance was universal, i.e. the items of the aggregate, even though movable, did

while he survived,⁸ and on his death to distribute according to his instructions whatever the transferee was not authorised to retain for himself.⁹ Like so many others of the transactions of the early law, it was legally unprotected so far as the third parties were concerned whom the transferrer meant to benefit; they had no action against the trustee to enforce the trust; their sole guarantee was in his integrity and respect for Fides. This mortis causa but inter vivos alienation was the forerunner of the testament per aes et libram, which will be described (§ 32) in connection with the provisions of the Twelve Tables in reference to succession.

Dionysius credits Servius with the authorship of more than fifty enactments relative to contracts and crimes, which, he says, were submitted to and approved by the assembly of the curies.¹⁰ This statement can hardly be accepted as it stands. That a few such laws may have been enacted by him, either at his own hand or with the assistance of the curies, such as that imposing the penalties of confiscation of his estate, scourging, and sale beyond Tiber as a slave, upon a citizen who failed periodically to report himself at the taking of the census, can be admitted without difficulty; but the majority of them were probably nothing more than formularisations of customary law for the use of the private judges in civil causes whom he is said to have instituted. There was not require to be conveyed separately or to be handled in conveying; and apparently the pecunia was carried along with the familia as an accessory, at least if expressly mentioned. [Supra, p. 63.]

⁸ Sir Henry Maine (Ancient Law, p. 206) is of opinion that, as a mancipation could not be subject to a limitation either of condition or time, there must have been not only instant but total divestiture of the transferrer. But this was not necessarily the result; for it was the commonest thing in the world for the transferrer in a mancipation to reserve a life-interest (Gai. ii. 33); and a reservation of a life-interest in one's own familia would possibly be construed even more liberally than an ordinary usufruct. See infra, p. 160.

⁹ It is a question what was the exact position of the beneficiaries in relation to the deceased after the trust was fulfilled. Were they bound to maintain the sacra of the deceased's family? They could not be so as his heirs, for they lacked that character. Perhaps it was to meet the case of persons in their position that the pontiffs first began to modify the rules on the subject, adopting as their leading principle, "Ut, ne morte patriafamilias sacrorum memoria occideret, iis essent ea adjuncta ad quem ejusdem morte pecunia veniret" (Cic. De Leg. ii. 19, 47). See p. 170.

¹⁰ Dion. iv. 13.

one contract, however, notorious in after years under the name of nexum, that manifestly was influenced, either directly or indirectly, by his legislation. In its normal estate it was a loan of money, or rather of the raw copper that as yet was all that stood for it. Whether before the time of Servius it was accompanied by any formalities beyond the weighing of it in a pair of scales (which was rather substance than form) we know not; and what right it conferred on the creditor over his debtor who failed to repay can only be matter of speculation. But there are indications that, in the exercise of undefined self-help, defaulters were treated with considerable severity, being taken in satisfaction and put in chains by their creditors; for Servius is reported to have promised to pay their debts himself in order to obtain their release, and to pass a law limiting execution by persons lending money at interest to the goods of their debtors.¹¹ Whether he fulfilled the first part of his promise we are not informed; but the second part of it was impracticable, since a debtor's failure to repay a loan was in most cases attributable to his insolvency and want of means with which to satisfy his creditors. So, apparently, Servius had to be content with regulating and ensuring the publicity of the contract, and making a creditor's right of self-redress by apprehension (manus injectio) and confinement of his debtor conditional on the observance of the prescribed formalities of the nexum. These were the weighing of the copper that was being advanced in a pair of scales held by an official libripens; the reweighing of a single piece in the presence of five citizen witnesses, and its delivery by the lender as representing the whole;¹² and the simultaneous recital of certain words of style, which had the effect of imposing on the borrower an obligation to repay the loan, usually with interest, by a certain day. The consequence of this, one of the earliest independent contracts of the jus civile, will be more appropriately considered in a subsequent section (§ 31).

The extension of the solemnities of mancipium to such very diverse transactions as nexal contract,¹³ coemption, adoption, emancipation of a filiusfamilias, release of a debtor, and execution of a testament has been commented upon as manifesting great poverty of invention on the part of the early Roman jurists. But the criticism is undeserved. In one and all of them, as already remarked,¹⁴ the same idea was involved,—acquisition of manus in the original meaning of the word.¹⁵ In all of them the process was intended to ensure deliberation on the part of those engaged in the transaction, certainty as to its terms, publicity, and preservation of evidence alike of the res gestae and of the words interchanged. Those objects are attained now by writing, and subscribing, and sealing, and attesting, and recording; and these solemnities, or some of them, we resort to without reference to the particular nature of the matter dealt with. The early Romans were not in the habit of embodying their deeds in writing. But the procedure as a whole was a guarantee for deliberateness; the touching of the scales with a bit of metal was as good an index that the transaction was perfect as the adhibiting of a seal; and the performance of the whole business in presence of five citizens, as representatives of the public, who were bound by statute to testify to it when required,¹⁶ was as fair a substitute for recording in a public register as the civilisation of the time could have provided.

¹¹ Dion. iv. capp. 9, 11.

¹² See § 13, nn. 12 and 17.

¹³ [Carle, Origini, pp. 477-479 gives reasons for regarding the nexum as the oldest application of the aes et libra and the mancipatio as a derivative of it.]

¹⁴ See § 13, note 27.

¹⁵ This was so even in the case of nexal contract and release of a nexal or judgment debtor. In the former, in consideration of the loan advanced, the creditor acquired a power over his debtor which entitled him to apprehend and imprison him; in the latter, in consideration of the loan repaid or judgment satisfied, the debtor acquired release from that power (me a te solvo liberoque hoc aere aeneaque libra, Gai. iii. 174); in other words, he reacquired over himself that manus which, by nexum or judgment, had been conferred on his creditor (see §§ 31, 36).

¹⁶ The XII Tables, according to Gellius (xv. 13, 11), contained a provision that if a man who had suffered himself to be called as a witness, or who had acted as a libripens, refused to declare his testimony when required, he should be reckoned dishonourable, and be incapable in future of executing, or being a witness to, or taking any benefit under, a deed requiring the testimony of witnesses,—“Qui se sierit testari libripensve fuerit, ni testimonium fariatur inprobns intestabilisque esto.” Probably something of the same sort had previously been enacted by Servius.

SECTION 15.—AMENDMENTS ON THE COURSE OF JUSTICE¹

Of the course of justice in the regal period, whether in criminal or civil matters, before the time of Servius, we know little that can be relied on. Mr. Clark says, in reference to criminal procedure, fairly summarising our scanty information about the judicial functions of the king: "The king as judge; sometimes availing himself of the aid of a council, sometimes perhaps, in cases of minor importance, delegating his judicial powers to individual judices; aided in his quest of capital crimes by the quaestores parricidii; appointing at his pleasure, in cases of treason, the extraordinary duumviri; allowing, though perhaps not bound to do so, an appeal from the latter to the assembled burgesses,—this is all that we can recognise with any degree of confidence." It would be a mistake, however, to suppose that the king alone was invested with criminal jurisdiction. The paterfamilias also, aided by a council in cases of importance, was judge within the family; his jurisdiction sometimes excluding that of the state, at other times concurring with it, and not to be stayed even by an acquittal pronounced by it. He alone was competent in any charge against a member of the family for a crime or offence against the domestic order,—adultery or unchastity of wife or daughter, immorality of his sons, undutiful behaviour of children or clients; while there are instances on record of his interference judicially where an offence such as murder or theft had been committed by a member of his family against a stranger, and even when his crime had been treason against the state.² Death, slavery, banishment, expulsion from the family, imprisonment, chains, stripes, withdrawal of peculium, were all at his command as punishments; and it may readily be assumed that in imposing them he was freer to take account of moral guilt than an outside tribunal. The indications of criminal jurisdiction on the part of the gens are slight ; but its organisation was such that it is impossible not to believe that it must occasionally have been called on to exercise such functions ; as, for example, in deciding whether the penalty of sacratio capitis had been incurred by a clansman charged with having put one of his children to death before it had reached its third year, contrary to the law of Romulus, or with having violated his duty to his client, contrary to that of Numa. And it must not be lost sight of that, as murder seems to have been the only crime in regard to which private revenge was absolutely excluded, the judicial office of the kings must thus also have been considerably lightened, public opinion approving and not condemning self-redress, so long as kept within the limits set by usage and custom.

¹ Clark's Early Roman Law, pp. 54-108.

² See a variety of examples in Voigt, XII Tafeln, vol. ii. § 94. They are all later than the regal period; but as, with the progress of centuries, the tendency was to relax rather than augment the powers of the paterfamilias, it may be assumed that in the early years of Rome his judicial authority was quite as great as during the republic.

The boundary between civil and criminal jurisdiction, if it existed at all, was very faintly defined. Theft and robbery, for example, if one may conclude from the position they held in the later jurisprudence, were regarded not as public but as private wrongs ; and yet when a thief was caught plying his trade by night he might be slain, and when taken in the act by day might be sold as a slave.³ It can hardly be doubted that in the former case, and possibly until the time of the XII Tables, there might be instant retribution without any pretence of trial, the avenger taking his risk of the consequences if perchance he had been mistaken in imputing felonious intent to the man whose blood he had shed. In the latter, a mistake was unlikely ; and here too we may assume that there was room for instant apprehension of the offender, and sale of him across the frontier by the party he had wronged, without any judicial warrant. But in both cases it may also be assumed that a practice, afterwards formally sanctioned by the XII Tables,—that of the thief compounding for his life or freedom,—was early admitted, and the right of self-redress thus made much more beneficial to the party wronged than when nothing was attained but vengeance on the wrongdoer. In assaults, non-manifest thefts, and other minor wrongs, self-interest would in like manner soon lead to the general adoption of the practice of compounding ; what was originally a matter of option in time came to be regarded as a right; and with it occasional difficulty in settling the amount of the composition, and consequent necessity of an appeal to a third party. Here seems to be the origin of the king's jurisdiction in matters of this sort. He was the natural person to whom to refer such a dispute; for he alone, as supreme magistrate, had the power to use coercion to prevent the party wronged insisting on his right of self-redress, in face of a tender by the wrongdoer of what had been declared to be sufficient reparation. But that self-redress was not stayed if the reparation found due was withheld; as the party wronged was still entitled at a much later period to wreak his vengeance upon the wrongdoer by apprehending and imprisoning him, it cannot reasonably be doubted that such also was the practice of the regal period.

³ [Or slain if he defended himself with a weapon, v. infra, p. 140.]

How the kings acquired jurisdiction in questions of quiritarian right, such as disputes about property or inheritance, is by no means so obvious. Within the family, of course, such questions were impossible; though between clansmen they may have been settled by the gens or its chief. The words of style used in the sacramental real action (p. 179) suggest that there must have been a time when the spear was the arbiter, and when the contending parties, backed possibly by their clansmen or friends,⁴ were actual combatants, and victory decided the right. Such a procedure could not long survive the institution of a state.⁵ In Rome there seems to have been very early substituted for it what from its general complexion one would infer was a submission of the question of right to the pontiffs as the repositories of legal lore. Nor is this view in conflict with the well-known passage in which Cicero affirms that in the earlier regal period—contrary to the later practice—a private citizen never acted as judge or arbiter in a civil suit (lis), but that it was always disposed of in the king's court;⁶

⁴ The praetor's command to the parties to go to the ground suis utrisque superstitibus praesentibus, "each with his seconds in attendance," which Cicero (P. Mur. xii. 26) found so absurd, is manifestly a relic of it.

⁵ [But contrast Trial by wager of battel in English law which survived to the present century.—See Stephen's Com. (6th ed.) iv. 501.]

⁶ "Nec vero quisquam privatus erat disceptator aut arbiter litis, sed omnia conficiebantur judiciis regiis" (Cic. De Rep. v. 2, 3). The old writers, Cicero

for the latter may quite well have consisted of the members of the college of pontiffs, of which the king was the official head. But their proper functions were sacred. To bring what was a question of purely civil right within their jurisdiction, they engrafted on it a sacral element, by requiring each of the parties to make oath to the verity of his contention; and the point that in form they decided was which of the two oaths was false, and therefore to be made atonement for. In substance, however, it was a finding on the real question at issue; and the party in whose favour it was pronounced was free to make it effectual if necessary by self-redress in the ordinary way.⁷

Of Servius, Dionysius says—using, as he often does, language more appropriate to the republican than to the regal period—that he drew a line of separation between public and private judicial processes; and that, while he retained the former in his own hands, he referred the latter to private judges, and regulated the procedure to be followed in causes brought before them.⁸ The entrusting of the judicial office to a private citizen, chosen for each individual case as it arose, and acting on a commission from the praetor, instead of to permanent officials trained for the purpose, was one of the remarkable features of the Roman system, and contributed greatly to the development of that instinctive jurisprudential faculty which eventually produced such admirable results. It particularly, frequently seem to distinguish between lites and jurgia; but among moderns there is great difference of opinion as to whether the distinction was well founded, and if so, what it amounted to. If Karlowa (Röm. CP. §§ 1-6) be right in his opinion (which, however, has met with little acceptance, and presents many and serious difficulties), that while lites were suits (1) founded either on statute or fixed and certain custom (both, according to him, included in the word lex), and (2) insisted in either by a legis actio sacramenti (infra, § 34), or (later) a legis actio per condictionem (infra, § 41), jurgia were (1) founded on undefined jus, of which king, consul, or praetor, in the exercise of his jurisdictio, was the mouthpiece, and (2) brought under his notice in the shape of a demand for appointment of a (delegated) judge (the legis actio per judicis postulationem, infra, § 35)—if this view be right, the field of possible intervention by the kings in matters judicial would be materially widened. But the only thing absolutely certain about the distinction is that questions litigated per sacramentum and (afterwards) per condictionem were lites and not jurgia. [See Nonius, s. v. Jurgium (Bruns, 6th ed. ii. p. 66); infra, p. 189.]

⁷ For details see infra, § 34.

⁸ Dion. Hal. iv. 25.

is interesting, therefore, to inquire whether Servius is really entitled to the credit of the private judge. His reforms in other directions were such as to render some change in existing judicial arrangements all but imperative. He was enormously increasing the number of the citizens,—that is to say, of those who were to enjoy in future the privileges of quiritarian right,—and multiplying the sources of future disputes that would have to be determined by the tribunals. Not improbably, too, if there be any truth in the statement that he was the author of some fifty laws about contracts and crimes,⁹ he thought it right to make some regulations for further restraining self-help, and for assuring something like uniformity of practice in fixing the amount of composition or reparation for minor wrongs. All this augmented the burden of the judicial office; so that the account we have of the institution by Servius of private judices, acting on a reference from him when he found a good cause of action averred, is more than credible.

The question remains, however, was it his intention that those judges of his should have no official character, but should be selected from among the patrician citizens for each case as it arose, in the ordinary case sitting singly (unus judex)? Or was it a collegiate court or courts that he established? Pomponius alludes to two such courts, that of the centumviri and that of the decemviri litibus judicandis. The centumviral court¹⁰ and centumviral causes are often referred to by Cicero, and the range of their jurisdiction seems to have included every possible question of manus in the old sense of the word—status of individuals, property and its easements and burdens, inheritance whether testate or intestate; in other words, all questions of quiritarian right. By the time of Gaius the only matters apparently that were brought before it were questions of right to an inheritance of the jus civile; but the spear, the emblem of quiritarian right generally, was still its ensign.¹¹ We have no distinct reference to its existence before the beginning of the sixth century;¹² but the nature of its jurisdiction, and the consideration that transition from a court of one judge to a court of a hundred is the reverse of what experience of Roman procedure would lead us to expect, induces the belief that its origin must have been comparatively early, and due probably to Servius. But it is impossible to accept the opinion, even of so eminent an authority as Bethmann-Hollweg,¹³ that it was a plebeian court composed of plebeian members, and intended to administer justice only to plebeian citizens; that would be to run counter to all we read of the monopoly of the law in the hands of the patricians¹⁴ until the publication of the Flavian collection in the middle of the fifth century (p. 246), and to render unintelligible what Livy says of the honours conferred on its author by the grateful plebeians. It must have been, originally at least, a court of patricians, with a jurisdiction in questions of quiritarian right, whether arising among patricians or plebeians.

⁹ Dion. iv. 13. It is said they were repealed by his successor on the throne; “ignored” would be a better phrase, seeing that apparently the great majority of them at least were not comitial enactments, but only instructions to the newly instituted judices. [Supra, p. 65.]

¹⁰ Literature: Schneider, De Cvirali judicio apud Romanos, Rostochii, 1834, and rev. by Zumpt, in Richter's Krit. Jahrb. vol. iii. (1839), p. 475 sq.; C. G. Zumpt, Ueber Ursprung, Form, u. Bedeutung d. Centumviralgerichts, Berlin, 1838; Huschke, Serv. Tullius, p. 585 sq.; Bachofen, De Romanorum judiciis civilibus, Göttingen, 1840, p. 9 sq.; Puchta, Instit. vol. ii. § 153; Keller, Röm. CP. § 6; Bethmann-Hollweg, Gesch. d. CP. vol. i. § 23; Clark, Early Roman Law, p. 103 sq.; Karlowa, Röm. CP. p. 247 sq. [Add Kuntze, Excursus, p. 112 sq.]

It is Pomponius who also narrates¹⁵ that soon after the creation of the second praetorship (which was in 507 or thereabout) certain persons were appointed, under the title of decemviri litibus judicandis, to act as presidents of the centumviral court. It has been attempted to identify them with the judices decemviri mentioned in the leges sacratae that followed the second secession in 305 U.C.,¹⁶ and to carry their institution

¹¹ "Hasta signum justī domini; . . . unde in centumviralibus judiciis hasta praeponitur" (Gai. iv. 16). Pomponius (Dig. i. 2, fr. 2, § 29) designates the centumviral court as hasta, and Suetonius (Aug. 36) as centumviralis hasta. [Hence hasta (subhastatio) for judicial sale, still retained in the Vendere all' asta of modern Italian law.]

¹² Paul. Diac. in his abridgment of Festus, v. Centumviralia (Bruns, p. 264), says that, after the increase of the tribes to thirty-five (anno 513 U.C.), three members were chosen from each to act as judges (electi ad judicandum); and that, although their number was thus 105, they were nevertheless called centumviri for simplicity's sake.

¹³ Gesch. d. CP. vol. i. p. 57 sq.

¹⁴ Liv. ix. 46, 5. See also Cic. P. Mur. xi. 25.

¹⁵ See reference in note 11.

¹⁶ [Mommsen, SR. iii. p. 81.]

likewise back to Servius. The decemviri of Pomponius may possibly have been the successors of those referred to in the Valerio-Horatian laws, and whose persons were therein declared inviolable, like those of the tribunes and aediles. But there is no semblance of reason for connecting them with the Servian reforms. The Valerio-Horatian decemvirs were plebeian officials, acting under the direction of the tribunes and aediles (p. 82), and can have had no existence until after the institution of the tribunate.¹⁷

That Servius should substitute for king and pontiffs a numerous court of citizens to try questions of quiritarian right on remit from himself was quite in accordance with the general spirit of his reforms. It was not mere matters of personal dispute they had to decide, but a law they had to build up by their judgments, which was to be of general and permanent application; and as it was beyond the power of the king to overtake the task, what could be a more appropriate substitute than a court of his counsellors acting under pontifical guidance?¹⁸ But there were many cases requiring judicial assistance in which no question of quiritarian right had to be determined, but only one of personal claim,—of alleged indebtedness, whether arising out of a legal or illegal act, denied either in toto or only as to its amount. Matters of that sort were supposed to involve no general principle of law, but to be rather mere disputes or differences about facts, which could well be decided by a single judge. To meet their case

¹⁷ The theories maintained in reference to the centumviral and decemviral courts are very various. Some identify the centumviri with the Romulan senate of 100, and the decemviri with its decem primi, e.g. Sanio, Varroniana in d. Schriften d. Röm. Juristen (Leipzig, 1867), p. 123, Kuntze, Excursus, p. 115, and (to some extent) Karlowa, p. 249. Some—e.g. Niebuhr, Bachofen, and Bethmann-Hollweg—attribute the institution of both colleges to Servius Tullius. Others—e.g. C. G. Zumpt—hold their establishment to have been contemporaneous with the XII Tables; while others again—e.g. Puchta, Huschke, and Keller—credit Servius with the decemvirate, but postpone the establishment of the centumvirate to the sixth century at soonest. [So long as plebiscita were binding only on the plebeians, they must have had judges of their own to decide disputes arising on them. These may have been the judices decemviri of the Valerio-Horatian law. See infra, pp. 207, 208.]

¹⁸ Pomponius says (Dig. i. 2, fr. 2, § 6) that even after the XII Tables the college of pontiffs annually appointed one of their number to preside in private judicial processes. [Cf. Onq, Inst. Jurid. p. 148.]

was introduced the unus judex, appointed for each case as it arose, and acting really as the king's commissioner. This was the beginning of a system that bore wondrous fruit in after years, and that eventually displaced altogether the more imposing court of the centumvirs.¹⁹

¹⁹ [On the centumviral and decemviral Courts, and the comparative antiquity of the procedure before them and the unus judex, see Wlassak, Röm. Prozess-gesetze, i. p. 131 sq. Wlassak gives reasons for holding that originally in legis actiones the trial commonly took place before a unus judex, and that the centumviral and decemviral Courts did not come into existence till much later than the XII Tables, in accordance with the statement of Pomponius. It seems clear that in the later Republic the decemviri stlitibus judicandis were mainly engaged in trying actions affecting personal liberty.]

PART II

THE JUS CIVILE

From the Establishment of the Republic till the Subjugation of Central and Southern Italy

PART II

THE JUS CIVILE

From the Establishment of the Republic till the Subjugation of Central and Southern Italy

CHAPTER I

HISTORICAL EVENTS THAT INFLUENCED THE LAW

SECTION 16.—THE CHANGE FROM KING TO CONSULS

THE establishment of the consulate was not attended by the happy results that must have been anticipated by many of those who had rejoiced over the expulsion of the Tarquins. The retaliatory wars that followed cost Rome much of her territory. The influx of wealth from Etruria was suddenly checked; and the return of the Tuscan immigrants to their own country arrested at once the trading and mercantile spirit that had begun to develop. An important field of industry was thus closed, and the poorer classes forced to confine themselves to petty agriculture for their means of subsistence. From their betters they met with little sympathy. Although in the cities of Latium the commonalty seem generally to have ranked as citizens, and to have had a substantial share in government as well as in military service and taxation, yet in Rome they were practically denied such a position; for the constitution of the centuriate assembly was such as to make the vote to which they were nominally entitled an empty name. Patrician predominance soon became much more marked and oppressive than it had been in the time of the later kings. The consuls were not a whit less powerful than these had been. For they had the same imperium, conferred in the same way; and in virtue of it they might make and enforce what decrees they pleased, with little chance of impeachment on demitting office, so long as they were responsible only to the comitia of the centuries and had done nothing to impair the privileges or offend the prejudices of those by whom they had really been elected. They had much in their power in the way of alleviating the position of the plebeians, healing dissensions, and fusing the different elements of the populace into a united and cohesive community; but many did not care to take advantage of their opportunities, while, of the few who were animated by nobler sentiments, most feared to incur the enmity of their order, which usually consigned those who had courage to resist it to death or exile. The times, too, were adverse. Constant petty warfare drained the resources of the peasantry and involved them in debt, from which they found it almost impossible to free themselves,—debt contracted to patrician money-lenders. For it was the higher class that monopolised the little wealth of which Rome now could boast; amassed partly in farming their holdings of public land through the agency of their clients and slaves, and partly by their ruthless severity towards their debtors, whose mortgages were rarely redeemed, and who, as a final resource, had too often to impledge themselves¹ to their creditors as the condition of a fresh advance.

The inevitable result of this unhappy state of matters was a bitter feeling of hostility on the part of the plebeians towards the patricians and the new order of things,—a hostility that manifested itself not merely in individual instances, but in a general and all-pervading spirit of disaffection. In fact, while their desire really was for equality in political rights and participation in the more substantial privileges enjoyed by their patrician fellow-citizens, the contumelious treatment they received at the hands of the latter drove them to band themselves together for purposes of united action. They even went so far as to form quasi-corporations within the limits of their tribes, and to establish their own tutelary divinities in Liber, Libera, and Ceres, corresponding to the divine triad of the Capitoline. They were thus in a position to make common cause; and so effectually did they do so that frequently they refused to join in a campaign, and three times seceded in a body from the city, with the threat of complete severance of their connection with Rome. On such occasions it was only the tardy promise of redress of some overpowering grievance, to be embodied in laws under sanction of oath (leges sacratae), and appeals to their patriotism and common interests in face of an enemy, that induced them to forego their resolution.²

¹ [Or their children.]

SECTION 17.—POLITICAL INEQUALITIES REMOVED

It was not by any comprehensive and well-digested reform, dictated by considerations of justice, that the plebeians at last attained a position of political equality with the higher order, but by fragmentary legislation wrung from time to time from the latter against their will, and when Rome was in peril from dissensions within or hostile demonstrations from without. It was the first secession in the year 260 U.C., in resentment of the failure of M. Valerius to obtain the approval of the patricians for his proposals for alleviation of the condition of insolvent debtors, that brought about the tribunate. The enactment that established it was the result of a treaty between the two orders, as solemn almost as if it had been concluded with fetial ceremonial between two independent states. With the institution of the new office the plebeians obtained a leverage power that stood them in good stead in their subsequent contests; for in their tribunes, whose persons were declared sacred and inviolable, and whose number in course of time was increased to ten, they obtained representatives who could officially expose their grievances, and protectors who within the city could stop the execution of a decree or the levy for a campaign, could impose fines on those disobeying their orders, could bring even a consul to trial for official misdeeds, and could prevent the election of new magistrates when complaints were too long unheeded.

² [As to leges sacratae see Cuq, p. 113; Karlowa, Röm. RG. i. p. 99.]

Still greater compactness was given to the plebeians as a power in the state by the constitutional recognition in 283 of the elective and legislative competency of their council (concilium plebis). It had often met before, and often passed resolutions (plebiscita).¹ It was now, however, that for the first time it took its place as one of the institutions of the commonwealth, and that its resolutions became of indisputable authority amongst the plebeians themselves; although they were binding upon the citizens as a whole only when—as occasionally happened—they had been sanctioned by a senatusconsult.²

The second secession in 305 resulted in the overthrow of the decemvirate, which had been created to give effect to the demands of the plebeians for a codification of the law; and was followed immediately by the Valerio-Horatian laws, re-establishing the previous magisterial régime. One of their provisions was that whoever should harm a tribune of the people, an aedile, or one of the “ten-men judges,” should forfeit his head to Jupiter and his fortune to Ceres.³ The aediles here referred to had been first appointed on the institution of the tribunate; they were the assistants of the tribunes, had supervision of the market in which the plebeians disposed of their produce, were keepers of the temple of Ceres,⁴ and specially charged with the custody therein of senatusconsults confirmatory of plebiscits. The ten-men judges (judices decemviri) probably owed their institution to the tribunes themselves; they seem to have been judges in civil causes arising between plebeians, officiating on a remit from a tribune or aedile.

According to Mommsen, the creation of the comitia of the tribes was due to the same Valerio-Horatian laws.⁵ If this

¹ The Icilian law, empowering the tribune presiding at an assembly of the plebeians to prevent by very stringent means its disturbance by patricians, is attributed by Dionysius to the year 262: some historians, e.g. Schweigler, doubt the accuracy of his date.

² As in the case of the Terentilian law, which resulted in the compilation of the XII Tables, the Canuleian law, sanctioning intermarriage of patricians and plebeians, etc.

³ Liv. iii. 55.

⁴ It has been suggested that their original official designation may have been aediles Cereris.

⁵ Mommsen, Röm. Forsch. vol. i. p. 164. He holds that the passage in Livy, “ut, quod tributim plebs jussisset, populum teneret,” should read “quod tributim populus jussisset,” etc. See also Karlowa, Röm. RG. i. p. 118 sq.

was so, the object must have been not so much to favour the plebeians as to weaken the power of the tribunes.⁶ For while the new assembly, like the concilium plebis, was based on the tribal organisation with a tribal vote, yet the patricians as well as the plebeians had access to it, and its convocation and presidency were competent only to patrician magistrates. While there was in it, therefore, a semblance of concession to the plebeian preference for tribal arrangement, it was the magistrate who convoked it that had the right to say what proposals should be submitted to it. It had this advantage,—that its resolutions were leges even without approbatory senatusconsult; but also this disadvantage,—that, like the resolutions of the centuries, they did not take rank as leges without the authority of the fathers (auctoritas patrum), latterly, it is true, very much a matter of form, and from the time of the Publilian law of 415 conferred in advance.⁷ Whatever may have been the exact relation in which the two assemblies stood to each other constitutionally, there was difference enough between them to prevent an amalgamation; each went its own course, the one summoned and presided over by a consul or the praetor, the other always by a tribune; the comitia of the tribes occupying itself with occasional general legislation on matters of private law, the council of the plebeians, more active than the other, devoting its attention more particularly to the redress of grievances that specially affected its own constituent members. All the latter needed to make it as efficient a legislative machinery as the former was that its resolutions should rank as leges without the necessity of a confirmatory senatusconsult. Livy says that the Publilian law of 415 contained a provision to that effect; but in this he is uncorroborated by any other authority. It was by the Hortensian law of 467, passed immediately after the third secession, that the amendment, if ever before proposed, was at last definitively effected; "it declared," says Gaius, "that plebiscits should be of force universally, and thus put them on an equality with comitial enactments." And from that time there can be little doubt that the patricians, now a body numerically insignificant, were free to take part in the votes of their tribes in the plebeian assembly whenever they were so minded.⁸

[This view of Mommsen is strongly controverted; see Soltan, Gültigkeit der Plebiscite, p. 113 sq.]

⁶ [Livy says (iii. 55, 3) “qua lege tribuniciis rogationibus telum acerrimum datum est.”]

⁷ [By auctoritas patrum is apparently here meant the sanction of the patricians. But in what respect this was necessary is a much-disputed question. See Liv. vi. 42, § 14, viii. 12, § 15; Becker, Röm. Alt. ii. 1, 315 sq.; Mommsen, SR. iii. 1037 sq.; Clark's Roman Law, p. 137; Soltan, op. cit. p. 70 sq.]

Not less resolute and successful were the plebeians in asserting their claim to participate in the honours of the state. But it was a harder fight. The argument with which ever and again they were met was that the supreme government of the divinely-founded and divinely-protected commonwealth could not possibly be intrusted to men whose descent disqualified them for communion with the gods (auspicia); that to place the holies (res divinae) of the city in profane hands would be to draw down upon it the wrath of heaven. The first determined contest about the matter was in 309. A provision in the XII Tables a few years previously had declared marriage unlawful between patricians and plebeians. C. Canuleius carried in the council of the plebeians a resolution that this obnoxious enactment, a standing proclamation of social as well as political inequality, should be repealed; and to it he appended a second,—that the consulate should be opened to the plebeians. With these in his hand he presented himself before the senate (to which the tribunes had the entry, but without a vote), and demanded a confirmatory senatusconsult. After much strong language, much contemptuous denunciation of the looseness of the matrimonial relations of the lower order, sanctioned by no auspices and hallowed with no sacrifice, and much declamation more or less sincere about the divinity of the commonwealth, the senate was persuaded to accept the first resolution, but refused to adopt the second. Canuleius was disposed to rest satisfied with his victory, conceiving—and events proved he was right—that once mixed marriage should be not sanctioned merely but realised, a few years would suffice so far to efface distinctions as to render the advance to complete equality comparatively easy. His colleagues, however, insisted on proceeding with the second resolution. The result was a compromise, whereby it was arranged that for the consuls six military tribunes with consular powers should be substituted, three from each of the orders; but, though the new magistrates were elected, it was more than forty years before a plebeian had a place among them.

⁸ [Contra Soltau, op. cit. pp. 45, 47.]

In 378 a still bolder proposal was made by C. Licinius Stolo, one of the tribunes, who had married a daughter of a distinguished patrician, and L. Sextius, one of his colleagues. They submitted three rogations to the plebeian assembly, the first demanding that consuls should again be elected instead of military tribunes, the second dealing with the occupancy of the state lands (§ 19), and the third with the law of debt (§ 20). His proposals were promptly passed by the plebeians, but at once rejected by the senate. For nine years did the contest last; eight times were the identical measures voted by the one body, only to be thrown out by the other. All this time Licinius and his colleagues were regularly re-elected by their grateful and determined constituents; and for the last five years of it, in the hope of bringing the senate to reason, they employed their veto to prevent the election of the supreme magistrates. It was only when a war with Velitrae became imminent that the patriotism of Licinius induced him to withdraw it. His forbearance brought its reward; for in 387 he had the satisfaction of seeing his proposal accepted, and in the year following, his colleague, L. Sextius, installed as the first plebeian consul. But the installation was to an office shorn of some of its prerogatives. For, just as the regimen morum and virtual control of admission to the senate (lectio senatus) had been severed from the consular prerogative and confided to a patrician censor when the military tribunate was established, so was the supreme judicial office (jurisdictio) divorced from the consulate when thrown open to plebeians, and intrusted to a patrician praetor (p. 228), the custody of the temples being at the same time committed to curule aediles. Not for long, however, did the severance last. With the admission of the plebeians to the consulate the rest was but a matter of time. Within thirty years the dictatorship, censorship, and praetorship had ceased to be exclusively patrician offices. The last step was gained in the Ogulnian law of 454, which threw open the pontificate; although it was not until 502 that a plebeian actually reached the supreme dignity of pontifex maximus.

SECTION 18.—UNCERTAINTY OF THE LAW

The later kings, with the exception of the last, in their desire to conciliate the plebeians, whom Cicero says they regarded as in a manner royal clients, were careful that justice should be administered to them in their private relations, if not as citizens entitled as of right to claim the protection of the laws, yet as subjects to whom to deny it would be alike a patronal betrayal of trust and a grave mistake in policy. Servius's reputed fifty enactments about contracts and wrongs were probably nothing more than a series of instructions to those whom he deputed to act under him as judges (p. 65); but their attribution to him indicates an effort on his part to secure that the dispensation of justice should neither be neglected nor left to caprice or haphazard, one rule to-day and another to-morrow. With the consulate, and the disregard of the laws and instructions of the kings, all this was changed. The consuls, with their harassing military engagements, could have little time to devote to their judicial functions or properly to instruct those to whom they delegated the duty of investigating and adjudicating on the merits of a complaint; and the yearly change of magistrates must itself have been a serious obstacle to uniformity either of rule or practice so long as the law rested on nothing but unwritten custom. One can well believe, too, when feeling was so embittered between the orders, that it was no rare thing for a consul to use his magisterial punitive powers (coercitio) with undue severity when a plebeian was the object of them, or to turn a deaf ear to an appeal for justice addressed to him from such a quarter. The state of matters had become so intolerable that in the year 292 the demand was made by C. Terentilius Arsa, one of the tribunes, that a commission should be appointed to define in writing the jurisdiction of the consuls, so that a check might be put on their arbitrary, high-handed, and oppressive administration of what they were pleased to call the law. His colleagues induced him for the moment not to press his demand, which he was urging with a violence of invective that was unlikely to promote his object. But next year they made common cause with him, requiring that the whole law, public and private, should be codified, and its uncertainty thus as far as possible be removed. After a few years' delay upon one pretence or another, preliminary steps were taken for giving effect to a demand that in itself was too reasonable to be withstood; and in the years 303 and 304 the result was seen in the Twelve Tables, which became the basis of the bulk of the jus civile. Their history, sources, and contents will be explained hereafter (§§ 21-24).

SECTION 19.—THE PUBLIC LANDS

The disposal of territory acquired by conquest, especially that part of it which was neither assigned gratuitously (ager assignatus) nor sold (ager quaestorius) to citizens as private property, was at all times a source of more or less bad feeling and contention. There were many ways of dealing with it. Land in cultivation at the time of its conquest, or at least so much of it as was taken from its old occupants, was usually let for short terms for a money rent (vectigal), while the better pasturage was dealt with in the same way, the rent (scriptura) being proportioned to the number of cattle put to graze upon it. Uncultivated lands (agri occupatorii) were left free to the occupancy of the first comer who was prepared to recognise the state's ownership by payment of a tithe of all standing crops, and double-tithe of all hanging fruits gathered by him. Lands of this sort in the occupancy of any particular individual were technically known as possessiones, and their holder as possessor. Not being private property, though capable of transfer by sale or gift, and of passing by succession just as if they were, such lands never figured in their occupants' pages in the valuation-roll (p. 55); no military service was rendered nor any tribute paid in respect of them. This was what rendered them so valuable. It was from them that the patricians derived their wealth. By the agency of clients, freedmen, and slaves, they were able to make them very productive without much personal effort. And for long they had the monopoly of them. Yet not of right, but only by force of custom and by their commanding influence. Although their exclusive occupancy of them in the early years of Rome was due to the very simple reason that they alone were citizens, yet when the plebeians were admitted to the franchise, and the territory largely increased, they refused to abate anything of their pretensions, which they sought to justify on the ground of patrician privilege. What was worse, the tithe was neglected, and the state revenues thereby so much diminished. The pasture land, too, was treated in much the same fashion,—the use of it denied to the humble citizen, and confined by the senate to the patricians and a few of the wealthier members of the lower order, who often managed to evade payment of their rent through the indulgence of the quaestors whose duty it was to exact it. And what was quite as great a hardship was this,—that while the plebeian was subject to tribute in respect of the cattle with which he worked his farm, the patrician herds grazing on those public pastures, as they were not res mancipi, were liable to no such burden.

The first serious attempt to redress those grievances was that made by Sp. Cassius, in co-operation with the tribunes, in the year 268. He aimed at three things,—the curtailment of the privileges asserted by the patricians, the regular collection of the dues leviable alike for the possessions and the pasturage, and the instant distribution of some of the lands taken in recent conquests amongst the poorer citizens by whose prowess they had been won. His scheme miscarried; but subsequent agrarian proposals modelled upon it, and usually introduced immediately after some fresh conquest, were more fortunate. Yet on the whole they failed to ameliorate the position of those for whose benefit they had been passed. A poor plebeian was not able to cultivate to advantage anything but a small plot he could work himself with the aid of his sons; and even this fell all too soon into the hands of some capitalist, either by purchase or by foreclosure of a mortgage. And so, notwithstanding all the efforts of legislation to distribute the land, it continued to accumulate in the hands of a few. This was what led to the agrarian provisions of the Licinio-Sextian law of the year 387,—that no citizen should hold more than 500 jugers of arable land, or put to graze more than one hundred oxen and five hundred sheep upon the public pastures; while every occupant of arable land was to employ on it as much free as slave labour. Although by various devices the restrictions imposed were easily evaded, yet the passing of the enactment was in itself a declaration that gentile privilege, if it had ever existed, was no longer admitted. The object of later agrarian laws was usually to withdraw portions of the ager publicus from their possessors for distribution (assignatio) among poorer citizens as owners; the Licinian law had disposed for ever of any pretence of right on the part of the patricians to exclusive occupancy of the domain land.

SECTION 20.—THE LAW OF DEBT

The tumults and seditions so frequent in Rome during the first two centuries of the republic are more frequently attributed by the historians to the abuses of the law of debt than to any other cause, social or political. The circumstances of the poorer plebeians were such as to make it almost impossible to avoid borrowing. Their scanty means were dependent on the regular cultivation of their little acres, and on each operation of the agricultural year being performed in proper rotation and at the proper season. But this was every now and again interfered with by wars which detained them from home at seed-time or harvest, practically rendering their farms unproductive, and leaving them and their families in straits for the commonest necessities of life. A poor peasant, in such a case, had no alternative but to apply to a capitalist for a loan either of corn or money. But it was not to be had without security, and rarely without interest. It was not that the lender doubted the borrower's honesty and willingness to repay his debt; it was rather that there was every chance that next year a fresh war might again interfere with the latter's agricultural operations, leave him again without a crop, and thus render repayment impossible. And so, while interest accumulated and was periodically added to capital, new loans had year after year to be contracted as long as any acres remained that could serve as a security; failing all things, the debtor had to yield himself to his creditor in de facto servitude. This was a result of the transaction with the copper and the scales, technically known as nexum, whose origin has already been referred to (p. 66). It was bad enough at the best, but horrible in its abuse. For, not content with the slave's work he exacted from his debtor, the creditor too often put him in chains, and starved him and flogged him, as if really and truly a slave instead of still a Roman citizen. For that the status of the nexi, notwithstanding their bondage, was still that of freemen and citizens is clearly demonstrated by the fact that again and again, when there was a scarcity of fighting men to face an approaching enemy, their creditors were required to release them for the term of the campaign, reclaiming them when it was over. To such a height did the system grow, that often those free bondmen might be reckoned by thousands, and that the saying was almost justified that every patrician's dwelling had become a private prison-house.¹ For it so happened, owing to causes already explained, that for a long time it was almost exclusively in patrician hands that capital had accumulated, so that they were the lenders and oppressors, and the poor plebeians the borrowers and oppressed.

Many were the commotions and frequent the revolts to which such a state of things gave rise. It could hardly be otherwise. They were no fraudulent bankrupts or reckless speculators those miserable objects who appeared from time to time in the market-place, with lacerated shoulders, tattered garments, and famished countenances, to relate the story of their wrongs, but brave citizens who had been reduced to insolvency by a vicious system, which required them at a day's notice to leave their fields unsown or unreaped in order to fight the battles of the commonwealth, and that (till the year 348) at their own cost.² According to Livy, it was the sight of one of those wretched nexi, and the tale he told his old comrades of the sufferings he had endured, that was the immediate incitement to the first secession. The establishment of the tribunate was its great constitutional result; but that gave no relief so far as the treatment of a debtor by his creditor was concerned; for the tribunes could not interfere with the action of a private citizen, but only with that of an official. The same enactment, however, that created the tribunate and its jus auxilii, contained a provision that to many must have been even more welcome,—that all debts were to be remitted and all nexi to be liberated.³ This, if not actually the first,⁴ was at all events a forerunner of a long series of enactments for ameliorating the position of those who had been obliged to borrow money and by no fault of their own were unable to repay it. There were laws to repress usury: for example, a provision of the XII Tables making the unciarium fenus—i.e. one-twelfth of the capital, or $8\frac{1}{3}$ per cent yearly⁵—the maximum rate, and imposing a fourfold penalty on its contravention; a law in the year 407 reducing the rate to $4\frac{1}{6}$ and giving debtors three years' grace; and the Genucian law of 412, making the taking of interest altogether illegal, but which, as one might expect, soon became a dead letter.⁶ And there were enactments remitting debt on terms that were ever varying, such as one of the Licinio-Sextian laws of 387 U.C.,—that interest already paid should be imputed to reduction of principal, provided the balance was paid off in three annual instalments.

¹ Liv. vi. 36.

² Aug. De Civ. Dei, ii. 18.

Finally came the Poetilian law of 428.⁷ Its occasion, purpose, and effect have been subjects of much discussion, ³ Dion. vi. 83, vii. 49. See on this, and on the silence of Livy in regard to it, Schwegler, Röm. Gesch. vol. ii. p. 259.

⁴ Dionysius (iv. 9) vaguely attributes some similar measures of relief to Servius Tullius.

⁵ [It seems probable, though disputed, that this applied to a year of ten months, which is equal to 10 per cent on the year of twelve months. Some writers, however, taking the view (erroneously, it is thought) that interest was payable monthly even at this early period, make the rate of interest 12 per cent, or, if one-twelfth of the capital were payable monthly, 100 per cent. See Theureau, Nouv. Rev. Hist. 1893, p. 713; Girard, Des Nexi, p. 12. On the existence of a year of ten months, cf. Girard, p. 504, n. 1, citing Mommsen.]

⁶ [Karlowa, Röm. RG. ii. p. 558, raises doubts as to the enactment of this law.]

⁷ Liv. viii. 28; Cic. De Rep. ii. 34, § 59. [The date is uncertain; see Girard, p. 35.]

and will be referred to in describing the contract of nexum (§ 31)—the transaction whereby a borrower gave his creditor the right to apprehend him on his failure to fulfil his obligation of repayment, and, without any process of law, carry him home and detain him, and employ his services as de facto (though not de jure) a slave. This apparently was the extent of the creditor's right, depending on consuetude rather than statute. But it had become frightfully abused; their jus detinendi being regarded by creditors not as affording them the means of obtaining through their debtor's industry substantial satisfaction for their pecuniary losses, but rather as entitling them to inflict as punishment every sort of cruelty and torture and indignity. It was recognised that nothing less would suffice than the total abolition of the nexum as a contract between lender and borrower. It was a serious matter, for it was the sacrifice of one of the most potent compulsitors to fidelity to one's engagements;⁸ but no half measures would do; the root of the matter had to be reached; all the then nexi were liberated, and nexal contract forbidden for the future.⁹

This could not, of course, obviate the necessity for or the practice of borrowing, nor remove all chance of future agitation by the poorer classes about the burden of their debts. The right of the creditor at his own hand to apprehend and incarcerate his debtor was gone; so were the chains and hideous cruelties to which the latter had so often been subjected. But his detention as a judgment-debtor and on the warrant of a magistrate was still open to his creditor, who was still entitled to utilise his services until he had wiped off with his labour the sum of his indebtedness (§ 31). And one of indebtedness still continued to be the normal condition of the poorer plebeians, and an ever-festering source of discontent. It was this that caused the third secession, as it had caused the first; and with the Hortensian law, which was the issue of it (p. 83), was coupled a scheme of relief for insolvents. In the next period there was quite a series of measures devised for the same purpose, some of them accomplishing it by increasing the nominal value of the currency, and others, such as the Valerian law of 668, by simply wiping out the debts to the extent of a half or three-fourths. It was only by the Julian cessio bonorum (706 A.U.C.),¹⁰ however, which entitled a debtor to his discharge on formally giving up everything to his creditor, that the position of insolvents was really greatly ameliorated, and their confinement or incarceration avoided.

⁸ "Victum eo die . . . ingens vinculum fidei" (Liv. viii. 28, § 8).

⁹ "Propter unius libidinem omnia nexa civium liberata, nectierque postea desitum" (Cic. De Rep. ii. 34, § 59). "Eo anno plebei Romanae velut aliud initium libertatis factum est, quod necti desierunt" (Liv. viii. 28, § 1). "Ita nexi soluti, cautumque in posterum ne necterentur" (Ib. § 9). There were other provisions of the statute that applied to judgment-debtors (judicati, addicti), which are referred to in § 36. [It is scarcely accurate to say that the nexal contract was forbidden for the future by the lex Poetilia. Desitum, not vetitum, is the word used by Cicero (l.c.), and Gaius refers to it as existing, though doubtless only in theory, in his time (Gai. iii. § 173). What the statute did was to deprive nexum of all its advantages in execution, and in consequence of this it soon fell into desuetude.]

¹⁰ Caes. B. C. iii. 1; Dio Cass. xli. 37. [The date of the introduction of cessio bonorum is doubtful. The lex Julia introducing it was probably passed under Augustus. See Gaius, iii. 78; Girard, p. 1018, n. 4.]

CHAPTER II

THE TWELVE TABLES

SECTION 21.—THEIR COMPILATION

THE circumstances that occasioned the compilation of the XII Tables have been alluded to in Section 18. The first practical step towards it was taken in the year 300, in the despatch of a mission to Greece and the Greek settlements in Southern Italy, to study their statute law and collect any materials that might be of service in preparing the projected code. It may well be doubted whether the embassy ever went so far as Athens. It was quite unnecessary that it should, seeing how easily transcripts of Greek legislation were to be obtained in Cumae and other Ionic colonies not far from home, as well as in the Greek settlements in Lower Italy and Sicily. On the return of the three ambassadors in 302, all the magistracies were suspended, and a commission of ten patricians (decemviri legibus scribundis) appointed with consular powers, under the presidency of Appius Claudius, for the express purpose of reducing the laws to writing. In this task they had the assistance as interpreter of one Hermodorus, an exile from Ephesus, whose presence seems to confirm the narrative of the previous collection of Greek material. Before the end of the ensuing year (303), the bulk of the code was ready, and was at once passed into law by the comitia of the centuries, and engraved or impressed¹ on ten tables of wood, probably faced with stucco, which were displayed in the Forum. Next year the decemvirate was renewed with a slight change of personnel, but under the same presidency as before; and in the course of a few months it had completed the supplemental matter, which was passed in due form, and displayed on two other tables, thus bringing the number up to twelve, and giving the code its official name of Lex XII Tabularum.²

¹ [It can hardly be supposed that they were impressed. The statement, "leges . . . in aes incisas in publico proposuerunt," of Livy, iii. 57, 10, applies to a later period. See Voigt, XII Taf. i. § 7, n. 2, 3; cf. Krüger, Gesch. d. Quellen, p. 9, n. 9.]

SECTION 22.—THEIR SOURCES¹

There were provisions in the Tables that were almost literal renderings from the legislation of Solon; this is so stated, with reference to particular enactments, by both Cicero and Gaius.² Others again bore a remarkable correspondence to laws in observance in Greece, such as the provision that the conveyance following on a sale should not carry the property until the price had been paid or security given for it to the seller,³ and the rules about theft discovered with loin-cloth and platter (furtum linteo et lance conceptum),⁴ but which there is no authority for saying were directly borrowed.⁵ By far the greater proportion of them, however, was native and original. Not that they amounted to a general formularisation of the hitherto floating customary law; for, notwithstanding Livy's eulogium of them as the fountain of the whole law, both

² [The Tables were in existence and seem to have been hung up in the Forum as late as the third century of our era. The recent remarkable discovery of the Tables of Gortyn, nearly as old in date as the decemviral code (see Roby in Law Quarterly Review, vol. ii. p. 136), may justify the slender hope that a copy of the XII Tables may yet be found. See Mitteis, Reichsrecht, p. 138.]

¹ [On this and the preceding section consult Cuq, Inst. Jurid. pp. 123-137, where the principal authorities are cited.]

² Cic. De Leg. ii. 23, § 59, in reference to the regulations about funerals in Table X; Gai. lib. 4. ad XII Tab. in Dig. x. 1, fr. 13, and xlvii. 22, fr. 4, in reference to other provisions.

³ A provision attributed to the XII Tables by Justinian (Inst. ii. 1, 41), which bears a close resemblance to a statement of Greek law by Theophrastus; see Hofmann, Periculum beim Kaufe (Vienna, 1870), p. 172, and his Beiträge zur Gesch. d. griech. u. röm. Rechts (Vienna, 1870), p. 71.

⁴ Aristoph. Nub. 497 sq., and scholia to 499. [See infra, p. 141, and frag. 15 in the 7th table in Appendix.]

⁵ On the whole subject see a paper by Hofmann "On the Influence of Greek Law on the XII Tables," in his Beiträge, p. 1 sq.

private and public,⁶ it seems clear that many branches of it were dealt with in the Tables only incidentally, or with reference to some point of detail. The institutions of the family, the fundamental rules of succession, the solemnities of such formal acts as mancipation, nexum, and testaments, the main features of the order of judicial procedure, and so forth,—of all of these a general knowledge was presumed, and the decemvirs thought it unnecessary to define them.

What they had to do was to make the law equal for all, to remove every chance of arbitrary dealing by distinct specification of penalties and precise declaration of the circumstances under which rights should be held to have arisen or been lost, and to make such amendments as were necessary to meet the complaints of the plebeians and prevent their oppression in name of justice. Nothing of the customary law, therefore, or next to nothing, was introduced into the Tables that was already universally recognised as law, and not complained of as either unequal, indefinite, defective, or oppressive. Only one or two of the laws ascribed to the kings reappeared in them, and that in altered phraseology; yet the omission of the rest did not mean their repeal or imply denial of their validity; for some of them were still in force in the empire, and are founded on by Justinian in his Digest. Neither were any of the laws of the republic anterior to the Tables embodied in them, although for long afterwards many a man had to submit to prosecution under them and to suffer the penalties they imposed. In saying, therefore, that for the most part the provisions of the decemviral code were of native origin, all that is meant is that they were the work of the decemvirs themselves, operating upon the hitherto unwritten law in the directions already indicated.

SECTION 23.—THEIR REMAINS AND RECONSTRUCTION¹

It is probably quite true that the original tables were destroyed when Rome was sacked and burned by the Gauls. But they were at once reproduced, and transcripts of them must have been abundant if, as Cicero says was still the case in his youth, the children were required to commit them to memory as an ordinary school task.² This renders all the more extraordinary the fact that the remains of them are so fragmentary and their genuineness in many cases so debatable. They were embodied in the Tripertita of Sextus Aelius Paetus (p. 247); they must have formed the basis of all the writings on the jus civile down to the time of Servius Sulpicius Rufus (who first took the praetor's edicts as a text); and they were the subjects of monographs by L. Acilius Sapiens in the latter half of the sixth century of Rome, by Servius Sulpicius Rufus himself in the end of the seventh or beginning of the eighth,³ by M. Antistius Labeo in the early years of the empire, and by Gaius probably in the reign of Ant. Pius. Yet a couple of score or so are all that can be collected of their provisions in what profess to be the ipsissima verba of the Tables (though in a form in most cases more modern than what we encounter in other remains of archaic Latin). These are contained principally in the writings of Cicero, the Noctes Atticae of Aulus Gellius, and the treatise De verborum significatione of Festus,⁴ the two latter dealing with them rather as matters of antiquarian curiosity than as rules of positive law. There are many allusions to particular provisions in the pages of Cicero, Varro, Gellius, and the elder Pliny, as well as in those of Gaius, Paul, Ulpian, and other ante-Justinianian jurists. But such allusions, in the case of the later writers at least, must be accepted with caution. For it is often difficult to know whether it is the text itself that was their source of information, or not rather the readings of the interpreters (p. 246); whose rules, as is well known, were often nothing more than analogical applications of provisions of the Tables,⁵

⁶ Liv. iii. 34, where he calls them not only “fons omnis publici privateque juris,” but “corpus omnis Romani juris.”

¹ [See Zocca-Rosa, Il commento di Gaio alle legge delle XII Tavole, Roma, 1888. Krüger, Gesch. d. Quellen, pp. 12-21; supra, p. 95, n. 2.]

² Cic. De Leg. ii. 23, § 59.

³ There is no positive evidence of a monograph by Servius; it is only matter of inference from the fact that his definitions of words and phrases of the Tables are frequently quoted by Festus.

⁴ [I.e. of Verrius Flaccus, as epitomised by Festus.]

⁵ E.g. the tutory-at-law of patrons; attributed to the Tables only per consequentiam (Gai. i. 165; Ulp. xi. 3).

or arbitrary constructions of them suggested by considerations of social policy.⁶

With such disjecta membra to operate upon, the work of reconstruction has been beset with difficulties. The questions that had to be encountered at the outset were these:—(1) were the provisions of the Tables arranged systematically? and (2) if they were, did they run on continuously, or was each Table in a manner complete in itself? The earlier editors, or at least some of them, seem to have assumed an answer to the first question in the negative, and accordingly adopted an arbitrary arrangement of the fragments; that of Charondas, for example, in 1578, was into public, private, and sacred law. Latterly, and ever since the appearance of the reconstruction of Jac. Gothofredus (Godefroi) in 1616, the editors have proceeded on the assumption that not only were the individual laws arranged upon a definite plan, but that each Table was complete in itself. But they are far from unanimous as to the sequence of the Tables or the proper allocation of the fragments amongst them. There are not more than four or five of the latter whose positions are expressly defined by ancient writers; and two or three more are said to have been the work of the decemvirate of 304, and therefore must have been in one or other of the two last and supplemental Tables. Beyond these much is left to the ingenuity of the reconstructors.

They have relied for guidance mainly on Gaius's commentary on the decemviral code and on Julian's consolidation of the praetorian edict. The commentary is in six books, in which Gaius is supposed to have followed the order of his text, devoting one book to every two Tables; but as the excerpts from them in the Digest are few, and refer to only a small number of the matters we are assured were dealt with by the decemvirs, their value as a guide seems to have been overrated. There is a sort of tradition that, as Justinian in his Digest and

⁶ E.g. the exclusion of all women except sisters of an intestate from succession as agnates. Gaius (iii. 23) says this was provided in the statute; while Justinian, on the authority of Paul (in a commentary of his on the Tertullian senatusconsult) assures us (Cod. vi. 58, 14, § 1, Inst. iii. 2, 3) that it was due to the restrictive interpretation of the jurists. Says Ulpian (Dig. l. 16, 6), "Verbum 'ex legibus' sic accipiendum est: tam ex legum sententia, quam ex verbis."

Code followed the order of the Edict, so Salvius Julianus, in consolidating the latter, followed the order of the XII Tables; and of this clue the editors have availed themselves so far as it goes. The latest of them, Voigt, relies in addition on the order of matters in the various commentaries on the treatise of Sabinus (p. 298) on the jus civile (Sabini libri tres juris civilis).⁷ As those commentaries run parallel throughout, he concludes that they closely follow the sequence of the treatise with which they are dealing; and this, he holds, corresponded exactly to the Tripertita of Sextus Aelius Paetus (p. 247). But the Tripertita included the XII Tables, arranged, as is supposed, in their legal order; and so, through Sabinus and his commentators, Voigt obtains a guide of some value, and which has the advantage of being a good deal earlier than those mainly followed by his predecessors in the work of reconstruction. The misfortune is that it is impossible to arrive at a generally accepted tabulation for purposes of reference; Dirksen differs from Gothofredus, Schoell to a slight extent from Dirksen, and Voigt very materially from all of them. There is unanimity as to the order and contents generally of the first three Tables, and the contents of the tenth; but as regards the others there is considerable divergence,—Dirksen, for example, placing the fragments relating to succession in the fifth Table, while Voigt places them in the fourth. It is safer, therefore, when referring to a provision of the Tables, to quote the ancient writer on whose authority it is said to have been contained in them, without specifying either table or law. For, after all, the sequence is of little importance, and is throughout purely conjectural.⁸

⁷ See his paper "Ueber das Aelius und Sabinus System," in the Abhandl. (Phil.-Hist. Cl.) d. K. Sächs. Gesellsch. d. Wissensch. vol. vii. p. 320 sq.; also his XII Tafeln, vol. i. p. 55 sq.

⁸ Dirksen's Uebersicht der bisherigen Versuche zur Kritik u. Herstellung d. Zwölf-Tafel-Fragmente (Leipsic, 1824) supplies the basis of all the later work on the Tables anterior to that of Voigt. Schoell, in his Legis XII Tab. reliquiae (Berlin, 1866), made a valuable contribution to the literature of the subject from a philological point of view. His version has been adopted substantially by Bruns in his Fontes juris Romani antiqui, p. 16 sq., and Wordsworth, in his Fragments and Specimens of Early Latin (Oxford, 1874), p. 253 sq. The latter, in a subsequent part of his volume (pp. 502-538), has added notes, historical, philological, and exegetical, which constitute a valuable commentary on the

SECTION 24.—GENERAL CHARACTERISTICS OF THE LAWS IN THE TABLES

In form the laws of the tables were of remarkable brevity, terseness, and pregnancy, with something of a rhythmical cadence that must have greatly facilitated their retention in the memory. For example:—"Si in jus vocat, ito. Ni it, antestamino. Igitur em capito. Si calvitur pedemve struit, manum endo jacito."¹ "Aeris confessi rebusque jure judicatis XXX dies justi sunt. Post deinde manus injectio esto. In jus ducito."² "Si intestato moritur, cui suus heres nec escit, adgnatus proximus familiam habeto."³ "Cum nexum faciet mancipiumque, uti lingua nuncupassit ita jus esto."⁴ Here and there the rules they embodied were permissive, but for the most part they were peremptory, running on broad lines, surmounting instead of removing difficulties. Their Tables as a whole. Voigt's two volumes, under the title of Geschichte und System des Civil- und Criminal-Rechtes, wie -Processes, der XII Tafeln, nebst deren Fragmenten (Leipsic, 1883), contain an exposition of the whole of the earlier jus civile, whether embodied in the Tables or not. The history of them occupies the first hundred pages or thereby of the first volume: his reconstruction of fragments and allusions—a good deal fuller than any earlier one, and supported by an imposing array of authorities, but not to be accepted without caution—is in the same volume, pp. 693-737. The following is an outline of the arrangement generally adopted, with Voigt's variations:—I. Summons, and initial procedure in litigation before consul or praetor. II. Second stage of procedure,—before the centumviral court or one or more judges or arbiters, on remit from the consul or praetor. III. Execution by a judgment creditor against the body of his debtor. IV. Law of the family (Voigt—Law of the family and of succession). V. Succession and guardianship (Voigt—Acquisition of property and law of contractual obligations). VI. Acquisition and possession of property (Voigt—Guardianship of various sorts). VII. Rights pertaining to land (Voigt—Private delicts generally and their penalties). VIII. Delicts (Voigt—Relations between conterminous landowners and agrarian delinquencies). IX. Public law (Voigt—Public and criminal law). X. Regulation of funerals. XI. and XII. Miscellaneous supplementary provisions. [As to Voigt's reconstruction, see Krüger, Gesch. der Quellen, p. 12, n. 21. An edition of the XII Tables, with a modernised arrangement of the subject matter and notes in English, by F. Goodwin, has been published, London, 1886. The text of the Tables is given in the Appendix, pp. 434 sq.]

¹ The words "si in jus vocat" were the initial words of the Tables (Cic. De Leg. ii. 4, § 9). The rest of the provision is a composite of fragments from Porph. in Hor. Sat. i. 9, 76; Festus, v. Struere (Bruns, pp. 17, 295); and Gai. lib. 1. ad XII Tab. (Dig. 1. 16, 233 pr.).

² Aul. Gell. xx. 1, § 45.

³ Ulp. xxvi. 1.

⁴ Festus, v. Nuncupata (Bruns, pp. 23, 275).

application might cause hardship in individual instances, as when a man was held to the letter of what he had declared in a nexum or mancipation, even though he had done so under error or influenced by fraudulent misrepresentations; the decemvirs admitted no exceptions, preferring a hard and fast rule to any qualifications that might cause uncertainty.

The system as a whole is one of jus as distinguished from fas (§§ 6, 7); their respective spheres had by the beginning of the fourth century of Rome become much more clearly separated than in the reigns of the earlier kings. Not that the fas had ceased to influence the lives of the citizens even in their private relations; but it had become a power outside the law,—one may believe was purposely and carefully kept outside of it by the authors of the Tables, who were drafting a legislation that was to apply to a mixed community, holding somewhat diverse ideas of what religion enjoined and could enforce. The same feeling probably accounts for the disappearance of purely religious or sacral penalties for crimes and offences. In the royal laws execration (sacratio capitis, sacer esto) was not an uncommon sanction (p. 53); but in the Tables it occurs only once pure and simple, and that with reference to an offence that could be committed only by a patrician,—material loss caused by a patron to his client (patronus si clienti fraudem facit sacer esto).⁵ In all other cases the idea that a crime was an offence against public order, for which the community was entitled in self-protection to inflict punishment on the criminal, is as prominent as the older one that it was a sin against the gods, to be expiated by dedication of the sinner to the divinity more especially outraged by his offence. Hanging and beheading, flogging to death, burning at the stake, throwing from the Tarpeian rock,—such are the secular penalties that are met with in the Tables; but in one or two instances the hanging and so forth is at the same time declared a tribute to some deity, to whom the goods of the criminal are forfeited (consecratio bonorum).

It is not unworthy of notice that traces remained in the

⁵ Serv. ad Aen. vi. 609. Comp. law of Romulus in Dion. Hal. ii. 10 (Bruns, p. 4). It is quite possible that Servius was in error in attributing this provision to the Tables. [See supra, p. 9 n.; Cuq, p. 169.]

Tables of the old system of self-help. The manus injectio of the third Table—the execution done by a creditor against his debtor—was essentially the same procedure as under the kings, but with the addition of some regulations intended to prevent its abuse. Against a thief taken in the act something of the same sort seems still to have been sanctioned;⁶ while it was still lawful to kill him on the spot if the theft was nocturnal,⁷ or even when committed during the day if he used arms in resisting his apprehension.⁸ According to Cicero⁹ there was a provision in these words—“si telum manu fugit magis quam jecit, arietem subicito:” this is just a re-enactment in illustrative language of the law attributed to Numa,¹⁰ that for homicide by misadventure—“if the weapon have sped from the hand rather than been aimed”—a ram was to be tendered as a peace-offering to the kinsmen of him who had been slain. The original purpose must have been to stay the blood-revenge, and it may have been so with Numa (p. 52); but in the Tables it can only have been intended to stay the prosecution which it was incumbent on the kinsmen of a murdered man to institute. So with talionic penalties. “Si membrum rupit, ni cum eo pacit, talio esto,”¹¹—such, according to Gellius, were the words of one of the laws of the Tables, that undoubtedly contain a reminiscence of a time when talion was recognised, “an eye for an eye, a tooth for a tooth;” but in the mouths of the decemvirs they were nothing more than a clumsy mode of enabling an injured man to exact the greatest money recompense he could, and to have it measured according to the position and fortune of the individual who had done him the injury.¹²

⁶ Gai. iii. 189.

⁷ Aul. Gell. xx. 1, § 7.

⁸ Gai. lib. 13. ad ed. prov. (Dig. xlvii. 2, fr. 54, § 2).

⁹ Cic. Top. 17, § 64; p. Tull. 21, § 51. One cannot help suspecting that this is rather a figurative paraphrase of the enactment, which may have become proverbial, than its actual words.

¹⁰ Serv. in Virg. Bucol. iv. 43 (Bruns, p. 10).

¹¹ Aul. Gell. xx. 1, § 14. [See Appendix, p. 439.]

¹² [There is no sufficient reason for supposing that talio was not actually enforced under the decemviral code. At the present day it may be observed among some uncivilised or semi-civilised communities, e.g. among the Abyssinians, the Sumatrans, and the Basutos. See Herbert Spencer, Sociology, ii. 528. On talio in Jewish law, see Leviticus xxiv. 20; cf. Cuq, p. 340.]

CHAPTER III

THE PRIVATE LAW WITHIN AND BEYOND THE TABLES

SECTION 25.—CITIZEN AND NON-CITIZEN¹

THE early law of Rome was essentially personal,—not territorial. A man enjoyed the benefit of its institutions and of its protection, not because he happened to be within Roman territory, but because he was a citizen,—one of those by whom and for whom its law was established. The theory of the early jus gentium was that a man sojourning within the bounds of a foreign state was at the mercy of the latter and its citizens; that he himself might be dealt with as a slave, and all that belonged to him appropriated by the first comer;² for he was outside the pale of the law. Without some sort of alliance with Rome a stranger—hostis, as he was called in those days—had no right to claim protection against maltreatment of his person or attempt to deprive him of his property; and even then, unless he belonged to a state entitled by treaty to the international judicial remedy of recuperatio, it was by an appeal to the good offices of the supreme magistrate, and not by means of any action of the jus civile.³ So far did this go that, in the time of Gaius, when recuperatio had become a thing of the far past, if a non-citizen had had a thing stolen from him, he could not maintain a civil actio furti against the thief without the aid in the pleadings of the praetorian device of a fiction of citizenship;—a fiction which had in like manner to be employed if he was the thief and the action against him, the penalties being imposed by a statute that applied to none but citizens.⁴ The domestic relations of a stranger were beyond the cognisance of the Roman tribunals; he might be husband and father, with rights over his wife and children according to the law of his own state, but on these a Roman court could not be called to adjudicate. He might claim to be heir under a testament or by intestacy according to the law of his own country; but on the validity of his claim no Roman magistrate or judge could be asked to express an opinion. Just as little would they listen to him if he claimed the rights the law of Rome accorded to a husband or father or heir; those rights were the heritage of the citizen, in which a stranger could have no participation.

¹ See Müller-Jochims, Gesch. d. Völkerrechts im Alterthum (Leipsic, 1848), p. 133 sq.; Voigt, Das Jus Naturale d. Römer, vol. ii. p. 8 sq.; Van Wetter, "La condition civile des étrangers d'après le droit romain," appended to Laurent's Droit civil international, vol. i. (Brussels, 1880), p. 667 sq.; Voigt, XII Tafeln, vol. i. §§ 24, 28.

² This doctrine is embalmed in the Digest as still the law of Rome in the time of Justinian (Dig. xlix. 15, fr. 5, § 2).

³ Some great authorities, such as Keller, Mommsen, and Van Wetter, hold that a stranger who enjoyed commercium was entitled, by some modifications of their words of style or the intervention of a procurator, to the benefit of the

Conubium, commercium, and actio were the three abstract terms in which were summed up the private rights⁵ peculiar to a Roman citizen under the jus civile. Conubium was the capacity to enter into a marriage which would be productive of the patria potestas and agnation of Roman law, these in turn being the foundation of the intestate succession of sui heredes and agnates, and of the tutories and curatories claimable by the agnates or the clansmen. *Commercium*⁶ was the capacity legis actiones, as, for example, one per sacramentum. But against this view it is to be remembered (1) that modified actions (actiones utiles or ficticiae) were first introduced by the praetors, and that when the legis actiones were going out of use; (2) that procuratory was unknown under the system of the legis actiones (Gai. iv. 82); (3) that it was of the essence of the judicia legitima, of which the legis actiones in personam were the earliest forms, that parties and judge should all be citizens (Gai. iv. §§ 104, 109); and (4) that if the legis actiones had been competent recuperatio would have been unnecessary. [See p. 106, note 10.]

⁴ Gai. iv. 37. [But see as to delictual actions by and against peregrini in the early law, Mommsen, SR. iii. p. 606 n. and, generally, Girard, pp. 108, 109.]

⁵ Testamenti factio was a public right (Papinian, as in § 11, note 17). So was adrogation. From one point of view tutory was a public duty; but as a right it was private. [On conubium, see Karlowa, Röm. RG. ii. p. 70.]

⁶ Ulpian (Frag. xix. 5) defines commercium as emendi vendendique invicem

for acquiring or alienating property by civil methods unconnected with conubium, such as mancipation, cession in court, or usucapion; and of becoming a party to an obligation by any civil contract, such as nexum, sponsion, and one at least of the forms of literal contract. Actio was the capacity for being a party to a legis actio,—an action clothed in the forms of the jus civile, and employed for the vindication, protection, or enforcement of a right either included in or flowing from conubium or commercium, or directly conferred by a statute that embraced only citizens in its purview.⁷ Those three capacities were at common law enjoyed only by Roman citizens. A non-citizen—originally hostis, and afterwards usually called *peregrinus*⁸—in time came to be regarded as entitled to all the rights the jus gentium recognised as belong-

jus. The definition was probably traditional. But in the early law emere vendere did not mean to buy and sell, but, generally, to acquire and alienate; see authorities in Appendix, Note B. No. 1 of 2nd paragraph, and Pompon. in Dig. xl. 7, fr. 29, § 1. The invicem in Ulpian's definition suggests a relative meaning. In fact, both conubium and commercium had abstract, concrete, and relative meanings. In the abstract they were prerogatives of Roman citizens generally. But though a citizen had conubium in the abstract, yet if he was under marrying age he was without it in the concrete; and though every citizen had commercium in the abstract, yet in the concrete he might be without it, as when he had been interdicted on account of prodigality (Paul. iii. 4a, 7). Relatively every citizen had both conubium and commercium with his fellow-citizens; but not with non-citizens, unless the latter enjoyed them by special concession. [As Carle, Origini, p. 460, and others point out the terms conubium and commercium should not be restricted to the relations of cives and non-cives. Originally they would be appropriate to transactions between the gentes. Consistently with n. 3, cession in court should not be included under commercium.]

⁷ As, for example, the law of the XII Tables, and the Aquilian law of 467 B.C. giving an action for damages for culpable injury to property. Although the wrong for which a remedy was sought in an action upon the latter statute had about it nothing peculiar to the jus civile, yet Gaius says expressly (iv. 30) that such an action was competent to or against a peregrinus only under a fiction of citizenship.

⁸ Neither "alien" nor "foreigner" is an adequate rendering of peregrinus. For peregrini included not only citizens of other states or colonies, independent or dependent, but also ἀπολίδες,—men who could not call themselves citizens (cives) at all; as, for example, the dediticii, whom Rome had vanquished and whose civic organisation she had destroyed, offenders sent into banishment, etc.; and until Caracalla's general grant of the franchise, the greater proportion of her provincial subjects were also spoken of as peregrins. Still this term, though linguistically objectionable, is a safer word than "non-citizen"; for the latter would include the Junian Latins of the early empire (§ 66), who, though not citizens, yet were not reckoned as peregrini.

ing to a freeman, and to take part as freely as a Roman in any transaction of the jus gentium; but that was not until Rome, through contact with other nations and the growth of trade and commerce, had found it necessary to modify her jurisprudence by the adoption of many new institutions of a more liberal and less exclusive character than those of the jus civile. From participation in the rights conferred by the latter the non-citizen was in theory excluded; he could enjoy them to a limited extent only indirectly as a friend or guest, or directly either as a citizen of an allied state or as an ἄπολις to whom they had more or less been specially conceded.

Amicitia and *hospitium*⁹ in all probability were in observance before Rome was founded, and were adopted by her as institutions essential to the pacific intercourse of states. The first was a treaty or convention of friendship, formal or informal, guaranteeing the safe sojourn of members of the one state within the territory of the other. Amici were regarded as in publica tutela of the power within whose bounds they were temporarily resident, and entitled to protection in their persons and property through the direct intervention of king or other chief magistrate.¹⁰ Hospitium, which might be either public or private, i.e. accorded either to the citizens of another state generally or only to an individual, and which was usually hereditary, involved something like patronage; for the hospes was under the protection of some one paterfamilias in particular, who by the rules of fas was bound to see to his safety and honourable entreatment as he would to that of his client, with this difference, that, while the latter was a dependant, he was bound to treat a hospes as his equal. So

⁹ See Mommsen, "Das röm. Gastrecht," in his Röm. Forsch. vol. i. p. 319 sq.

¹⁰ Justinian says (Inst. iv. 10, pr.) that under the system of procedure per legis actiones procuratory in litigation was allowed only pro populo, pro libertate, or pro tutela; and it has been suggested that the latter may have included intervention for an amicus as in tutela of the whole Roman people. But this would have been to give to those who were amici and nothing more—as, for example, a Carthaginian under the treaty of 406 u.c.—a right of action in excess of that allowed to the much more intimately allied Latins, who had only recuperatio. [See Gai. iv. § 82; Dig. l. 17, fr. 123 pr.—for the maxim "nemo alieno nomine lege agere potest."] urgent was a man's duty to a stranger who stood related to him as a guest, that, according to Sabinus, it came next that he owed to his children and his wards, and took precedence of that owing to his clients and his kinsmen.¹¹ But there is no reason to suppose that, in the earlier period of the republic at all events, it gave the guest any right beyond that of hospitality and protection through the medium of his patron. Anything further depended upon treaty in the case of foreign states, concession by Rome in the case of her deditician subjects. The latter seem to have had conferred on them what was technically called jus nexi mancipiique,—the right of using Roman forms of contract and conveyance, and probably Roman actions for their protection; but we have no authentic details in regard to it.¹²

Rome's treaties with foreign states often assured reciprocally commercium and recuperatio, and sometimes even conubium. With the cities of the Latin League, for example, Rome had all three;¹³ so with the Hernicans; in certain cases with the Samnites; and with the Campanians under the treaty of 414 U.C.¹⁴ More frequently her treaties conferred nothing more than commercium and recuperatio, and often were limited to amicitia, with trading privileges on an international footing. But conubium in such cases meant nothing more than right of intermarriage. It empowered a Roman citizen to marry a foreign woman, and vice versa, ¹¹ Gell. v. 13, § 5. Gellius himself, however, postpones the hospes to the client.

¹² Voigt (XII Tafeln, vol. i. 373) connects it with the mysterious provision in the Tables about the forcti sanatesque mentioned in a very defective passage in Festus, v. Sanates (Bruns, p. 290), and which he reconstructs as follows (vol. i. p. 733):—"Nexum mancipiumque idem quod Quiritium forcti sanatisque supra infraque Urbem esto." "Nex . . . forcti sanati" are the only words of the provision legible in Festus; but he says the sanates were people who had fallen from their allegiance but soon returned to it, while the forcti had remained true. Might not "nexum mancipiumque forcti sanatisque idem esto" be sufficient? See also Voigt's Jus. nat. vol. iv. pp. 286-285; and for a different view, Hoffmann, Das Gesetz d. XII Tafeln von den Forcten u. Sanaten, Vienna, 1866.

¹³ The moment Rome became associated with the Latin cities, there was conubium as a matter of course; an express concession by convention was unnecessary; which accounts for the absence of any mention of it in the Cassian treaty of the year 261.

¹⁴ Voigt, Jus. nat. vol. ii. pp. 147-154.

so that in each country the union was regarded as justae nuptiae. But it gave the husband no manus over his wife; she did not become a Roman because he was one; on the contrary, she remained peregrina, and was only naturally, not civilly, a member of her husband's family. His children by her, however, were in his potestas; that was the ipso jure consequence of the marriage; whereas manus resulted from confarreation or coemption, and with a peregrina these were impossible.¹⁵ Had manus, which was dissoluble only by diffareation or remancipation, been an accompaniment of marriage between a Roman and a peregrin, it would have been impossible to accept the story told by Dionysius, that in 257 U.C., before their war with the Latins which ended in the victory of Lake Regillus, the Roman senate ordained that all mixed marriages should be held dissolved, so that all Latin women married to Roman citizens should be free to go back to their own country, while all Roman women married to Latins were required to return home.¹⁶ Commercium conferred by treaty gave the citizens of the one state the right of trafficking within the bounds of the other, according to the forms of conveyance and contract peculiar to the latter. The only question of difficulty connected with it is whether or not it included a right in favour of the citizens of one of the allied states to hold land and other immovable estate within the territory of the other. The fact that in time Latins did settle in Rome, and acquired a limited vote in the comitia of the tribes, is not necessarily to be attributed to their possession of commercium; but opinions vary on the subject. The third element in the triad, recuperatio, often in treaties called actio, was the right to have the benefit of judicial procedure in an international form, and will be referred to in a subsequent section (§ 38).

¹⁵ As coemption was a purely civil transaction per aes et libram, and commercium (which included capacity for mancipation) always ran with conubium, it may be that manus could be acquired by coemption with a peregrina; but the authorities seem adverse to this view. [See Karlowa, Röm. RG. ii. p. 70, who differs from the view expressed in the text.]

¹⁶ Dion. v. 1. His further statement, that, of the issue of such dissolved marriages, sons were to go with their fathers, and daughters with their mothers, is not so credible.

SECTION 26.—THE GENS OR CLAN

That the gentile relations should be affected by the decemviral code, one of whose main purposes was to give all the citizens equal rights¹ whether they happened to be members of a gentile association or not, was inevitable. Some of the clan customs and prerogatives no doubt did not require to be disturbed—those, namely, whose exercise could give no occasion for collision with the common law (lex publica). So far as they did not conflict with this last, any lawful association or incorporation (sodalitas) was entitled to make such rules for its own government as it thought fit, and enforce them amongst its members;² and the same liberty could not be refused to the patrician clans. They retained, therefore, their right of making statutes, their peculiar sacra, their lands and other property, their disciplinary jurisdiction over their members, their right to refuse their consent to the withdrawal of a family from their ranks in order to found a new gens, their power to sanction or forbid the marriage of a female member, who had not the gentis enuptio as a personal privilege, with a man belonging to another gentile house:³ the exercise of such privileges as these, which affected patricians alone, could not possibly conflict with the common law, whose provisions affected patrician and plebeian alike. But it was different with matters which, though previously regulated within the gens by gentile custom or statute, were now brought within the domain of the common law, and made the subject of general regulation. The gens in times past had claimed a right of succession to any of its members dying without a testament and without heirs of his body or heirs by adrogation (§ 11); but a new order of intestate succession was introduced by the Tables (§ 32), and to have allowed gentile statute or custom to have set it aside would have been inconsistent with the idea of aequum jus. So with tutory and curatory; the gens had provided for the guardianship of its pupil, female, and imbecile members, and charged itself with the superintendence of their guardians (§ 9); but the Tables dealt with the whole matter in the interests of non-gentile as well as gentile citizens, and any gentile rules, therefore, in reference to it were for the future subordinated to those of the common law. It was the same with the interdiction of a spendthrift (p. 32); the right to ordain it now passed to the consuls and afterwards to the praetor. And as regards clients, the jurisdiction formerly exercised over them by the gens passed to the ordinary civil magistrate, except in questions between them and their patrons not falling within the purview of the Tables; for now they were citizens, entitled to equal rights with their fellows; and not the least of these was the right to sue and be sued in the ordinary tribunals, and to be judged according to the new jus scriptum.⁴

¹ “Duodecim tabulae finis aequi juris” (Tac. Annal. iii. 27). [Tacitus means that by the Tables the law was perfected; see Ernesti’s note in Bekker’s edition.]

² Gai. lib. 4. ad XII Tab. (Dig. xlvii. 22, 4). [The idea of a corporation in the modern sense was, however, not yet realised in the gentes or sodalitates.]

³ Mommsen, Röm. Forsch. vol. i. p. 10. It is not certain that the sanction of the gens was necessary in the case of a filiafamilias passing in manum mariti, for her marriage could not defeat any gentile chance of succession; but the reason of it is obvious in the case of a woman sui juris.

SECTION 27.—THE FAMILY RELATIONS PROPER

1. So far as appears, no serious inroad was made by the Tables on the law of husband and wife, unless in the recognition of the legality of marriage entered into without any solemnity, and not involving that subjection of the wife to the husband (manus) which was a necessary consequence of the patrician confarreation (p. 26) and plebeian coemption (p. 63). These were left untouched. But it seems to have become a practice with some of the plebeians to tie the marriage bond rather loosely in the first instance; possibly—as became quite general at a later period—in consequence of objection by the women to renounce their independence and right to retain their own property and earnings; more probably because taking a woman to be merely the mother of their children (matrimonium) had been forced upon them before coemption had been introduced as a means of making her a lawful wife, and so they had become in a manner habituated to it. But there seems also to have been an idea that, as a man might acquire the ownership of a thing to which his legal title was defective by prolonged possession of it, so he might acquire manus, with all its consequences, over the woman with whom he had thus informally united himself, by prolonged cohabitation with her as his wife. This had become customary law.¹ The Tables accepted it; all that was needed was to define the conditions under which manus should be held to have been superinduced, and the wife converted from a doubtful uxor into a lawful materfamilias.² Hence the provision that if a woman, married neither by confarreation nor coemption, desired to retain her independence, she must periodically absent herself for three nights from her husband's house; twelve months' uninterrupted cohabitation being required to give him that power over her which would have been created instantly had the marriage been accompanied by either of the recognised solemnities.³

⁴ [Libertini became plebeian citizens. See Mommsen, SR. iii. pp. 72, 83, referring to the case of the Claudii and Marcelli in Cic. De Orat. i. 39, § 176; Girard, p. 140, n. 8.]

Amongst the fragments of the Tables so industriously collected there is none that refers to a wife's marriage provision (dos); but it is hardly conceivable that it was as yet unknown. Justinian says that in ancient times it was regarded as a donation to the husband with his wife,⁴ rather than as a

¹ [This is the so-called marriage by usus which some writers of authority regard as quite as ancient as any of the modes of constituting manus. See Bernhöft, Staat u. Recht, p. 187; MacLennan, Primitive Marriage, 1876, p. 7; Esmein, Mélanges, p. 9 sq. With this may be compared the Scottish marriage by cohabitation with habit and repute (see Fraser, Husband and Wife, vol. i. pp. 187, 391), and marriage by the ancient laws of Jutland (see Dareste, Journal des Savants, Feb. 1881.)]

² "Genus est uxor, ejus duæ formæ: una matrumfamilias, eæ sunt quæ in manum convenerunt; altera earum, quæ tantummodo uxores habentur" (Cic. Top. 3, § 14). Boethius, commenting on the passage, says that the word materfamilias was applied only to wives who had passed in manum by coemption. His error may be due to the fact that he derived his information from some author who wrote after manus by cohabitation had gone out of date, and after confarreation had been declared by statute to be no longer productive of it except quoad sacra (Gai. i. §§ 111, 136). [See supra, p. 31 n. 27.]

³ Gai. i. 111; Macrob. Sat. i. 3, § 9.

⁴ Cod. Just. v. 3. 20. [The words used are "antiqui juris conditores inter separate estate that was to be used by him while the marriage lasted, but to revert to her or her representatives on its dissolution. And it is easy to see that where there was manus, the wife becoming a member of her husband's family and everything of hers becoming his, such must originally have been its character. But even then, when a man gave his daughter (filiafamilias)—who could have nothing of her own—in marriage, and promised her husband a portion with her, there must have been some process of law for compelling him to pay it; and Voigt's conjecture that an actio dictae dotis was employed for the purpose has much in its favour.⁵

As regards divorce, Cicero alludes vaguely to a provision in the Tables about a man depriving his wife of the house-keys and turning her out of doors, with some such words as "Take what is thine and get thee gone."⁶ A procedure so summary and simple can hardly have applied where marriage had been contracted by confarreation or coemption. We are told that divorce, except for grave misconduct on the part of a wife, though lawful, was in practice unknown until the sixth century of the city;⁷ and that, until the same date, any man who turned his wife away, however serious the ground, without the cognition of the family council (concilium domesticum), was liable to penalties at the hands of the censors.⁸ Moreover, a donationes etiam dotes connumerant," but Justinian is not apparently referring to the law of so early a period as the XII Tables.]

⁵ Voigt, XII Tafeln, vol. ii. p. 486. The dotis dictio of the time of the classical jurists, and described by Gaius (iii. 96) and Ulpian (Frag. vi. §§ 1, 2), was of a different character; for it presumed the absence of manus and possibility of the wife herself being debtor for it. Dictio by a parent in the older law must have been regarded as something more than a nudum pactum, and therefore actionable on the strength of the confarreation or coemption of which it was an accompaniment; just as a man's dicta about the qualities of land he was selling were actionable because made part of the conveyance per aes et libram (infra, p. 133). [See Karlowa, Röm. RG. ii. p. 201; Cuq, p. 231 sq.]

⁶ Cic. Phil. ii. 28, § 69. See also Cic. De Orat. i. 40, § 183; Gai. ad ed. prov. in Dig. xxiv. 2, fr. 2, § 1.

⁷ [This statement of Gellius regarding the divorce of Sp. Carvilius Ruga being the first case of repudiation without fault on the wife's part, is open to question. See Val. Maximus, ii. 9, 2; Voigt, Röm. RG. p. 783, n. 26; infra, p. 210, n. 9.]

⁸ [This must be held to apply to manus marriages only, which, however, were far the most common down to the sixth century. On the other hand, it is almost certain that a wife could not divorce her husband. See Esmein, Mélanges, p. 23 sq.]

confarreate marriage could be dissolved inter vivos only by diffareation,⁹ and a coemptionate one only by remancipation.¹⁰ It is, therefore, in the highest degree probable that the provision to which Cicero alludes had reference to the loose and informal plebeian marriage in which the wife was at most uxor only and not materfamilias; and that its purpose was to ensure the use before witnesses of a prescribed but simple act, with corresponding words, which should serve as proof positive that the relation had been put an end to.¹¹

2. In connection with the law of parent and child, and with a view probably to settle possible questions about the right of an infant born after a man's death to succeed to him as one of the heirs of his body, the Tables declared that the birth must be within ten months of the alleged father's death, that being the longest possible period of gestation.¹² Two or three other fragments relate to the patria potestas (p. 27). This power of the family head over his children was assumed to be so well established by customary law as to need no statutory sanction or definition. The only question of principle one would not have been surprised to find dealt with is whether potestas resulted from an informal marriage that had not been followed by a year's uninterrupted cohabitation. The patricians, in the debate on the Canuleian law a few years later (pp. 34, 84), could find no language opprobrious enough to depict such unions; yet the silence of the Tables on this head, so far as can be judged from the fragments we possess, seems to indicate that, although the position

⁹ Paul. Diac. v. Diffareatio (Bruns, p. 266). [Gellius, x. 15, states that the confarreate marriages of the flamines Diales could only be dissolved by death; Karlowa, Röm. RG. ii. p. 186, holds that diffareatio was originally unknown. An inscription of the early Empire mentions a sacerdos confar. et diffar. (Orelli, No. 2648).]

¹⁰ In the time of Gaius (i. 137a) a coemptionate marriage might be dissolved quoad the matrimonial relationship by simple repudiation; remancipation was necessary only for the purpose of extinguishing the manus. But this is obviously the doctrine of a much later period than the Tables, and introduced after manus had come to be regarded as a relation capable of existing apart from marriage (see Gai. i. 114).

¹¹ [On principle, one would expect that manus by usus could only be dissolved by remancipation, but the texts are silent; see Girard, p. 155, n. 8.]

¹² Gell. iii. 16, § 12. At a later period it became not uncommon for a testator, in providing for posthumous issue, to make birth within ten months after his decease an express condition of his succession. [See Gellius ut sup.]

of the wife was an inferior one until a year's uninterrupted cohabitation had been completed, that of the children was the same, so far as the potestas was concerned,¹³ as if they had been born of a confarreate or coemptionate marriage.¹⁴ This limitation is said by Cicero to have been put by the Tables on the father's power (though Dionysius attributes it to Romulus),¹⁵—that, while he might expose a new-born infant that was grievously deformed, he was not allowed to kill it;¹⁶ but this, of course, did not affect his general right of life and death, which was an adjunct of his domestic jurisdiction.

Another interesting point of detail in connection with the patria potestas was dealt with in a law which runs—"si pater-[familias] ter filium venum ducit, a patre filius liber esto."¹⁷ This came to be construed by the jurists as meaning that so powerful was the bond of the potestas that it could not definitively be loosed until the father had three times gone through the process of fictitious sale by which emancipation was effected.¹⁸ But the conception of the law seems to indicate that its original purpose was to confer a benefit on a son in potestate, by declaring him ipso jure free from it on a certain event, rather than to place difficulties in the way of his emancipation. "If a house-father have thrice sold his son, the latter shall be free from his father." It reads as if the intention were to rescue the son from what, by its frequent repetition, was suggestive of a total absence of parental affection rather than reluctant obedience to overwhelming necessity. May not its object have been to restrain the practice, which ¹³ Confarreate birth was a necessary qualification for the higher priesthoods (Gai. i. 112).

¹⁴ Karlowa (Röm. Ehe, p. 71) expresses the opinion that the issue of a formless marriage, which had not been made a manus one before their birth by a year's usus, were not in potestate, and could not be their father's sui heredes. But potestas depended on justae nuptiae, i.e. the existence of conubium,—not on a marriage ceremony; and the fact is notorious that marriage in the later jurisprudence was purely consensual, and the issue in potestate notwithstanding. [See Mommsen, Röm. SR. iii. 34; Girard, p. 143.]

¹⁵ Dion. Hal. ii. 15; supra, p. 28.

¹⁶ Cic. De Leg. iii. 8, § 19.

¹⁷ Gai. i. 132; Ulp. x. 1. This also is attributed by Dionysius (ii. 27) to Romulus.

¹⁸ [On this cf. Karlowa, Röm. RG. ii. p. 243, and Girard, p. 183. Except as regards sons one mancipation was sufficient. On noxal surrender of a filius see Gai. iv. § 79.]

prevailed to a late period in the empire, of men giving their children to their creditors in security for their loans,¹⁹—a process that, at the time of the Tables, could be effected only by an actual transfer of the child per aes et libram as a free bondman (mancipii causa), under condition of reconveyance when the loan was repaid?

So far as appears, there was not a word in the Tables about adrogation of a paterfamilias or adoption of a filiusfamilias as a means of recruiting a family when natural issue failed. The inference as regards the first is that, being competent only in the comitia of the curies, to which the plebeians as yet had no access, it was still an exclusively patrician institution.²⁰ The second was an adaptation of the conveyance per aes et libram (§ 13). The natural parent mancipated his child to a friend for a nominal price (the process being twice repeated in the case of a son), and the friend then remancipated to the parent. In the latter's hands the child was no longer in potestate, but in mancipio; he was now in a position in which he could be transferred to the adopter. This was effected by in jure cessio,—a friendly suit in which the adopter averred that the child was his filiusfamilias, and in which judgment was at once given in his favour on the natural parent's admission or tacit acquiescence.²¹

3. The nature of the relation between master and slave, like that of manus and patria potestas, seems also to have been too notorious to require exposition in the Tables. We have record of no more than two references to it, one dealing with the case of a slave who had a conditional testamentary gift of freedom (statu liber),²² the other with noxal surrender (noxae deditio).²³ The first is interesting as showing the advance that had already been made in testamentary disposition,—that a testator might not only by his last will enfranchise a slave, but that he might ¹⁹ Paul. in Dig. xx. 3, 5, says that a creditor knowingly taking a filiusfamilias from his debtor as a security was liable to banishment. But the practice still continued; for it was again prohibited by Diocletian in Cod. viii. 16, 6, and iv. 48, 1, and by Justinian in Nov. 134, c. 7.

²⁰ [See supra, p. 48, n. 15.]

²¹ Gai. i. 134. [Remancipation to the parent was not essential.]

²² Ulp. Frag. ii. 4; Modest. in Dig. xl. 7, 25. [But see Cuq, p. 196, n. 4.]

²³ Gai. iv. 76; Just. Inst. iv. 9, pr.

annex a condition, such as payment of a certain sum by the slave to the heir. The enactment of the Tables was that the condition was not to be defeated by the heir's alienation of the slave; his conditional status was to run with him, and payment to any one acquiring him from the heir to be as effectual as if made to the latter himself. The provision about noxal surrender in all probability was not limited to a slave, but was to the effect that if a member of a man's family (familiaris), i.e. a son or a daughter in potestate or a slave, committed a theft from²⁴ or did mischief to property belonging to a third party, or a domestic animal belonging to one man did harm to another, the father of the delinquent child, or the owner of the slave or animal, should either surrender him or it to the person injured or make reparation in damages. In course of time the surrender came to be regarded as a means of avoiding the primary obligation of making reparation. But comparative jurisprudence recognises in the enactment of the Tables a modified survival of the ancient right of an injured party to have the delinquent corpus,—man, beast, or thing,—given up to him to wreak his revenge upon it privately;²⁵ the modification consisting in the alternative of reparation offered to the owner. This noxal surrender, failing reparation, had gone out of use in the case of daughters in potestate before the time of Gaius, and in the case of sons before that of Justinian; but the law remained unchanged so far as slaves and domestic animals were concerned even in that emperor's legislation.

SECTION 28.—GUARDIANSHIP AND INTRODUCTION OF THE ORDER OF AGNATES

So long as Rome was patrician the gens charged itself with seeing to the guardianship of a clansman's orphan pupil children and his widow and unmarried daughters above pupillarity after his decease (tutela), as well as with that of male members of his family who were sui juris but above the age of pupillarity, when they chanced to be lunatic, imbecile, prodigal, or helplessly infirm (cura, curatio, curatela).¹ That was on the supposition, as regarded children, widow, and unmarried daughters above pupillarity, that no testamentary appointment of tutors by their deceased parent had displaced the gens (though whether testamentary nominations were then held competent it is impossible to say). The gens in council, in all probability, appointed one of its members to act as tutor or curator as the case might be, itself prescribed his duties, and itself called him to account for any failure in his administration. His office was regarded as of a most sacred character, at least when his wards were pupils; Gellius and others speak repeatedly of the grave nature of the trust that was held to be reposed in tutors and of the heinousness of unfaithfulness to it.²

²⁴ [For manifest theft there were also direct corporal penalties.]

²⁵ Dirksen, Civilistische Abhandlungen (Berlin, 1820), vol. i. p. 104; Holmes, Lectures on the Common Law (Boston, 1881), p. 9. [See criticism of the above view in Cuq, Inst. Jurid. pp. 368, 369; cf. also Bekker, Akt. i. 186; and Girard, Les actions noxales, 1888, p. 48. With the actio de pauperie, cf. the Judaic law in Exodus xxi. 28.]

But as this old gentile tutory could not be extended to the plebeians, among whom some law of guardianship was as much required as among their fellow-citizens of the higher order, the decemvirs found it expedient to devise a new one of universal application. The Tables contained no express authority for testamentary nomination of tutors to the widow of the testator, or to his pupil children and grown-up unmarried daughters; but such appointment, if unknown previously, was soon held to be justified by a liberal interpretation of the very comprehensive provision—"uti legassit suae rei, ita jus esto."³ In the absence of testamentary appointment the nearest male agnates of lawful age were to be tutors. This tutory of agnates was an invention of the decemvirs, just as was the agnates' right of succession on intestacy (pp. 43, 163). The plebeians had no gentes, at least until a much later period; so, to make the law equal for all, it was necessary to introduce a new order of heirs and tutors. "Tutores . . . ex lege XII Tabularum introducuntur . . . agnati" is the very notable language of Ulpian.⁴ And his words are very similar in speaking of their right of succession; for while he says of testamentary inheritances no more than that they were confirmed by the XII Tables,⁵ he explains that the legitimae hereditates of agnates and patrons were derived from them.⁶ The phrases legitima cognatio,⁷ legitima hereditas, legitimi heredes, tutela legitima, tutores legitimi, themselves proclaim the origin of agnation, agnatic inheritance, and agnatic tutory; for though the word legitimus might be applied to any institution based on statute, yet in the ordinary case it indicated one introduced by the XII Tables,⁸ the law of laws.

¹ [Curatela is not used in the texts. Its use in the above sense is of late mediaeval origin.]

² "Ex moribus populi Romani primum juxta parentes locum tenere pupillos debere, fidei tutelaeque nostrae creditos. . . . M. Cato . . . ita scripsit: quod majores sanctius habuere defendi pupillos quam clientem non fallere" (Gell. v. 13, §§ 2, 4).

³ So the law is given by Gaius, ii. 24. The words "super pecunia tutelave," interjected by Ulpian (Frag. xi. 24) and other authors after "legassit," savour of a gloss by the interpreters. [See infra, p. 158, n. 3.]

A man's agnates were those of his kinsmen who were subject to the same patria potestas as himself, or would have been had the common ancestor been still alive.⁹ A man's sons and daughters in potestate, therefore, whether the relationship was by birth or adoption, and his wife in manu (being filiae loco),¹⁰ were each other's agnates;¹¹ but a wife not in

⁴ Ulp. Frag. xi. 3; see note 7.

⁵ Ulp. ad leg. Jul. in Dig. l. 16, 130,—"lege duodecim Tabularum testamentariae hereditates confirmantur."

⁶ Ulp. Frag. xxvii. 5,—"legitimae hereditatis jus . . . ex lege duodecim Tabularum descendit." This derivation of agnatic inheritance from the Twelve Tables was specially noticed by Danz in his Gesch. d. r. R. vol. ii. p. 95, but is generally overlooked.

⁷ "Vocantur autem agnati qui legitima cognatione juncti sunt" (Gai. iii. 10). Prior to the Tables kinship and kinsmen were always spoken of as cognatio and cognati; it was only after it that these words came to have a narrower signification, and to be limited to kinsmen other than agnates.

⁸ "Legitimi tutores sunt, qui ex lege aliqua descendunt: per eminentiam autem legitimi dicuntur, qui ex lege XII Tabularum introducuntur" (Ulp. xi. 3).

⁹ This definition is simpler than those given by Gaius (i. 156), and Justinian (Inst. i. 15, § 1, and iii. 3, § 1). That of Ulpian (Frag. xxvi. 1), which seems to deny that any female except a sister could stand related to a man as an agnate, is influenced by the restrictive interpretation put on the word adgnatus in connection with the law of succession by the jurists of the latter half of the republic, and inconsistent with the meaning borne by it in the Tables (see Inst. iii. 2, § 3a).

¹⁰ Gai. i. §§ 115b, 136, ii. 139.

¹¹ Although a husband and his wife in manu, a paterfamilias and his children in potestate, were in some sense agnates, yet, for obvious reasons, they were not usually so called. In everyday language, agnation was a collateral relationship. By some jurists—e.g. Ulpian (Frag. xxvi. 1)—brothers and sisters by the same manu was not her children's agnate, nor were children who had been emancipated or otherwise capite minuti (§ 29) the agnates of either their brothers and sisters or their mother in manu. A man was an agnate of his brother's children, assuming always that there had been no capitis deminutio on either side; but he was not an agnate of his sister's children, for they were not ejusdem familiae; ¹² they were agnates of their father's family, not of their mother's. In like manner, and again assuming the absence of minutio capitis, the children of brothers were each other's agnates, but not the children of a brother and sister or of two sisters. Brothers and sisters were agnates of the second degree; a man and his brother's children were of the third, the children of two brothers (consobrini) of the fourth, and so on; it being a condition, however, that the kinship should always result either from lawful marriage or adoption in one or other of its forms.

When, therefore, a man died leaving pupil male descendants, or unmarried female descendants, who by his death became sui juris,¹³ they got their brothers of lawful age as their tutors; if he was survived by his wife, and she had been in manu, her sons, or it might be stepsons, acted for her in the same capacity; in either case they took office as the nearest qualified male agnates. If the widow had no sons or stepsons of full age, and the children consequently no brothers, the tutory devolved on the agnates next in order,—i.e. the brothers-german and consanguinean of the deceased husband and father, for they were agnates of the third degree. And so with agnates of the fourth and remoter degrees.¹⁴ Failing agnates who could demonstrate their propinquity, the tutory father were in preference called consanguinei. (Of course they could not be agnates unless they had the same father.) [See also Dig. xxxviii. 16, fr. 2, § 1.]

¹² Ulp. Frag. xxvi. 1.

¹³ It was persons sui juris that alone needed or could have tutors. A grandson in potestate, if his father was alive and had not undergone capitis deminutio, passed into the latter's potestas on his grandfather's death, and did not become sui juris.

¹⁴ To determine the degree of propinquity between two persons, it was necessary to count the generations upwards from the first to the common ancestor, and downwards from him to the second. Consequently brothers were related in the second degree, uncle and nephew in the third, first cousins in the fourth, and so on: "tot gradus quot generationes."

probably passed to the gens when the ward happened to belong to one. This is nowhere expressly stated; but Cicero gives what he represents to be an enactment of the Tables, making the fellow-gentiles of a lunatic his guardians on failure of agnates;¹⁵ and analogy seems to justify the extension of the same rule to the case of sane pupil and female wards.¹⁶

It is natural to suppose that in introducing an institution that to the plebeians at least was new, the Tables must have given some indication of the nature of the powers, duties, and responsibilities of tutors. They could not be very minute; for tutory was an officium, to be fulfilled not according to any hard and fast lines, but according to the dictates of fides,—an honest and conscientious regard for the interests of the ward. All we know with certainty is, that, if a tutor converted anything of his pupil ward's to his own use, he was liable in an action ex delicto—a variety of the actio furti—for double its value;¹⁷ and that if his administration was suspicious, any one might raise an action in the pupil's interest to have him removed.¹⁸ There was, no doubt, liability to account in every case when the tutory of a male pupil (at least) came to an end, but it does not appear how originally it was enforced; the ordinary actio tutelae, though spoken of by Cicero as if of some antiquity, seems to have proceeded on lines that did not become familiar until the sixth century at soonest.¹⁹

The curatory of minors above pupillarity was of much later date than the Tables. The only curatories they sanctioned were those of lunatics and spendthrifts. A lunatic (furiosus) was committed to the care of his agnates, and, failing them, of his fellow-gentiles;²⁰ and a few words in Festus seem to sug-

¹⁵ Cic. De Inv. ii. 50, § 149. Comp. Paul. in Dig. l. 16, 53.

¹⁶ The gens succeeded ab intestato on failure of agnates; and Gaius (i. 165) says it was a general principle that tutory and succession should run together. But it ought to be observed that the succession of the gens had ample justification in the rule which denied it to agnates of a remoter degree if any of a nearer one existed when it opened (Gai. iii. §§ 12, 22); whereas no such rule was recognised in devolution of a tutory (Just. Inst. iii. 2, 7). The passage in which it is supposed Gaius spoke of the right of the gens in the matter of tutory (i.e. between §§ 164 and 165 of his first book) is unfortunately illegible.

¹⁷ Tryph. in Dig. xxvi. 7, 55, § 1.

¹⁸ Ulp. in Dig. xxvi. 10, 1, § 2; Just. Inst. 1, 26, pr.

¹⁹ [See Cuq, p. 328, n. 3.]

²⁰ Cic. De Inv. ii. 50, § 148.

gest that arrangements had to be made for his safe custody.²¹ Beyond this we know nothing of the decemviral curatory of lunatics, nor to whom his guardians were responsible. The curatory of a spendthrift (prodigus) probably followed upon his interdiction. In earlier times this was a matter for the interference of his gens.²² But by the Tables the cognisance of the prodigal misconduct of a man who was squandering his patrimony (bona paterna avitague), and reducing his children to poverty, seems to have been transferred to the consul;²³ and the fact of his interdiction seems to have entitled his agnates—or rather, as he was prohibited from any longer managing his own affairs, to have rendered it necessary for them—to assume the position of his guardians.²⁴

SECTION 29.—CAPITIS DEMINUTIO¹

Whatever may have been the original signification of caput, it came to mean primarily a person whom the law regarded as capable of having rights, and derivatively his personality or jural capacity, passive and active, in public and private life. The measure of that capacity depended, according to Roman notions, on three considerations,—(1) whether he was free or slave, (2) whether, being free, he was citizen or non-citizen, and (3) what, being a citizen, was his position with regard to family. If a man was not free he had no rights at all, according to the theory alike of the jus civile and ²¹ “Ast ei custos nec escit” (Festus, v. Nec; Müll. p. 162).

²² [Jhering, Geist, i. 196, and most recent writers, think that the interdiction was originally a purely private matter and proceeded from the gens, or in the case of plebeians from the body of agnates; contra Girard, pp. 219, 220.]

²³ Paul. Sent. iii. 4a, 7; Ulp. in Dig. xxvii. 10, 1. [Did bona paterna avitague apply solely to the res familiaris? It is difficult to suppose that they included res nec Mancipi. See Voigt, XII Tafeln, ii. 343, 726, and in a contrary sense, Cuq, Inst. Jurid. p. 313, n. 6.]

²⁴ Ulp. Frag. xii. 2. [See Karlowa, Röm. RG. ii. p. 302 sq.]

¹ Savigny, System, vol. ii. §§ 68-74, and Beilage vi.; Puchta, Inst. vol. ii. §§ 219, 220; Rattigan, The Roman Law of Persons (London, 1873), p. 58 sq.; Pernice, Labeo, vol. i. p. 172 sq.; Kuntze, Excurses, p. 428; Moyle, Inst. vol. i. p. 172 sq. [H. Krüger, Geschichte d. cap. dem. (Breslau, 1887), in which work an exhaustive criticism of the principal theories on the subject is given; Cohn, Beiträge zur Bearbeitung des röm. Rechts, i. p. 41 sq.; Cuq, Inst. Jurid. pp. 199-204; Karlowa, Röm. RG. ii. p. 252 sq. See also Appendix, p. 422 sq.]

the jus gentium;² it was not until the doctrines of the jus naturale began to gain ground that he was reckoned as anything more than a chattel, spoken of as a persona, or taken directly under the protection of the law. Being free, the extent of his capacity varied according as he was or was not a citizen; in the latter case it was only exceptionally that he could enjoy any of the public rights of a citizen, while his private ones included only those he enjoyed under the jus gentium and such civil ones as had been specially conceded to him. It was only among citizens that the supremacy of the paterfamilias and the subjection of those in manu, potestate, or mancipio was recognised,—only among them therefore that the position of an individual in the family was of moment. While in public life a man's supremacy or subjection in the family was immaterial, in private life it was the paterfamilias alone that enjoyed full jural capacity; those subject to him had a more limited personality;³ and, so far as capacity to take part in transactions of the jus civile was concerned, it was not inherent in them but derived from their paterfamilias,—they were the agents of his will, representatives of his persona, in every act whereby a right was acquired by them for the family to which they belonged.

Consistently with this view, when a man lost either freedom or citizenship, or changed his family, he was said to have undergone capitis deminutio,—i.e. loss or diminution of his jural capacity. The first, loss of freedom, was maxima capitis deminutio; the second, loss of citizenship, as when he went into exile or joined a Latin colony, was media capitis deminutio; the third, familiae mutatio or commutatio, was minima capitis deminutio.⁴ That the two first must have had a serious and very prejudicial effect upon a man's capacity is too obvious to require explanation. They manifestly involved a diminution of that capacity. But it is by no means so clear at first sight that a mere change of family could reasonably be spoken of as a deminutio capitis. There were three categories under one or other of which every such change necessarily fell,—either (1) a person sui juris became alieni juris, or (2) a person alieni juris became sui juris, or (3) a person alieni juris passed from one jus into another. We have examples of the first in the transit by adrogation of a paterfamilias into the potestas of another person who became his adoptive parent, and in that of a woman sui juris by confarreation or coemption into the manus of a husband; in both of these there was unquestionably capitis deminutio,—a change of family for the worse. We have examples of the second in the case of children in potestate becoming sui juris by the death of their paterfamilias, a filiusfamilias being consecrated as a flamen, a filiastfamilias being taken as a vestal, a child being emancipated from the patria potestas, or a wife in manu being freed from it by remancipation. In all of these the change was of the same character,—from dependence to independence. But their effects in law were very different. Children who became sui juris by their parents' death did not change their family; the change was not in them but in the disappearance of the family head; therefore they were not regarded as capite minuti. Neither were vestals nor flamens; for though they changed their family, yet it was by passing from a human into a divine one. But emancipated children and a remancipated wife were held to have undergone capitis deminutio, although they distinctly improved their position.

² “Servile caput nullum jus habet” (Paul. in Dig. iv. 5, fr. 3, § 1. [Cf. Inst. i. 2, § 2.]

³ I leave out of view, as not affecting the general principle, some qualifications of a later period, as, for example, that a filiusfamilias in dealings with his castrense peculium was regarded as a paterfamilias, and the like.

⁴ [I.e. according to the technical division of the classical jurists, which, however, after Caracalla's constitution had little practical significance. In early law the distinction was unknown.]

Some jurists, founding on an observation of Paul's, attempt to account for the apparent contradiction by reference to the fact that, in the process of emancipation or remancipation, the person eventually acquiring independence had to descend temporarily into a quasi-servile position, and was thus for the moment degraded and really and truly capite minutus. This explanation proceeds on the notion that capitis deminutio minima necessarily involved descent in the family scale. But such a notion is erroneous. It was immaterial whether the change was from a higher family position to a lower, or from a lower to a higher, or to the same position in the new family that had been held in the old; for it was the change of family, not the change of family position, that constituted the capitis deminutio. Although an emancipated son (say) himself became a paterfamilias, and in that character was the founder of a new family and acquired a new and independent capacity, yet he had lost the birthrights as well as the derivative capacity he had previously enjoyed as a member of the family he had quitted, and therefore was capite minutus in so far as that family was concerned. His relation to it was at an end; his old persona or personality was extinguished, although by the same act a new one was created. The same was the case when a person alieni juris passed from one jus into another, as when a filiusfamilias was transferred by his father into the potestas of an adopter, or when the filiifamilias of a person giving himself in adrogation passed with him into the potestas of the adrogator. There was no change in the genus of the children's persona by either of those events; they were filiifamilias both before and after them. But the species was changed; for, from being subject-members of family A, they became subject-members of family B. There was consequently and necessarily a capitis deminutio; for, however much they might gain in the long run by translation into their new family, they had lost the position they had hitherto enjoyed in their old one, with all its attendant rights and privileges.

The most important consequence of minima capitis deminutio (or mutatio familiae) was that it not only extinguished patria potestas where it existed, but severed the bond of agnation between the capite minutus and all those who had previously been related to him as agnates.⁵ There was no longer any right of succession between him and them on intestacy (p. 163); their reciprocal prospective rights of tutory were defeated, and the minutio of either tutor or ward put an end to a subsisting guardianship, assuming always that it was a tutela legitima or agnatic cura furiosi. There were various other consequences that are said to have resulted from the familiae mutatio of a person sui juris, for which there was no room if he were alieni juris; some of them, however, seem only indirectly attributable to the capitis minutio. It is said, for example, that if a paterfamilias, after executing a testament, gave himself in adrogation, his testament was thereby nullified;⁶ but that was due not so much to the capitis minutio as to the rule of the civil law which required that a testator's testamentary capacity should continue uninterruptedly from the moment of making his will until his death. It is said also that certain patrimonial rights enjoyed by a man, such as usufructs, sworn services due to him by a freedman, and one or two others, were extinguished by his capitis minutio;⁷ but the more accurate way of stating it is that all his patrimonial rights were extinguished so far as his old persona was concerned, but passed simultaneously, claims against debtors of his included, to his new paterfamilias by universal acquisition, with the exception of two or three that for special reasons were regarded as intransmissible. More directly attributable to the minutio was the rule that a copartnery of which the minutus was a member was thereby dissolved; Gaius assigning as the reason that capitis deminutio in the estimation of the jus civile was equivalent to death.⁸ Parties might of consent go on as before; but it was really a new copartnery, with a filius-familias as a member of it instead of a paterfamilias as formerly. Very remarkable, yet quite logical, was the doctrine that the minutio extinguished the claims of creditors of the minutus;⁹ their debtor, the person with whom they had contracted, was civilly dead, and dead without an heir; and therefore there was no one against whom an action of the jus civile could be directed in order to enforce payment. This cannot but have opened a door to fraud, a paterfamilias giving himself in adrogation, or a materfamilias passing in manum, in order to defeat the claims of creditors.¹⁰ But equity eventually provided a remedy, by giving the

⁵ This was true even as regarded a paterfamilias and his children in potestate passing together into a new family by adrogation; their old agnation ceased, and a new one, of which the adoptive parent was the connecting link, came into existence. In the case of direct transfer of a filiusfamilias, however, by his natural parent to an adoptive one, the rule in the text was modified by the legislation of the later empire (see Just. Inst. i. 11, 2).

⁶ Relaxed by the praetorian jurisprudence (Gai. ii. 145-147).

⁷ Gai. iii. 83.

⁸ Gai. iii. 158.

⁹ Gai. iii. 84, iv. 38. [This was not so as regards claims on delict.]

¹⁰ [There would be some protection against this, in the case of adrogation, by the antecedent inquiry before the pontiffs.]

creditors a praetorian action in which the minutio was held as rescinded, and which the new paterfamilias was bound to defend on pain of having to give up to them all the estate he had acquired through the adrogation or in manum conventio.¹¹

SECTION 30.—MANCIPATION AND THE LAW OF PROPERTY

In the early law there was no technical word for ownership of things: it was an element of the house-father's manus. In time, although it is impossible to say when, the word dominium came into use; but, so far as can be discovered, it did not occur in the Tables, and must have been of later introduction. In those days, when a man asserted ownership of a thing, he was content to say,—“It is mine,” or “It is mine according to the law of the Quirites.” The distinction, as already explained in § 10, was this,—that while the first was sufficient to entitle a man de facto holding a thing as his own to protection against a thief or any one forcibly attempting to dispossess him, the second was necessary when he appealed to a court of law to declare the legality of his title and his right to oust an individual who had obtained possession neither by theft nor by force. It is maintained by some jurists of eminence that under the law of the Tables what afterwards came to be called “dominium ex jure Quiritium” was competent only in the case of res Mancipi (p. 62),—of a man's house and farm, and the slaves and animals with which he worked them;¹ in other words, that under the Tables there could be no formal vindicatio of a right of property in res nec Mancipi. Speculatively there is something to be said for this contention; but it is incidentally contradicted by such authorities as Paul and Ulpian, who tell us that by an enactment of the decemvirs vindication of building materials, vine-stakes, and the like (tigna juncta) was sometimes exceptionally excluded.² But such things were unquestionably res nec Mancipi; and so there can be little room for doubt that these, as well as res Mancipi, were already at the time of the publication of the Tables regarded as objects of quiritarian ownership-right, and ordinarily susceptible of vindication in the usual form.³

¹¹ Gai. iii. 84, iv. §§ 38, 80. Those passages are not quite consistent; for while in the two first the action is said to have been against the minutus or minuta, in the last it is said that the paterfamilias had to defend it. [As has been pointed out by Bourcart (trad. Muirhead, p. 168 n.), the inconsistency is not a real one. The paterfamilias was called on to defend the action directed against the minutus.]

¹ E.g. Jhering, Geist, vol. iii. § 55, note 262 [and § 59, note 426a], and Zweck, vol. i. p. 278, note; Karlowa, Röm. CP. pp. 34, 38; Voigt, XII Tafeln, vol. ii. p. 88. Jhering has not yet developed his view, reserving it for a subsequent volume of the Geist. [See Jhering in his Jahrb. f. Dogmatik, vol. xxii. p. 204 sq.]

The modes in which those two classes of things might be acquired in property were very various. But there was this important difference,—that while a natural mode of acquisition sufficed in the case of res nec Mancipi, some civil one was necessary for the derivative acquisition, at all events, of res Mancipi. The most important were mancipation, surrender in court, usucapion, and bequest as singular modes; inheritance, in manum conventio, adrogation, and purchase of a confiscated estate as universal ones. All of these, with the exception of mancipation, applied equally to res nec Mancipi. But the commonest of all the modes of transferring things of this class

² Paul. in Dig. xlv. 3, fr. 98, § 8; Ulp. in Dig. xlvii. 3, fr. 1 pr.; infra, note 70. [Dissenting from the opinion here expressed, Cuq, Inst. Jurid. p. 278 n., points out that the original provision of the Tables, as preserved by Festus (s.v. "Tignum"), did not contain any reference to revindication—"tignum junctum aedibus vineave . . . ne solvito," and that the prohibition of such vindication in the time of Paul and Ulpian was a consequence deduced for res nec Mancipi by interpretation of the "ne solvito" of the Tables. See also Dig. vi. 1, fr. 23, § 6; Dig. x. 4, fr. 6.]

³ Cicero (Top. 4, 23) says that while, by the Twelve Tables, lands might be acquired by two years' possession, all other things (ceterae res omnes) might be usucapted in one year. There is no doubt that usucapion was not an invention of the Tables; they only defined the period, hitherto uncertain, for which possession (usus) as owner had to be continued in order to create a property title. There is just as little doubt that the title created by usucapion was a quiritarian one,—the right one of dominium ex jure Quiritium. A res nec Mancipi, therefore, that had been possessed for a year by a person who had not come by it theftuously, was clearly his in quiritarian right. But once this was admitted, a step farther was inevitable. If a man could competently aver that a res nec Mancipi was his in quiritary right the day after he had completed a year's possession of it, it would not be long before it would be allowed that his right to it was of exactly the same character even before the year had expired, provided he was able to establish ownership independently of the usucapion. [Those who hold that res nec Mancipi were at the time of the Twelve Tables incapable of being held in Quiritary ownership make the ceterae res of the above law apply only to movable res Mancipi, as slaves, etc.; cf. Cuq, p. 249, n. 2; Girard, p. 243.]

was simple tradition. If the transfer was by the owner, with the intention of passing the property, then the simple delivery of possession was enough, unless it was in virtue of a sale; in such a case, and because a vendor had as yet no action for the price, the Tables provided that the ownership should remain with him, notwithstanding the change of possession, until the price was paid or security given for it.⁴

The origin of the distinction between mancipable and non-mancipable things, and of the form of conveyance by mancipation applicable to the first, has already been explained in connection with the reforms of Servius Tullius (§ 13).⁵ As Servius introduced it, mancipation (then called mancipium) was not the imaginary sale that Gaius speaks of,⁶ but as real a sale as could well be conceived,—the weighing in scales, held by an official, of the raw metal that was to be the consideration for the transfer of a res Mancipi, and the handing of it by the transferee to the transferrer, with the declaration that thereby and therewith the thing in question became his in quiritary right; and all this in words of style, and in the presence of certain witnesses who represented the people⁷ and thus fortified the conveyance with a public sanction. There is some reason to believe that, when large quantities of metal had to be weighed, the practice crept in of having this done before the witnesses had assembled; and in the formal act only a single pound was weighed as representing the whole amount.⁸ This

⁴ Just. Inst. ii. 1, 41. Some writers are of opinion that the provision in the Tables to which Justinian alludes (and which, strangely enough, is not mentioned in the remains of any earlier authority), can have applied only to mancipations of res Mancipi [e.g. Sohm, Inst. (Eng. trans.) p. 25 n.; Voigt, XII Tafeln, ii. p. 141; Bechmann, Der Kauf, i. pp. 199, 346]. But there seems no sufficient reason for thus limiting its application; for though an informal contract of sale had not yet been recognised as creative of legally enforceable obligations, yet sale without mancipation was an ordinary transaction of daily life,—acquisition of a specific article in exchange for a certain amount of metal or (afterwards) money. [Cf. Cuq, Inst. Jurid. p. 269 n. It is difficult, however, to see how a statutory provision of the kind could apply to contracts not recognised by law. See also Girard, pp. 282, 288, and Karlowa, Röm. RG. ii. p. 380.]

⁵ Literature: Leist, Mancipation und Eigentumstradition, Jena, 1865; Jhering, Geist d. r. R. vol. ii. § 46; Bechmann, Geschichte des Kaufs in röm. Recht (Erlangen, 1876), pp. 47-299; Voigt, XII Tafeln, vol. i. § 22, vol. ii. §§ 84-88.

⁶ Gai. i. 119.

⁷ [See supra, p. 58, n. 12.]

⁸ See this more fully explained in § 18, and the justification of the conjecture in note 17 to that section.

paved the way for the greater change that resulted from the introduction by the decemvirs of coined money. From that moment weighing became unnecessary. The price was counted out before the ceremony, or sometimes left to be done afterwards; and though, in that spirit of conservatism that was so marked in the adhesion to time-honoured forms after their raison d'être was gone, the scale-bearer and the scales were still retained as indispensable elements of the mancipation, yet the latter were simply touched by the purchaser with a single coin, in order that he might be able to recite the old formula—"I say that this slave is mine in quiritary right, and that by purchase with these scales and this bit of copper." And that one coin, says Gaius, was then handed by the transferee to the transferrer, as if it were in fact the price of the purchase (quasi pretii loco). Thus transformed, the mancipation was undoubtedly nothing more than an imaginary sale; for the real price might have been paid weeks or months before, or might not be paid until weeks or months afterwards. The actual sale might be, and probably usually was, contemporaneous; but the mancipation itself had become nothing more than a conveyance, and in this form it continued down to the end of the third century of the empire to be the appropriate mode of transfer of a res Mancipi, or at least of conferring on the transferee of such a thing a complete legal title (dominium ex jure Quiritium). After that, however, it seems gradually to have gone into disuse, being inapplicable to lands out of Italy that did not enjoy the privilege known as jus Italicum; ⁹ and long before the time of Justinian it had entirely disappeared.¹⁰

The effects of a mancipation, provided the price had been paid or security given for it,¹¹ were that the property passed instantly to the purchaser, and that the transferrer was held to warrant the transferee against eviction from the moment the price was received. In the absence of either payment or sureties for it, the title still remained with the vendor; so that it was in his power, by means of a real action, to get back what had been mancipated, even though it had passed into the possession of the vendee. With the change from weighed metal to coined money, payment of the price or sureties for it also became a condition of the vendor's liability to the vendee in the event of eviction.¹² This liability is usually supposed to have arisen¹³ ipso jure, that is to say, without anything expressly said about it; the acceptance by the transferrer of the coin with which the scales had been struck was held to have imposed upon him an obligation to maintain the transferee in possession, under a penalty of double the amount of the price, recoverable by the latter by what is usually called an actio auctoritatis.¹⁴ But this ipso jure obligation did not arise when the mancipation was either really or fictitiously gratuitous; really, in the case of donations, etc.,¹⁵ fictitiously, when, on purpose to exclude the warranty, the recital of the transferee was that the price was a single sesterce.¹⁶

⁹ Gai. ii. 15. See § 52, note 4.

¹⁰ The latest mention of it as a still subsisting institution is in an enactment of the year 355 (Theod. Cod. viii. 12, 7).

¹¹ What sort of security the Tables required we are not informed. We know from Gellius (xvi. 10, 8) that there was a provision in them about sureties who got the name of vades; that may have dealt with the matter. See Voigt, "Ueber das Vadimonium," in Abhandl. d. phil.-hist. Classe d. Königl. Sächs. Gesellsch. d. Wissensch. vol. viii. p. 299 sq. According to him, if the vades failed to pay the prices for which they had become sureties, they might be convened in an "actio vadimonii deserti." See also his XII Tafeln, vol. ii. p. 490.

That so serious a consequence for the vendor should have arisen without anything said by him to bind himself, seems a little inconsistent with the general principle of the law of contractual obligation in the fourth century of Rome, and with the importance ascribed by Cicero to the words spoken by a contracting party as the test and measure of his liability.¹⁷ Referring especially to the position of the transferrer in a mancipation, Cicero speaks of him as having obliged himself—

¹² Paul. Sent. ii. 17, §§ 1, 3.

¹³ The authorities for this are mostly from Plautus; they are collected in Voigt, XII Tafeln, vol. ii. p. 190.

¹⁴ See a paper on "L'action auctoritatis," by P. F. Girard, in the Nouv. Rev. Hist. vol. vii. (1882), p. 180. Latterly it was called "actio pro evictione."

¹⁵ Examples in Leist, Mancipation, p. 169.

¹⁶ It appears from an instrumentum fiduciae, discovered in Spain in 1867 (Bruns, p. 200), that this practice must have been common in the early empire; for the creditor bargains that in selling by mancipation any of the lands or slaves included in his mortgage he should not be bound to do so for more than a single sesterce, i.e. he should not be held to warrant them to a purchaser. The single sesterce (silver) was quite distinct from the raudusculum, which was of copper. [Mancipation donationis causa was also sestertio nummo uno; see Karlowa, Röm. RG. ii. 377.]

¹⁷ Cic. De Off. iii. 16, § 65.

qui se nexu obligavit; ¹⁸ and this, it has been said, suggests something more on his part than the simple acceptance of the raudusculum. It has also been a matter of observation that a man transferring a res Mancipi by surrender in court (in jure cessio) incurred no such obligation; ¹⁹ an immunity usually (but wrongly) ascribed to the fact that he said nothing that could even be construed into warranty. Two theories ²⁰ have been propounded to obviate the difficulty. According to one, ²¹ the warranty was express, and was therefore obligatory under the provision of the XII Tables that what was publicly declared by word of mouth in the course of a mancipation should be held as law. ²² If so, the liability could have been avoided by omitting any such declaration; whereas a variety of passages in the lay writers prove that onerous mancipation without warranty was a thing unknown. ²³ The other theory is that the liability did arise ipso jure; not, however, in consequence of the words spoken by the transferee, or of the raudusculum or coin accepted by the transferrer, but because of words spoken by the latter, which were substantially an echo of those spoken by the former. This is Voigt's view, ²⁴ quite novel, and somewhat specious. He stands upon the broad ground that it is inconsistent with the supremacy of the word spoken, and the fruitlessness of the unexpressed voluntas in the fourth and fifth centuries of Rome, to suppose either that property could pass from A to B simply because B said so without contradiction from A, or that A could be laid under obligation to warrant the possession to B without a syllable spoken by him.

¹⁸ Cic. Pro Mur. 2, § 3.

¹⁹ Voigt, XII Tafeln, vol. ii. p. 189, note 2. The reason was that it was not the cedent, but the magistrate by his decree (addictio), that gave the thing to the cessionary.

²⁰ A third view is that of Jhering (Geist, vol. ii. p. 528, note 716),—that the actio auctoritatis was really an action of theft, on the ground that the vendor had swindled the vendee out of his money. But it is refuted by the fact that the duplum was exigible even though the vendor had manifestly acted in perfect good faith. [Jhering has further explained his view in his edition of 1883, p. 546, note 728.]

²¹ See Eck, Die Verpflichtung des Verkäufers zur Gewährung d. Eigenthums (Halle, 1874), p. 2. With him concur Rudorff and Karlowa as quoted by him.

²² "Cum nexum faciet mancipiumque, uti lingua nuncupasset ita jus esto" (Fest. v. Nuncupata, Bruns, p. 275).

²³ See note 13.

²⁴ Voigt, XII Tafeln, vol. i. p. 217, vol. ii. p. 137.

He contends that there must have been a declaration by the vendor, following that of the vendee,—“I say that the slave is thine in quiritary right, acquired by thee by purchase with those copper scales and this copper coin”; and that the vendor as well as the vendee appealed to the witnesses for their testimony. An appeal to the witnesses was certainly made in some cases by the vendor; for that was the position held by the testator in a testament-mancipation, and both Gaius and Ulpian narrate his nuncupatory declaration and request for testimony.²⁵ An “aio tuum esse,” etc., however, is vouched by no authority, either lay or professional. Yet it is quite conceivable; for though aio ordinarily introduced an averment of the existence of a right in the person of the speaker, yet it seems to be generally admitted that it was used by the defendant in a legis actio sacramenti in personam when expressly admitting the plaintiff’s claim.²⁶

The right of a vendee to sue an actio auctoritatis arose only when eviction resulted from a decree in a regular judicial process at the instance of a third party disputing his title; and was conditional on his having done all that was necessary on his part to bring his vendor (auctor) into the field to defend his own interests (§ 34, n. 10). And the duration of the auctoritas was limited by statute to two years in the case of lands and houses, one year in that of other things.²⁷ As possession for those periods was sufficient to cure any defect in the vendee’s title, it was but reasonable that with their expiry the vendor’s liability on his warranty should be at an end.

By the provision of the Twelve Tables in reference to the verba nuncupata that accompanied a mancipation,²⁸ its importance was immensely increased; for any sort of qualification germane to the transaction might be superinduced upon it, and the range of its application thus greatly extended. Such

²⁵ Gai. ii. 104; Ulp. xx. 9. It to some extent supports Voigt’s view that Justinian (Inst. ii. 10, 1, 2) speaks of a testament per aes et libram as made emancipatione, i.e. by an act of the testator’s putting his estate out of his manus. [Cf. Buckler, Contract in Roman Law, p. 73.]

²⁶ On the authority of the note in Valer. Prob. § 4, No. 3 (Collect. libror. Jur. Antejust. vol. ii. p. 144),—Q.N.Q.A.N.Q.N. = “Quando neque ais neque negas.” [See Ferrini in Archiv. Giurid. xxxviii. 166.]

²⁷ Cic. Pro Caec. 19, § 54; Top. 4, § 23.

²⁸ See supra, note 22.

qualifications were spoken of as leges Mancipii,²⁹—self-imposed terms, conditions, or qualifications of the conveyance, which, as integral parts of the transaction per aes et libram, partook of its binding character and were law between the parties. The matter of oral declaration might be the acreage of lands, their freedom from burdens or right to easements, reservation of a usufruct, limitation of their mode of use, undertaking to reconvey on a certain event, or what not; the result was just so many obligations created per aes et libram, whose contravention or denial was punished with a twofold penalty.³⁰ But the words spoken in the hearing of the witnesses were the beginning and the end of the liability; it was enough that they were literally complied with, however much the other party might be injured by something inconsistent with their spirit, or which he had not taken the precaution to require should be made matter of declaration. What had not been clothed in words could not be enforced as a lex Mancipii. What had been intended could not be inquired into; the rule was—"according as a man has spoken, so shall be law"; interpretative equity had no place as yet in the jus civile, unless, perhaps, in the case of a lex fiduciae.

Among the declarations, restrictions, limitations, burdens, conditions, and so forth (dicta et promissa) that might be incorporated with a mancipation as leges Mancipii,³¹ and which imposed obligations sometimes on one party, sometimes on the other, none was more important, and from some points of view remarkable, than this so-called lex fiduciae, or often, for brevity's sake, simply fiducia.³² It was introduced when it was the ²⁹ See § 7, note 8.

³⁰ Cic. De Off. iii. 16, § 65. [This, however, is a controverted point. Some writers hold that the only penal actions resulting from a mancipation were the actio auctoritatis and actio de modo agri. For an explanation of the language of Cicero see Girard, Droit romain, p. 550, note 5; cf. Lenel, Edict. Perp. 153.]

³¹ See illustrations of a great variety of them in Voigt, XII Tafeln, vol. ii. pp. 149-165. Several of them, however, are of questionable authority.

³² The subject of fiducia has latterly been much discussed in connection with the Spanish mancipatio fiduciae causa, referred to in note 16. See Gide, in Rev. de Législat. vol. i. (1870), p. 74 sq.; Degenkolb, in Z. f. RG. vol. ix. (1870), pp. 117 sq., 407 sq.; Krüger, Krit. Versuche im röm. Rechte (Berlin, 1870), pp. 41-58; Rudorff, in Z. f. RG. vol. xi. (1873), pp. 52 sq.; [Oertmann, Die Fiducia im röm. Privatrecht, Berlin, 1890; Cuq, p. 641 sq.].

intention of parties that the mancipatory transference, although in form absolute, should in reality be only provisional; the transferee was therefore bound by its terms to reconvey either to the transferrer or to a third party, or to manumit a slave he had received, or to denude himself of the thing in any other way that might be embodied in the engagement. According to some jurists, such a qualification of the vendee's right might be introduced as an ordinary lex Mancipii, without any fiduciary words; in that case the obligation was stricti juris, and the vendee, if he failed to comply, was inevitably condemned in the twofold penalty which followed breach of the verba nuncupata. But it was usually deemed expedient—although the practice can hardly have been introduced until considerably later than the XII Tables—to free alike the right of the vendor and the obligation of the vendee from the hard-and-fast lines of the jus strictum, and subordinate them to the principles of bona fides. This was done by importing fiduciary words into the mancipatory formula,—“Hunc ego hominem fidei fiduciae causa ex jure Quiritium meum esse aio,”—“I say that this slave is mine in quiritary right, committed to my honour, for a fiduciary purpose, and that he is mine by purchase for a single sesterce,³³ with this copper and these scales, in order that I may remancipate him to you,” or what not, according to the nature of the transaction.³⁴

Gaius³⁵ speaks of fiducia contracted either with a friend

³³ As the sesterce was first coined in 485, the formula must have been somewhat different before then; but we know it only from the [above-mentioned] Spanish inscription, which was of the early empire. May not the fidi fiduciae (which occur in it) have been one single word, like jurisjurandi? [On the Pompeian inscription found in 1887, illustrating fiducia, see Eck, Z. d. Sav. Stift. ix. p. 60 sq.]

³⁴ Jhering (Geist, vol. ii. p. 515) holds that the fiducia was not embodied in the nuncupatio of the mancipation, but was a subsequent agreement in which fides was pledged, and which therefore gave rise only to a bonae fidei action. The strongest reason against regarding it as a lex Mancipii is that it might be an adjunct of a transfer by surrender in court (in jure cessio), as well as of a mancipation (Gai. ii. 59); but that only amounts to this,—that it might take the form of a lex in jure cessionis as well as of a lex Mancipii. The truth appears to be that in course of time it became the practice to follow up the mancipation and its fiduciary clause with a separate agreement setting forth details. [But can one speak of a lex in jure cessionis? The XII Tables mention only nexum and Mancipium in connection with verba nuncupata. Jhering's view is now generally accepted.]

³⁵ Gai. ii. 60.

or with a creditor: with a friend, for safe custody of the thing transferred to him during the absence of the transferrer; with a creditor, for the purpose of giving him security for a debt incurred or contemplated, and which might be coupled with special agreements defining his powers of dealing with it. He mentions also in another place⁸⁶ that, in emancipating his child, a paterfamilias, if he desired to be his tutor and have the right of succession to him on his death, usually bargained fiduciarily with the transferee for remancipation, so that he (the father) should become the child's manumitter from the state of free bondage in which for the moment he was placed. This case, however, as well as that of the fiduciary coemption devised by the jurists of the sixth century,⁸⁷ was by no means of the same importance as those with friends and creditors just referred to. In them the transferee was vested with the legal right of property in the thing transferred to him, and in law entitled to deal with it as owner, in so far as not restrained by special agreements; but at the same time he was a trustee (fiduciarius), bound so to deal with it as not unduly to prejudice the interests of the transferrer. The latter had for his protection an action (a. fiduciae) which differed from that for enforcement of an ordinary lex mancipii in this very important respect,—that it proceeded, not upon inflexible rules of law, but on considerations of what was reasonable and fair in view of the whole circumstances of the case—uti inter bonos bene agier oportet.⁸⁸ With this action a considerable latitude was given to the judge. True, if the fiduciarius deliberately failed to reconvey when it was his duty to do so, or had by his fraudulent actings rendered reconveyance impossible, he not only was condemned in the usual double penalty,³⁹ but became infamous on account of the breach of his expressly and publicly pledged faith.⁴⁰ If, on the other hand, his inability to re-convey was attributable to no fault of his, he was entitled to judgment in his favour; while there might be anything intermediate between double condemnation and full acquittal according to the view taken by the judge of the circumstances as a whole.

⁸⁶ Gai. i. 132, 133 (which are defective in the Verona MS.), compared with Gaii Epit. i. 6, 3, and Just. Inst. iii. 2, 8.

⁸⁷ To enable a woman sui juris to substitute for her legal tutors others of her own selection who were bound to do her bidding, or to enable her to make a testament, or to enable her to get rid of the sacra (infra, p. 170) that had devolved on her along with an inheritance. See Cic. Pro Mur. 12, § 27; Gai. i. §§ 114, 115. See also supra, § 11, note 7.

⁸⁸ Cic. De Off. iii. 15, § 61; 17, § 70; Top. 17, § 66. [The actio fiduciae based on the pactum fiduciae might be, it is thought, either in ius or in factum concepta. See Lenel, E. P. p. 233. According to Cuq the fiducia was originally enforced by an arbitrium and ultimately by a bonae fidei action (Inst. Jurid. p. 645)].

Another advantage of the fiducia was this,—that as the radical right still remained in him who had given the object of it in mancipation, he could reacquire the legal title without reconveyance by continuing in possession for a year;⁴¹ the usucapion in that case was called usureceptio, and one year's possession instead of two held sufficient even for immovables, upon the pretext that what was usucapted was a fiducia, and therefore included amongst the "other things" of the Twelve Tables.⁴² This one year's usureception was competent at all times where the fiduciary mancipation had been to a friend, and probably was the ordinary method of extinguishing the fiduciary right. Where, however, the mancipation had been to a creditor in security of his claim, there was this qualification,—that while the usureception might proceed on any causa possessionis after the debt secured had been paid, it was competent before payment only when the debtor's possession was not directly derived from the creditor either by lease or precatory grant during pleasure; in either of those cases, according to the general principles of possession, he was holding for the creditor rather than himself.⁴³

³⁹ Paul. (Sent., ii. 12, § 11) says that under the XII Tables there was an actio in duplum in the case of deposit. As deposit, as an independent contract, was unknown until long after the Tables, Paul.'s words possibly refer to the fiducia cum amico depositi causa; although it is also probable that breach of trust by a depositary, when no mancipation had intervened, was treated as theft, and visited with the same twofold penalty. [The action under the XII Tables is probably to be regarded as delictual and not contractual.]

⁴⁰ Cic. Pro Caec. 3, § 7.

⁴¹ Gai. ii. 59.

⁴² "Lex XII tabularum soli quidem res biennio usucapi jussit, ceteras res vero anno" (Gai. ii. 54). It was on the same somewhat sophistical construction of the law that usucapio pro herede (infra, p. 170) was held to be completed in a year, even though the bulk of the hereditary estate might consist of immovables (res soli).

⁴³ Gai. ii. 60.

It is very generally, if not universally, maintained that mancipation was not only inappropriate but inapplicable to res nec Mancipi,—that mancipation of a thing of this sort was ineffectual as a conveyance. There does not seem to be any distinct authority for such a statement.⁴⁴ In the ordinary case parties would rarely dream of resorting to so cumbrous a procedure if nothing was to be gained by it; but it is conceivable that it might be employed for some ulterior purpose, such as getting the benefit of a lex Mancipii or a fiducia, whose efficacy depended on the transaction per aes et libram to which it was annexed.⁴⁵ If tradition actually accompanied the mancipation of a movable res nec Mancipi, then it is difficult to conceive that the superinduction of the civil ceremonial could deprive it of its power to pass the property of the thing delivered. That surrender in court (in jure cessio), adjudication, and usucapion applied both to Mancipables and non-Mancipables is indisputable.

Surrender in court,⁴⁶ which was apparently of later introduction than mancipation,⁴⁷ was simply a rei vindicatio (or action to have a right of property declared) arrested in its initial stage (p. 180). The parties, cedent and cessionary, having previously arranged the terms of transfer,—sale, exchange, donation, or what not,—appeared before the magistrate;

⁴⁴ A passage in the Vatican Fragments (No. 313)—an enactment of Diocletian's—runs: "Donatio praedii . . . traditione atque mancipatione perficitur; ejus vero, quod nec Mancipi est, traditione sola." But the two last words do not mean that donation of a non-Mancipable could be perfected only by tradition; they are to be read—"is perfect by tradition alone," i.e. without the necessity of mancipation.

⁴⁵ There is no express mention of such a thing in the texts; but as only movables could be objects of deposit, and most were nec Mancipi, one would think that they must have figured in the "fiducia cum amico depositi causa" of which Gaius speaks, before deposit had been recognised as an independent real contract imposing obligations upon a depositary apart from any mancipation. [This theory can hardly be supported. Res Mancipi means things capable of mancipation (supra, p. 61), and Gaius professes to define them all. The language also of Ulpian (xix. 9) in expressly stating that in jure cessio was applicable to res nec Mancipi militates against the theory.]

⁴⁶ Jhering, Geist, vol. ii. § 46; Voigt, XII Tafeln, vol. ii. § 83.

⁴⁷ But earlier than the XII Tables, because confirmed by them (Paul. in Vat. Frag. No. 50). [On the relative antiquity of mancipatio and cessio in jure, see Carle, Origini, p. 493; H. Krüger, Geschichte d. cap. dem. pp. 118, 124. See also generally Cuq, Inst. Jurid. p. 441 sq.]

the cessionary, taking the position of plaintiff, declared the thing his in quiritary right; the cedent, as defendant, was asked what he had to say in answer; and, on his admission or silence, the magistrate at once pronounced a decree (addictio),⁴⁸ which completed the transfer, but might be subject to a condition or other limitation, or even to a fiduciary reservation.⁴⁹ It was probably more resorted to for the constitution of servitudes, both real and personal, and transfer of such rights as patria potestas, tutory-at-law of a woman, or an inheritance that had already vested,⁵⁰ than for conveyance of property. For it was not only inconvenient, inasmuch as it required the parties to appear before the supreme magistrate in Rome, and could not be carried through by a slave on his owner's behalf (as mancipation might), but it had these serious disadvantages,—that it did not ipso jure imply any warranty of title by the cedent, or afford the cessionary any action against him in the event of eviction. The reason was that in form the right of the cessionary flowed from the magisterial decree,—“Since you say the thing is yours, and the cedent does not say it is his, I declare it yours,”—and not from any act or word of the cedent's, who was passive in the matter.⁵¹

Adjudication was the decree of a judge in a divisory action, such as one for partition of inheritance amongst co-heirs; it conferred upon each of them a separate and independent right in a part of what as a whole had previously been joint property.⁵²

Usucapion,⁵³ regulated by the XII Tables, but not improbably recognised previously in a vague and uncertain way, ⁴⁸ Gai. ii. 22, 24; Ulp. Frag. xiv. 9, 10.

⁴⁹ Gai. ii. 59; Paul. in Vat. Frag. No. 50. [See supra, p. 134, n. 34.]

⁵⁰ None of these could be transferred by mancipation, as manifestly they could not by tradition. [It was to an unentered agnatic inheritance that cession in Court strictly applied; see Gai. ii. 35-37.]

⁵¹ [The cessio in jure bears some resemblance to the old English mode of conveyancing by the fictitious suits of fine and recovery. See Blackstone, Commentaries (8th ed.), ii. pp. 352, 357.]

⁵² Ulp. Frag. xix. 16.

⁵³ Literature: Stintzing, Das Wesen von bona fides und titulus in d. röm. Usucapionslehre, Heidelberg, 1852; Schirmer, Die Grundidee d. Usucapion im röm. Recht, Berlin, 1855; Pernice, Labeo, vol. ii. p. 152 sq.; Voigt, XII Tafeln, vol. ii. § 91; Esmein, “Sur l’histoire de l’usucapion,” in the Nouv. Rev. Hist. etc. vol. ix. (1885), p. 261 sq.; [also Esmein, Mélanges, p. 171 sq.].

converted uninterrupted possession (usus) into quiritary property by efflux of time. The provision in the Tables was to this effect—"usus auctoritas fundi biennium esto, ceterarum rerum annuus esto."⁵⁴ The relation in which the words usus and auctoritas stand to each other has been a subject of much discussion; the prevailing opinion amongst modern civilians is that the first alone refers to usucapion and the second to the warranty of title incumbent on the vendor in a mancipation, and that both were limited to two years in the case of lands (and, by extensive interpretation, houses), and to one year in the case of anything else.⁵⁵ In the later jurisprudence the possession—"use" was the technical term in the earlier law—required to be based on a sufficient title, and the possessor to be in good faith.⁵⁶ But the decemviral code, as is now generally admitted, contained no such requirements; any citizen⁵⁷ occupying immovables or holding movables as his own, provided they were usucaptible⁵⁸ and that he had not taken them theftuously,⁵⁹ acquired a quiritary right in two years or one as the case might be merely on the strength of his possession. Originally, therefore, it was simply the conversion of de facto possession, no matter how acquired, so long as not by theft, into legal ownership, when prolonged for the statutory period,—too often the maintenance of might at the cost of right.

⁵⁴ Cic. Top. 4, § 23; Pro Cæc. 19, § 54; Gai. ii. §§ 42, 54, 204.

⁵⁵ [For interpretations of this fragment, see Cuq, Inst. Jurid. p. 249 note 1. Jhering, Vorgeschichte d. Indoeurop. p. 135, suggests that houses (aedes) may not have been intended by the decemviral code to be treated as immovables, being made of wood and as such capable of removal.]

⁵⁶ Just. Inst. ii. 6, pr.

⁵⁷ Usucapion was peculiar to citizens—"jus proprium est Romanorum" (Gai. ii. 65). The provision in the XII Tables, "Adversus hostem aeterna auctoritas" (Cic. De Off. i. 12, § 87), which has been the subject of a somewhat voluminous literature, is sometimes adduced as proof of statutory declaration to the same effect.

⁵⁸ What belonged to the state or to religion was of course excluded from usucapion; so were the res Mancipi of a woman in tutelage of her agnates or patron, if alienated by her without their authority (Gai. ii. 47), the five feet of free space between two properties (Cic. De Leg. i. 21, § 55), and a few other things. [The language of Gaius, ii. 59, as to usureception seems adverse to the view that res nec Mancipi might be usucaptured under the XII Tables; see supra, p. 136. On the application of the rule that res Mancipi of a female under tutory could not be usucaptured, if alienated without the authority of her tutors, see Esmein, Mélanges, pp. 32, 33; and cf. Voigt, XII Tafeln, ii. p. 237 n.]

⁵⁹ Gai. ii. 45.

But in time it came to be regarded rather as a remedy for some defect of title, arising either from irregularity of conveyance or incapacity of the party from whom a transfer had been taken; and with the progress of jurisprudence developed into the carefully regulated positive prescription which has found a place in every modern system.

The Twelve Tables contained a variety of provisions regulating the relations between conterminous proprietors,⁶⁰ and imposed penalties of considerable severity for offences against property. For example, any one intentionally setting fire to another man's house, or to straw or such-like in its immediate vicinity, was to be flogged or burned at the stake.⁶¹ The malicious driving of cattle by night to graze upon another man's young corn was punished with hanging of the offender and forfeiture of his goods to Ceres.⁶² Bewitching another person's hanging fruit, or spiriting away a crop from his fields, was also punished with death.⁶³ Cutting a tree belonging to another entailed a penalty of twenty-five asses,⁶⁴—the same as was imposed for an affront offered to a freeman, or an assault upon him that did not end in breaking bones.⁶⁵ The culpable killing or hurting of a slave or four-footed animal gave its owner a right to claim amends, but it does not appear in what form.⁶⁶ Theft was envisaged from a great many points of view. If a thief was caught plying his vocation by night, he might be slain on the spot; it was not lawful, however, to kill him by day, unless he used arms in resisting apprehension, (which was always the act of private parties, there being as yet no city watch or police establishment).⁶⁷ A thief taken in

⁶⁰ See fragments 1-10 in the seventh table of the arrangement in Bruns, p. 24. [Cf. Cuq, Inst. Jurid. p. 357; infra, p. 438.]

⁶¹ Gai. lib. 4 ad XII Tab. in Dig. xlvii. 9, 9. ⁶² Plin. H.N. xviii. 3, 12.

⁶³ Sen. Nat. Quaest. iv. 7, 3; Plin. H.N. xxviii. 2, 17; Serv. in Verg. Ecl. viii. 99; Aug. De Civ. Dei, viii. 19. The penalty was probably death by burning; at least that was the punishment of sorcerers in the classical jurisprudence (Paul. Sent. v. 23, § 17). See Voigt, XII Tafeln, vol. ii. p. 800.

⁶⁴ Plin. H.N. xvii. 1, 7.

⁶⁵ Gai. iii. 223.

⁶⁶ [See frag. 5 in the 8th Table in Appendix, p. 439.]

⁶⁷ [There were similar provisions in Judaic law (Exodus xxii. 2, 3), and in other early codes. See Kovalewsky, Coutume contemporaine, p. 250; Dareste, Journal des Savants, Feb. 1881. On the requirement of ploratio, see Pernice, Labeo, ii. 23.]

the act (fur manifestus), if he was a freeman, was scourged and given over by the magistrate (addictus) to the person whose goods he had stolen; if a slave, he was flogged and thrown from the Tarpeian rock. A thief who was not taken at the time suffered only a pecuniary penalty,—twofold the value of the stolen goods. Very remarkable provisions were made to prevent third parties receiving and concealing stolen property. Thus the occupant of a house in which it was alleged that stolen property was concealed was bound to submit to a search for it, on pain of being held guilty of what was called furtum prohibitum, and punished as if he were a manifest thief; but the searcher was required to go through the house with nothing on him but a cloth round his loins, and carrying a platter in his hands, obviously to exclude all suspicion of foul play.⁶⁸ If the result of the search was the discovery of the stolen property (furtum linteo et lance conceptum), the occupant was liable to the owner in threefold its value, however innocent and ignorant he might have been of its presence within his premises; but he had relief against the person who had smuggled it into his house by what was called an actio furti oblati.⁶⁹ The actio de rationibus distrahendis against a tutor who had embezzled property of his ward's was just a variety of the actio furti. So originally was the actio de tigno juncto,—an action competent to the owner of building materials against him who had theftuously incorporated them in his house. Their owner's property in them was suspended during their incorporation; he was not allowed to insist on their removal, for the public interest was of greater moment than his; but he was entitled by this action to double their value, and when the house came down he might again revindicate them.⁷⁰

⁶⁸ [Supra, p. 95; and frag. 15 in the 8th Table, Appendix, p. 440.]

⁶⁹ All those varieties of theft and actiones furti are described by Gaius (iii. 183-193), but not without some confusion. Krüger, in an article in the Z. d. Sav. Stift. vol. v. (1884), R. A. p. 219 sq., has given a somewhat different explanation of them. See also Gulli in the Arch. Giurid. vol. xxxiii. (1884), p. 107 sq. [On theft generally, see Cuq, Inst. Jurid. pp. 340-346; Voigt, Röm. RG. p. 41. There seems also to have been a special action against one who by material counsel or assistance (ope consilio) aided and abetted the thief—Voigt, XII Tafeln, ii. 578; Lenel, Edict. Perpet. p. 260.]

⁷⁰ Gai. in Dig. xli. 1, 7, § 10; Ulp. in Dig. xlvii. 3, 1, § 1. The later law

The abstract conception of a real right in (or over) the property of another person (what was called jus in re aliena) is not to be looked for at so early a period in the history of the law as that now under consideration. The rural servitudes of way and water were no doubt very early recognised; for they ranked as res Mancipi, and the Twelve Tables contained various regulations in reference to the former. Usufruct, too, was probably not unknown; but the urban praedial servitudes bear the impress of a somewhat later jurisprudence.⁷¹ Emphyteutic and superficial rights were of still later origin. Pignorate and hypothecary rights were equally unknown as rights protected by action at the time now being dealt with.⁷² Between private parties, the only thing legally recognised of the nature of a real security was the fiducia already described. Approaching more nearly to the modern idea of a mortgage was the security praedibus praediisque required by the state from those indebted to it in assurance of their obligations. Here there was the double guarantee of sureties (praedes) and mortgaged lands of theirs (praedia subsignata); but how they were dealt with when the debtor made default is by no means clear.⁷³

SECTION 31.—NEXUM AND THE LAW OF OBLIGATION

The jurists of the classical period attributed obligation either to contract, delict, or miscellaneous causes (variae causarum figurae); and those arising from contract fill a place in the later jurisprudence vastly greater than those arising did not allow eventual vindication if there had been no mala fides in the appropriation, and the double value had already been paid. [See Czyhlarz, in Grünhut's Zeitschrift, 1894, pp. 85-106.]

⁷¹ [Among urban servitudes that of Cloaca seems to have been the first to be admitted. On servitudes generally, see Cuq, pp. 270-75. He maintains that personal servitudes were not known before the end of the sixth century, and that praedial servitudes were originally treated not as jura but as corporeal things.]

⁷² Hypothecary rights were certainly unknown until near the end of the republic. But Festus (v. Nancitor, Bruns, p. 274) speaks of a provision in the Cassian League between Rome and the Latin states of the year 262 u.c.—“Si quid pignoris nasciscitur, sibi habeto”—which makes it difficult to believe that the Romans were altogether unacquainted with de facto impignoration of movables.

⁷³ For note of the literature on the subject, see Baron, Gesch. d. r. R. vol. i. p. 169.

from delict. In the Twelve Tables it is very different. In them delicts are much more prominent than contracts,—wrongs entitling the sufferer to demand the imposition of penalties upon the wrong-doer, that in most cases covered both reparation and punishment. The disproportion in the formulated provisions in reference to the two sources of obligation, however, is not surprising. For, first of all, the purpose of the decemviral code was to remove uncertainties and leave as little as possible to the arbitrariness of the magistrates. In nothing was there more scope for it than in the imposition of penalties; and as different offences required to be differently treated, the provisions in reference to them were necessarily multiplied. In the next place, the intercourse that evokes contract was as yet very limited. Agriculture was the occupation of the great majority; trade and commerce were more backward than in the later years of the regal period; coined money was just beginning to be used as a circulating medium. Lastly, the safeguards of engagement lay to a great extent in the sworn oath or the plighted faith; of which the law indeed did not yet take cognisance, but which found a protection quite as potent in the religious and moral sentiments that had so firm a hold of the people.

It was a principle of the law of Rome through the whole of its history, though in course of time subject to an increasing number of exceptions, that mere agreement between two persons did not give him in whose favour it was conceived a right to demand its enforcement. To entitle a man to claim the intervention of the civil tribunals to compel implement of an engagement undertaken by another, it was necessary either that it should be clothed in some form of law prescribed or recognised, or that it should be accompanied or followed by some relative act which rendered it something more than a mere interchange of consent. Under the jurisprudence of the XII Tables the formalities required to elevate an agreement to the rank of contract and make it civilly obligatory sometimes combined ceremonial act and words of style, sometimes did not go beyond words of style, but in all cases before witnesses. Dotis dictio, the undertaking of a parent to provide a dowry with his daughter whom he was giving in marriage, and vadimonium, the guarantee of a surety for the due fulfilment of the undertaking either of a party to a contract or a party to a litigation, probably required nothing more than words of style before persons who could if necessary bear witness to them; whereas an engagement incident to a mancipation, or an undertaking to repay borrowed money, required in addition a ceremony with the copper and the scales. The historical reason for the employment of the scales has already been explained. They became as time progressed mere matter of form or ceremonial; but originally they were matter of substance. In early days neither sale nor loan was possible without them; for both the price in the one case, and the copper that was being lent in the other, had to be weighed. It was the spirit of conservatism, so manifest in all departments of the law, that induced their retention as formalities after they had ceased to be of moment substantially; had they had no practical significance in the first instance, it is not likely they would ever have been resorted to. There were many formal observances in Roman law that seemed to have not much bearing upon the proceeding of which they formed part; but there was hardly one of them that had not its historical explanation. They were often retained, more or less modified, simply because they had been always associated with some particular transaction, and sometimes long after they had ceased to be of any substantial significance; but it was not the practice to introduce merely for the sake of form a ceremonial that at the time of its introduction had no utilitarian value. If all that was wanted was deliberation in contracting, certainty as to the nature and terms of the contract, publicity and trustworthy testimony, words of style, spoken in presence of witnesses, as in the vadimonium and dotis dictio, were sufficient for the purpose.

The opinion is very generally entertained that the only proper contracts recognised by the XII Tables were those annexed to a mancipation or surrender in court and embodied in a lex Mancipii or in jure cessionis,¹ and the nexum,² the vadimonium, and the dotis dictio. Some reckon amongst them the verbal contract by stipulation, which in time came to be the most important and inclusive form of contract known to the law; but it is impossible to discover even the most remote allusion to it in any extant fragment of the Tables, and the better opinion seems to be that it was of later introduction.

¹ [Supra, p. 134, note 34.]

² The literature on the subject of the nexum is very abundant, and the views taken of it very discordant. Danz (Gesch. d. r. R. vol. iii. § 146) gives a list

The condition of the nexi (as debtors who had been bound by nexal contract were called) during the first two centuries of the republic, and the commotions to which their grievances again and again gave rise, have been alluded to in a previous section (§ 20). Although much has been written on the subject, opinions differ not a little as to who exactly those nexi were, how they became so, and what was their status in law. In this, however, there seems to be a general agreement,—that the first step towards their reaching the miserable condition which Livy and Dionysius have so graphically, though perhaps not always with strict accuracy, depicted, was a loan transaction, real or fictitious,³ which was technically called nexum or nexi datio.⁴ The practice of lending per libram was doubtless of great antiquity,—indeed the intervention of the scales was a necessity when money or what passed for it had to be weighed instead of counted; and not improbably old custom conceded to a lender who had thus made an advance in the presence of witnesses some very summary and stringent remedy against a borrower who failed in repayment. How Servius subjected it to much the same formalities as he

of the more important writings about it, and a résumé of the principal theories. To his list, which comes down to 1870, may be added Vainberg, Le nexum . . . en droit romain, Paris, 1874; Brinz, "Der Begriff obligatio," in Grünhut's ZSchr. vol. i. (1874), p. 11 sq.; and Voigt, XII Tafeln, vol. i. §§ 63-65. [Add Girard, pp. 467-472; H. Krüger, Gesch. d. cap. dem. p. 296 sq.]

³ The opinion is entertained by some writers that, after the introduction of coined money, and when touching the scales with a single as took the place of the weighing of so many pounds of metal as part of the ceremonial, the nexi datio upon pretence of a loan might be, and was, employed to create a bond for payment of a definite sum, no matter what the real ground of indebtedness. It is extremely probable. The sale in a mancipation was in many cases only simulated, and the payment in nexi liberatio did not need to be real; arguing from analogy, therefore, there is no reason why a man may not have become nexus as if for borrowed money, when in fact the ground of debt was something different.

⁴ See Appendix, Note C.

appointed for mancipation,—the state scales, the official libripens, the five witnesses representing the nation,—has been shown already (p. 66). With the introduction of a coinage the transaction, instead of being per libram simply, became one per aes et libram; the scales were touched with a single piece, representing the money which had already been or was about to be paid, a formula recited whereby the obligation of repayment was imposed on the borrower, and an appeal made to the witnesses for their testimony. Unfortunately this formula is nowhere preserved. Huschke⁵ and Giraud,⁶ assuming that the lender was the only speaker, formulate it thus,—“Quod ego tibi mille libras hoc aere aeneaque libra nexas dedi, eas tu mihi post annum jure nexi dare damnas esto”—“Whereas, with this coin and these copper scales, I have given thee a thousand asses, be thou therefore bound jure nexi to repay them to me a year hence.”⁷ The phrase damnas esto, like the rest of the formula, is unsupported by any conclusive authority; but as it was that most frequently employed during the republic for imposing, by a public act, liability to pay a fixed and definite sum,⁸ it may not be wide of the mark.⁹

⁵ Huschke, Ueber das Recht des nexum (Leipsic, 1846), p. 50.

⁶ Giraud, Des nexi, ou de la condition des débiteurs chez les Romains (Paris, 1847), p. 67.

⁷ If the loan was to bear interest, the words cum impendio unciario, or equivalents, would be incorporated.

⁸ See Huschke, l.c. He renders damnas esto (p. 51), “Du sollst ein zu geben Verfluchter sein.” There has been much speculation as to the derivation and original meaning of the words damnum, damnare, damnas. See the more important suggestions in Voigt, Bedeutungswechsel, p. 142 sq.

⁹ Voigt, who holds that the nexi datio was at once a mode of transferring the property of the money or other ponderable from the lender to the borrower, and of imposing upon the latter an obligation to repay it, proposes a different formula (XII Tafeln, vol. ii. p. 483), which has the merit of coming nearer that of the nexi liberatio than Huschke’s: “Haec ego octingenta aeris ex jure Quiritium tua esse aio ea lege, uti tantundem cum impendio unciario proximis kalendis Martiis recte solvas liberasque aenea libra. Hanc tibi libram primam postremam adpendo, lege jure obligatus;” and this he holds to have been echoed by the borrower, in accordance with his theory that in every transaction per aes et libram there must have been nuncupatio on both sides. He rejects the words damnas esto, because of another theory of his own,—that there was nothing peculiar in the obligation created nexo, i.e. that it did not impose any immediate liability on the borrower which the lender could enforce without judicial intervention, but that the latter required to proceed against the former in ordinary course, by what he calls an actio pecuniae nuncupatae.

What was the effect of this procedure? The question is one not easily answered. Brinz has expressed the opinion that the creditor was entitled in virtue of the nexum to take his debtor into custody at any time when he considered such a course necessary for his own protection, even before the conventional term of repayment,—that the debtor was in bonds, virtually a pledge, from the very first, and the tightness or looseness of them a matter in the discretion of his creditor.¹⁰ Voigt holds that the nexum did not give the creditor any peculiar hold over his debtor; and that, on the latter's failure to repay, an ordinary action was necessary, to be followed by the usual proceedings in execution if judgment was in favour of the former.¹¹ These views may be said to be the two extremes, and between them lie a good many others more or less divergent. The difficulty of arriving at a conclusion is caused to some extent by the ambiguity of the words nexus and nexum. The transaction itself was called nexum; the money advanced was nexum aes (hence nexi, i.e. aeris, datio); the bond was nexus (of the fourth declension); and the debtor on whom the bond was laid was also nexus (of the second). All this is simple enough. But we find the same word nexus employed by the historians as almost synonymous with vinctus,—to denote the condition of a debtor put in fetters by his creditor. That might be the condition either of a nexal borrower or of an ordinary judgment-debtor (§ 36). The former in such a case was doubly nexus; he was at once in the bonds of legal obligation and in those of physical constraint. In many passages in which Livy and others speak of the nexi it is extremely difficult, sometimes impossible, to be sure in which meaning they use the word. It is therefore not surprising that there should be considerable diversity of opinion on the subject, and such frequent identification of the legal status of a nexal debtor (nexus) with that of a judgment debtor (judicatus, addictus).

¹⁰ Brinz, Grünhut's ZSchr. vol. i. p. 22. He likens the position of the nexus to that of a thing, land say, mortgaged to a creditor in security of a claim. Such a security is constantly spoken of by the Roman jurists as res obligata or res nexa. As Brinz observes, the thing was obligata from the first, and continued so as long as the debt it secured was unpaid, even though the creditor found it unnecessary to reduce it into possession or interfere with it in any way. [See also H. Krüger, Gesch. d. cap. dem. p. 202 sq., and, generally, Bourcart (trad. Muirhead), Appendix, Note c.]

¹¹ See reference in note 9.

Consideration of the texts inclines me to the conclusion that, although de facto a creditor may have made little or no difference in his treatment of his nexi and addicti, yet de jure their positions were quite distinct both before and after the legislation of the Tables.¹² The right of a nexal creditor whose debtor was in default was, at his own hand, and without any judgment affirming the existence of the debt, to apprehend him, and detain him, and put him to service until the loan was repaid.¹³ Its parallel is to be met with amongst all ancient nations,—Jews, Greeks, Scandinavians, Germans, etc.¹⁴ And it was not altogether unreasonable. If a borrower had already exhausted all available means of raising money, had sold or mortgaged everything he possessed of any value, what other resource was open to him in his necessity than to impledge himself?¹⁵ For this was sub-

¹² Dionysius (vi. 83), speaking of the events that gave rise to the first secession of the plebeians and the measures proposed for remedying their grievances, pointedly distinguishes between borrowers whose bodies had been taken by their creditors because they had failed to repay their loans at the proper period, and debtors who had magisterially been given up to their creditors because they had failed to implement judgments obtained against them.

¹³ This meets the definition of Varro (De L. L. vii. 105, Bruns, p. 308)—“Liber qui suas operas in servitutem pro pecunia quam debet dat, dum solveret, nexus vocatur”—“a freeman who gives his services as a slave in return for money that he owes is called nexus so long as it is unpaid.” [Cf. Girard, p. 471, n. 1.]

¹⁴ See authorities in Brinz's paper in Grünhut's ZSchr. vol. i. p. 25. The Greek phrase was ἐπὶ σώματι δαπέλγειν. There is a curious style in Marculfus (Form. ii. 27), in which a borrower engages that, until he shall have repaid his loan, his creditor shall have right to his services so many days a week, and shall have power to inflict corporal punishment if there be dilatoriness in rendering them. Kohler, in his Shakespeare vor dem Forum der Jurisprudenz (Würzburg, 1884), p. 7 sq., gives scores of illustrations from the early (and in some cases present) laws and customs of all parts of the world of the powers of creditors over the bodies of their debtors, which form a most instructive study in comparative jurisprudence. See infra, Appendix, Note G.

¹⁵ “He told them how he had been obliged to borrow money, because, when he had been away fighting against the Sabines, his farm had remained uncropped, his house had been burned, his cattle driven off, everything plundered, and at the same time, unhappily for him, a tribute imposed; how first his ancestral lands had gone, then his other property, and at last, like a wasting disease, it had come to his body; how his creditor, instead of putting him to work (in servitium), had thrown him into a dungeon and a torture-chamber” (Liv. ii. 28).

stantially what he did in entering into the nexal contract;¹⁶ not in so many words, but by necessary implication.¹⁷ That the creditor should have been entitled to realise the right he had thus acquired without the judgment on it of a court of law is equally intelligible. The nexal contract was a public act, carried out in the presence of the representatives of the people, who were witnesses alike of the acknowledgment of indebtedness and the tacit engagement of the debtor. The only valid objection that could be stated against the creditor's apprehension of his debtor in execution was that the indebtedness no longer existed,—that the loan had been repaid. But a nexal debt could be legally discharged only by nexi liberatio; which also was a solemn procedure per aes et libram in the presence of five citizen witnesses.¹⁸ What need for a judicial inquiry in the presence of facts so notorious? A creditor would rarely be daring enough to proceed to manus injectio if his loan had been repaid; if he did, the testimony of the witnesses to the discharge would at once procure the release of his alleged debtor. It was probably to give opportunity for such proof, if there was room for it, that the XII Tables required that a creditor who had apprehended a nexal debtor should bring him into court before carrying him off into detention.

¹⁶ It is often argued, in opposition to this view of the matter, that a Roman citizen could neither sell himself as a slave nor place himself in causa Mancipii. This is true. But it is irrelevant. The nexus was neither a slave nor in causa Mancipii. His creditor's right was to detain him and use his services; protected possibly by a real action, but certainly by an action of theft against any third party maliciously carrying him off. In these respects the relation of the nexus to his creditor was analogous to that of an auctoratus to his lanista (Gai. iii. 199); yet the auctoratus was undoubtedly a freeman, and the relation the result of contract.

¹⁷ Some jurists hold that a debtor's giving himself as nexus was something distinct from the engagement to repay, and might be either contemporaneous with it or of later date. In the former case they assume that there was a separate agreement or lex nexi annexed to the main contract. For the latter they call in evidence the historians, who once or twice speak of men having yielded themselves as nexi in respect of loans they themselves had not contracted. But in such instances it was invariably a son that gave himself up in respect of money borrowed by his deceased father,—the heir fulfilling, as the law compelled him to do, the obligation of his predecessor.

¹⁸ Gai. iii. 174. The formula of nexi liberatio is instructive as showing the actual relation in which the debtor stood to his creditor—"me a te solvo liberoque hoc aere aeneaque libra"—"I unbind and free myself from thee," etc.

The provisions of the Tables on the subject of manus injectio,¹⁹ there seems good reason to believe, applied for the most part only to judgment-debtors. There are some, however, who hold they had no application at all to mere nexi;²⁰ while others again are of opinion that they applied to them in their integrity as much as to judicati.²¹ As described by Gellius they commenced thus: "Aeris confessi rebusque jure judicatis triginta dies justi sunt. Post deinde manus injectio esto: in jus ducito. Ni judicatum facit," etc., i.e. "for acknowledged money debts and judgments obtained by regular process of law the days of grace shall be thirty. Then the creditor may apprehend his debtor, but must bring him before the praetor. If the judgment-debtor still fail to implement the judgment," and so on. That the words "aeris confessi . . . triginta dies justi sunt"²² referred to a nexal debtor, and not, as is generally assumed, to a defendant who had formally admitted his liability in the initial stage of an ordinary action, will be shown more conveniently in a subsequent section (§ 36). He was to have thirty days' grace after the maturity of his debt; and then his creditor might apprehend him, presenting him, however, to the magistrate before carrying him home (domum ductio), in order, no doubt, that the one might prove the nexal contract, and the other have an opportunity, if the fact justified it, of proving by the mouths of the witnesses of the nexi liberatio that the loan had been repaid. All that follows in Gellius of the provisions of the Tables on the subject of manus injectio seems

¹⁹ Gell. xx. i. 45. [Infra, p. 485.]

²⁰ E.g. Voigt, XII Tafeln, vol. i. p. 629 sq.

²¹ E.g. Huschke, who is of opinion (Nexum, p. 95) that the Tables must have contained a provision that a nexus was to be dealt with in the same way as a judicatus. [On this theory the nexal debtor would be one whose obligation gave the creditor the right, on failure of payment, to treat him as judicatus. Just as in modern bonds there may be a clause of consent to registration for execution or a warrant of attorney to enter up judgment. Huschke's theory is the one that receives most support from recent writers; see Cuq, p. 423; Girard, p. 957.]

²² There is no good objection to the phrase "dies aeris confessi"; for "dies pecuniae" occurs in Cic. Ad Att. x. 5, and "dies pecuniarum" in Colum. De R. R. 7, 2. [On the construction of the text in question, see Cuq, p. 426, n. 2.]

to refer solely to the case of a judgment-debtor. The possible intervention of a vindex, the two months' provisional detention of the debtor, his periodical production in the market-place, his formal over-giving to his creditor (addictio) on the expiry of the sixty days, the capite poenas datio, the sale beyond Tiber, the partis secare,—all these (§ 36) refer solely to the judicatus. There was no room for a vindex or champion in the case of a nexal debtor; for there was no judgment whose regularity the former could impugn. Nor was there any room for a magisterial addictio of the debtor to his creditor; for the latter's right was founded on a publicly vouched contract, and needed no decree to strengthen it. He was entitled at once, after apprehension of his debtor and production of him in court in terms of the statute, to carry him home, take such steps as were necessary to ensure his safe custody, and employ his services in profitable industry. But that he could kill him or sell him, as some suppose, is a proposition that is unsupported by any distinct authority.

Equally untenable is the notion that the nexus became a slave, or that, while retaining his freedom, his wife, children, and belongings fell with him into the hands of his creditor. He certainly was not in a worse position than an addictus,—a judgment-debtor given over to his creditor by magisterial decree on failure to make an arrangement; yet Quintilian states distinctly that an addictus did not become a slave,—that he still retained his position in the census and in his tribe.²³ Many a time, when the exigencies of the state required it, were the nexi temporarily released in order to obey a call to arms,—to fulfil the duty incumbent on them as citizens. In fact, a nexal debtor suffered no capitis deminutio at all because of his detention. If he was a house-father, he still retained his manus over his wife and potestas over his children. But they did not share his quasi-servitude.²⁴ Their

²³ Quint. Decl. 311.

²⁴ If they had done so as a matter of course, there would have been no occasion for a son to yield himself as nexus for his father's debt on the latter's death, as we are told sometimes happened (see note 17). A passage in Livy (ii. 24) seems at first sight to partially contradict what is stated above: "Servilius . . . edixit ne quis civem Romanum vinctum aut clausum teneret, quo minus edendi apud consules potestas fieret, neu quis militis, donec in castris esset, earnings legally belonged to him, but were no doubt retained by them with his consent for their own support. They certainly did not fall to his creditor. We may well believe that in the ordinary case a nexus, when he fell into that condition, had not much to call his own; but to assume that all that he then had, and all that he subsequently acquired by inheritance or otherwise, passed ipso jure to his creditor, would be to set at naught the statement of Varro—"dum solveret nexus vocatur." How could he pay his debt and thus obtain his release if all that he had to pay with already belonged to his creditor? And what, on such assumption, of the provision of the Poetilian law, which made bonam copiam jurare a condition of the release of the nexi then in bondage?²⁵ Whatever these words may mean—and it is a matter of controversy²⁶—they undoubtedly imply that a nexus, even when confined in his creditor's prison-house, might still have means of his own. It was the body of his debtor that the creditor was entitled to, and too often he wreaked his vengeance on it by way of punishment; there was as yet no machinery for attaching the debtor's goods in substantial reparation for the loss caused by his breach of contract.

The abuses to which the system gave rise alike in the case of nexal and of judgment-debtors have already more than once been alluded to. Their detaining creditors, instead of being content to employ them in productive industry, and to resort to no more restraint or punishment than was necessary for safe custody or in the exercise of discipline, often confined them in dungeons, put them in chains, starved them and flogged them, and subjected them to the grossest indignities. In the year 428²⁷ a more than ordinarily flagrant outrage committed by a creditor upon one of his young nexi, who, Livy says, had given himself up as responsible for a loan contracted bona possideret aut venderet, liberos nepotesve ejus moraretur." But this edict bore no special reference to nexi. It was a general prohibition of the appropriation of the goods or detention of the children of a citizen while on service, no matter on what pretext. Besides, it was nearly fifty years earlier than the XII Tables, and before there was any definite law to protect the plebeians against the high-handed oppression of their patrician fellow-citizens.

²⁵ Varro, De L. L. vii. 105 (Bruns, p. 308).

²⁶ See infra, note 35.

²⁷ According to Livy. Dionysius puts it in 462. [Varro in 441.]

by his deceased father, roused the populace to such a pitch of indignation as to necessitate instant remedial legislation. The result was the famous Poetilian law (lex Poetilia Papiria).²⁸ It has often been summarily described as a law abolishing imprisonment for debt, and substituting real for personal execution. Its scope, however, was by no means so extensive. The imprisonment of a judgment-debtor was still competent under the legislation of Justinian,²⁹ although by the Julian law of cessio bonorum it might be avoided or put an end to by the unreserved surrender of his goods to his creditor,³⁰ while execution against a debtor's estate independently of his person was first made matter of general regulation by an edict of Pub. Rutilius Rufus,³¹ who was praetor in 647 U.C.³²

So far as can be gathered from the meagre accounts of it we possess, the Poetilian law contained at least these three provisions: (1) that fetters and neck, arm, or foot blocks should in future be applied only to persons undergoing imprisonment for crime or delict; (2) that no one should ever again be the nexus of his creditor in respect of borrowed money; and (3) that all existing nexi qui bonam copiam jurarunt should be released. The first was intended to prevent unnecessary restraint upon judgment-debtors formally given over (addicti) to their creditors. Bonds were not altogether forbidden; on the contrary, the charter of foundation of one of Caesar's colonies, in authorising manus injectio upon a judgment, expressly

²⁸ Cic. De Rep. ii. 34, § 59; Liv. viii. 28; Dion. Hal. Frag. xvi. 9 (Reiske, vol. iv. p. 2338); Varro, De L. L. vii. 105 (Bruna, p. 308).

²⁹ See references to it as a subsisting institution in Dig. xlii. 1, 34, and Cod. vii. 71, 1.

³⁰ Severus Alexander in Cod. vii. 71, 1.

³¹ Gai. iii. 78, iv. 35. This edict was really a bankruptcy law to preserve an insolvent debtor's estate and regulate its division among his creditors. But there is no reason for doubting that long before its date the praetor may have interfered in the same direction on special application in regard to each case as it arose.

³² What, no doubt, has given rise to the notion that the Poetilian law was meant to substitute real for personal execution, is the phrase in Livy's account of it, — "Pecuniae creditae bona debitoris non corpus obnoxium esset." But this is clearly comment and nothing more; the Romans did not express their enactments in language so abstract and so vague. All that Livy meant, probably, was that it was the goods of a debtor (including the produce of his labour), and not his body as such, that ought to be made responsible for money borrowed by him.

empowered the creditor to incarcerate his debtor, and put him in bonds such as were allowed by the jus civile.³³ It is not improbable that in addition the statute contained this positive provision in reference to the addictus,—that he should work for his creditor until his debt was paid; at least Quintilian more than once mentions an anonymous statute in which he says it was so laid down.³⁴ The second provision above referred to did not necessarily abolish the contract of loan per aes et libram, but only what had hitherto been an ipso jure consequence of it,—the creditor's right to incarcerate his debtor without either the judgment of a court or the warrant of a magistrate. For the future, execution was to be done against a borrower only as a judgment-debtor formally made over to his creditor by magisterial decree, and under the restrictions and limitations imposed by the Poetilian law itself. This very soon led to the disuse of nexal obligation; once it was deprived of its distinctive processual advantages it rapidly gave place to the simpler engagement by stipulation enforceable per conditionem (§ 39). As for the release of the then existing nexi, Cicero, Livy, and Dionysius say nothing of any condition annexed to the boon the statute conferred upon them; it is only Varro that limits it to those qui bonam copiam jurarunt,—those apparently who were able to declare on oath that they had done their best, and could do no more to meet their creditors' claims.³⁵ Such a limitation can hardly be called unreasonable, even were we to assume—as probably we ought to do—that the release spoken of was only from the bonds of physical restraint, not from those of legal obligation.²⁶ It might be proper enough to liberate those whose inability it was, and not their will, that prevented them fulfilling their engagements; but to have done the same with those who, being able to do so, fraudulently refused to pay their debts, would have been an injustice to their creditors that even the abuses that gave occasion for the statute could hardly have excused.

³³ Lex coloniae Juliae Genetivae (710 A.U.C.), cap. 61 (Bruns, p. 110),—“Judicati jure manus injectio esto. . . . Secum ducito. Jure civili vinctum habeto.”

³⁴ “Quid enim lex dicit? ‘Addictus, donec solverit, serviat’” (Decl. 311). See also Inst. Or. vii. 3, 26.

³⁵ The same words occur in the Lex Julia Municipalis (line 113, Bruns, p. 101) as descriptive of a class of persons thereby disqualified for holding office in a municipality. They must therefore have implied insolvency rather than solvency. Comp. Marezoll, Frag. legis Rom. in tab. Heracleensis parte (Göttingen, 1816), p. 142 sq.; Dirksen, Ad tab. Heracl. part. alteram (Berlin, 1817), p. 105 sq. Cic. Ad Fam. ix. 16 has bonam copiam ejurare. Paul. Diac. (Bruns, p. 266) defines ejuratio as “id, quod desideretur, non posse praestare.” [Those “who swore that they had not a sufficiency of assets” seems to be the best translation, but see Cuq, p. 589, n. 6.]

It is obvious that the contract of nexum and the contractual or quasi-contractual relations arising from a lex Mancipii, a vadimonium, or a dotis dictio, must have been far from sufficient to meet the requirements even of an agricultural population such as that of Rome in the fourth century of her history. If a man purchased sheep or store cattle, a plough, a toga, a jar of wine or oil, had he no action to compel delivery, the vendor no action for payment of the price? Did the hire of a horse or the loan of a bullock create no obligation? Was partnership unknown, and deposit, and pledge, and suretyship in any other form than that of vadimonium? One can have no hesitation in answering that, as transactions of daily life, they must all have been more or less familiar. It does not follow, however, that they were already regulated by law and protected by the ordinary tribunals. The historical jurists are pretty well agreed that not only the real contracts of loan (mutuum and commodatum), deposit, and pledge, but also the consensual ones of sale, location, partnership, and mandate, and the verbal one of suretyship, were as yet very barely recognised by law. Sale was the offspring of barter,—of instant exchange of one thing for another. With such instant exchange there was no room for obligation to deliver on either side, even when the ware (merx) given by one of the parties was so much rough copper weighed in the scales. The substitution of coined money for the raw metal can hardly have operated any radical change; the ordinary practice of those early times must still have been ready-money transaction,—an instant exchange of ware against price; and it can only have been when, for some reason or other, the arrangement was exceptionally for delivery or payment at a future date, say next market-day, that obligation was held to have been created. Was that obligation enforceable by the civil tribunals? Some jurists hold that it was,—that at no time were the juris gentium contracts outside the protection of judicial remedies, although by a simpler procedure than that resorted to for enforcement of the contracts of the jus civile. But a couple of provisions in the XII Tables seem to prove very clearly that it was not. The first is that already referred to as recorded by Justinian,³⁷—that where a thing was sold and delivered, the property, nevertheless, should not pass until the price had been paid or sureties (vades) for it accepted by the vendor. Far from being a recognition of the obligatory nature of the transaction, this provision is really a recognition of the inability of the law to enforce payment of the price by the vendee; it is a declaration that on the latter's failure to pay, the vendor, unprotected by any personal action, should be entitled to recover the thing sold as still his own, no matter in whose hands he found it. The second related to the case of a person who had bought a victim for sacrifice, but had failed to pay for it. A real action for its revindication by the seller after it had been consumed on the altar was out of the question; so he was authorised by the Tables,³⁸ by the process of pignoris capio (§ 37), at his own hand to appropriate in satisfaction a sufficient equivalent out of the belongings of the purchaser, against whom he had no personal action.³⁹

²⁶ Livy's phrase is "ita nexi soluti"; and "nexi soluti" he employs elsewhere in opposition to "nexi vincti," thus distinguishing between nexi in bonds and nexi at large. In ii. 23, § 8, he has "nexi vincti solutique."

It would seem, therefore, that in the earlier centuries of the history of the law juris gentium conventional obligation was cognisable by the civil courts only to a very limited extent. But it has already been pointed out in dealing with the regal period (p. 22) that if the party in whose favour such an obligation was conceived took the precaution of having it corroborated either by a solemn oath (jusjurandum) or an invocation of Fides, then a breach of it fell within the cognisance of the ministers of religion, or of the magistrate invested for the time being with the regimen morum. There were various transactions and relations, moreover, that were held to be peculiarly under the protection of Fides, even although there might have been no actual invocation; and in some of them breach of the engagement involved, when accompanied by substantial injury to another, entitled the latter to institute proceedings against the defaulter. A guardian, for example, who had converted the funds or property of his ward to his own use, was liable in double their value. A depositary who was unfaithful to the trust reposed in him was also liable to an action for double the value of what he had failed to restore, one-half in reparation and the other half by way of penalty.⁴⁰ And it is quite possible, although we have no record of it, that the same rule applied to the borrower of some specific article (commodatarius), when by his own malfeasance he was unable to return what he had lent him.⁴¹

³⁷ See § 30, note 4.

³⁸ Gai. iv. 28.

³⁹ Gaius (l.c.) records an analogous provision in reference to location: if A gave one of his draught cattle in location to B, as a means of raising money for a sacrifice, and B failed to pay the hire, A might recoup himself by pignoris capio. Here again the exceptional procedure was in the interests of religion; but it would have been unnecessary had there been a personal action on the contract.

Those were cases of breach of conventional or quasi-conventional obligation which, because of the grossness of the perfidy involved in them, were punished as if they were delicts. Of delicts proper—offences against life, limb, reputation, and property, independent of any breach of special duty incumbent on the offender—the Tables, as there has been occasion to notice from time to time, contained a goodly list. But contract and delict were not the only sources of obligation under their régime any more than at a later period. There were some that arose from facts and circumstances,—events that placed one person in the position of debtor to another (ex re). To this class belonged the depensum (or depensio) more than once mentioned by Gaius.⁴² He speaks of it in connection with a lex Publilia, which authorised sureties (sponsores), who had paid debts for their principals, to proceed against them by manus injectio if the depensum was not repaid within six months. He does not say, however, that the notion of obligation in respect of such outlay was new, or that an actio depensi was for the first time introduced by the Publilian law. And it can hardly have been so. The vindex and the vas of the Twelve Tables, ⁴⁰ Paul. Sent. ii. 12, § 11. See supra, § 30, note 39.

⁴¹ That deposit and commodate stood in some respects on the same footing appears from Gai. iv. 47.

⁴² Gai. iii. 127, iv. 22.

it may reasonably be assumed, must have had an action of relief against the party for whom they had been required to make payment; and there seems ground for the opinion that this must have been the actio depensi, carried out by the summary process of manus injectio (§ 36).⁴³ To the class of obligations ex re may also be assigned those arising between co-heirs from the fact of their co-inheritance, and which were adjusted by means of the decemviral actio familiae erciscundae.⁴⁴ There may have been one or two others of the same sort; but the materials at command do not enable us to speak of them with certainty.

SECTION 32.—THE LAW OF SUCCESSION

Patrician Rome had two varieties of testament,—that made at stated periods in the comitia of the curies, under advice of the college of pontiffs, and that made by soldiers in the hearing of a few comrades on the eve of battle, and which probably was originally nothing more than an apportionment of the testator's belongings amongst his proper heirs.¹ Both still remained in use in the early republic;² but were in course of time displaced by the general adoption of that executed with the copper and scales (testamentum per aes et libram). It seems to be the general opinion that it was to the first two alone that the words applied which stood in the forefront of the provisions of the XII Tables about inheritance,—“uti legassit suae rei ita jus esto.”³ Whether resort was to the comitia or

⁴³ See Voigt, XII Tafeln, vol. ii. p. 495. [See infra, p. 195, n. 18.]

⁴⁴ Gai. ad ed. prov. in Dig. x. 2, fr. 1, pr.

¹ See supra, p. 47. The testamentum in procinctu factum is not to be confounded with the testamentum militare of the empire referred to, infra, p. 320.

² [From a passage in Cicero, De Orat. i. 53, it would seem that the comitial testament was in desuetude by the beginning of the 7th century.]

³ Gai. ii. 224; Just. Inst. ii. 22, pr. Ulpian and others interpolate “super pecunia tutelave” before “suae rei.” But this has the appearance of a gloss by the interpreters of the republic; the Tables, in dealing with intestate succession, speak not of pecunia but of familia. Legare does not mean “bequeath,” but is equivalent to legem dicere (see supra, § 7, note 8; § 11, note 9). Suae rei refers to what is often called the res familiaris, or more briefly familia. [Supra, p. 64, n. 7. See Cic. De Inv. ii. 50, where familia is used along with pecunia in the reference to the law. Some importance attaches to the question whether the words “super pecunia tutelave” were contained in the original law, because founded partly on these words is a theory that free power of testing under the

to the army, the testator's own will in the matter was henceforth to be supreme. There was to be no more reference to the pontiffs as to the expediency of the testament in view of the interests of the family sacra and of creditor's of the testator's; from legislators, sanctioning a departure from the ordinary rules of succession, the assembled Quirites became merely witnesses,—recipients of the oral declaration of the testator's will in regard to his inheritance.

The testament with the copper and the scales is depicted by Gaius as a written instrument. But he presents it in what was apparently the third stage of its history. Its probable origin has already been explained (p. 64) in describing the result of the Servian reforms upon the private law. It was not a testament but only a makeshift for one. A plebeian was not qualified in the regal period to make a testament in the comitia; so, instead, he transferred his estate to a friend on whom he could rely,—the transferee was called familiae emptor, because the conveyance was in form a mancipation for a nominal price,—with instructions how to distribute it on his death.⁴ It is not at all unlikely that the same device may occasionally have been resorted to by a patrician who had neglected to make a regular testament, and was seized with mortal illness before he had an opportunity of appealing to the curies. But such a disposition was not a testament, and may not have been so called. A testament was the nomination of a person as the testator's heir,—sometimes the substitution of an individual of the testator's choice for the heir assigned to him by law, sometimes the acceptance of the latter in the character of testamentary heir, so that the testator might be able to impose upon him what burdens he pleased as the tacit condition of heirship. It made the person instituted as fully the representative of the testator after his death as his heir-at-law would have been had he died intestate. The mortis causa mancipation, however, that opened the way for the testament per aes et libram, conferred upon the familiae decemviral code was restricted to independent legacy of a man's res nec Mancipi (pecunia) and that as regards his res Mancipi (familia) he could not test. See Cuq, Inst. Jurid. pp. 283, 301; contra, Girard, pp. 243 n. 3 and 782.]

⁴ Gai. ii. 103. [This theory of the origin of the testament by mancipation is adopted by Carle, Origini, p. 506 sq. Contra, Karlowa, Röm. RG. ii. p. 853.]

emptor no such character. Gaius says that he stood in place of an heir (heredis loco), inasmuch as he had such of an heir's rights and duties as the familiae venditor had it in his power to confer and impose; but the transaction was but a conveyance of estate, with a limitation of the right of the grantee.

It has been argued that, as the law did not recognise conditional mancipation, the conveyance must have operated a complete and immediate divestiture of the granter.⁵ But this does not follow. For it was quite competent for a man, in transferring property by mancipation, to reserve to himself a life interest;⁶ and apparently it was equally competent for him to postpone delivery of possession,⁷ without infringing the rule that the mancipation itself could not be ex certo tempore. So far as one can see, therefore, there was nothing to prevent the granter of the conveyance (or quasi-testator) bargaining that he was to retain the possession till his death; and as the familia was an aggregate of estate (universitas rerum), which retained its identity notwithstanding any change in its component elements, he must in such case have been as free to operate on it while he survived, as if he had never conveyed it by mancipation. But on his death how did it stand affected by the claims of creditors? Fraudulent alienations to defeat their rights were set aside by praetorian law; but we have no reason to believe that any such process was competent in the third century of the city. It would almost appear as if creditors must have been as much at the mercy of the familiae emptor as were those among whom he had been directed to distribute the estate. These, certainly, had nothing to depend on but his sense of honour; they had no action against him, because he was not the deceased's heir, neither between them and him was there any bond of contract. He was a trustee and nothing more; and it was not until early in the empire that the law undertook to enforce a mortis causa trust.⁸ Probably, however, in those early times the risk was not so great as it might have been at a later period; the Romana fides

⁵ [Supra, p. 65, n. 8; Girard, p. 785.]

⁶ Gai. ii. 33. [This must not be taken to imply that usufruct was known at this early period.]

⁷ Gai. iv. 131a.

⁸ Just. Inst. ii. 23, 1.

held men to fulfilment of their engagements quite as effectually as the most elaborate machinery of the law.

Cicero incidentally remarks⁹—what indeed the nature of the business of itself very distinctly suggests—that the true testament with the copper and scales had its statutory warrant not in the uti legasset suae rei of the XII Tables, but in that other equally famous provision,—“cum nexum faciet mancipiumque, uti lingua nuncupasset ita jus esto” (p. 131). Reflection on the import and comprehensiveness of these words led the interpreters to the conclusion that there was nothing in them to prevent the direct institution of an heir in the course of the verba nuncupata annexed to a mancipation. From the moment this view was adopted and put in practice, the familiae mancipatio ceased to be a transfer of the testator's estate to the familiae emptor; the latter's purchase was now for form's sake only, though still an indispensable form, since it was it alone that, according to the letter of the statute, imparted efficacy to the nuncupatio. But it was the nuncupatio—the oral declaration addressed to the witnesses—that really contained the testamentary disposition, i.e. the institution of an heir, with such other provisions as the testator thought fit to embody in it. This was the second stage in the history of the testament per aes et libram. The third was marked by the introduction of tablets in which the testamentary provisions were set out in writing, and which the testator displayed to the witnesses, folded and tied up in the usual manner, declaring that they contained the record of his last will. Gaius narrates the words spoken by the familiae emptor as follows:—“Your estate and belongings (familia pecuniaque tua), be they mine by purchase with this bit of copper and these copper scales, subject to your instructions but in my keeping, that so you may duly make your testament according to the statute (quo tu jure testamentum facere possis secundum legem publicam).”¹⁰ The meaning of the words “in my keeping (endo custodelam meam)” is not quite obvious; they may have been remnants of an older style. Certain it is that they no more imported a real custody than a real property in the familiae emptor; for the testator remained so entirely master of his estate that the very next day if he pleased he might mancipate it anew to a different purchaser, and nuncupate fresh testamentary writings. The nuncupation was in these terms: "As is written in these tablets, so do I give, so do I legate, so do I declare my will; therefore, Quirites, grant me your testimony"; and, adds Gaius, "whatever the testator had set down in detail in his testamentary tablets he was regarded as declaring and confirming by this general statement." To the appeal of the testator the witnesses responded by giving their testimony¹¹ in words which unfortunately are not preserved; and then the testament was sealed by testator, officials, and witnesses,¹² the seals being on the outside, and over the cord with which the tablets were tied.

⁹ Cic. De Orat. i. 57, § 245.

¹⁰ Gai. ii. 104. The phrase testamentum jure factum (sometimes perfectum) came to be the technical expression for a testament in which the requirements of law, both formal and substantial, had been duly attended to; see tit. Inst. quib. mod. test. infirm. (ii. 17). [On the above Gaian passage see Sohm, Inst. § 99.]

Although this testament with the copper and the scales was justified in the first instance by the provision of the XII Tables as to the effect of nuncupative words annexed to a mancipation, yet one cannot fail to perceive that in course of time it came to be subordinated to that other one which dealt directly with testamentary dispositions,—uti legassit suae rei ita jus esto.¹³ Upon the words uti legassit the widest possible meaning was put by the interpreters: not only was a testator held entitled on the strength of them to appoint tutors to wife and children, to enfranchise slaves, and make bequests to legatees, but he might even disinherit his proper heir (suius heres) in favour of a stranger, so long as he did so in express terms. Institution of a stranger without mention of the proper heir, however, was fatal, at least if the latter was a son; for without express disinheritance (exheredatio) his father could not deprive him of the interest he had in the family property, as in a manner one of its joint owners. It can hardly be supposed that disinheritance was contemplated by the compilers of the Tables,—it was altogether foreign to the traditional conception of the family and the family estate; but it was a right whose concession could not be resisted when claimed as embraced in the uti legassit, although generally discountenanced, and as far as possible restrained by the strictness of the rules imposed on its exercise. The potency of the innate right of the suus heres made itself manifest in yet another direction,—namely, in the effect exercised upon a testament by his attaining the position after its execution. A testator had to provide, either by institution or disherison, not only for sui heredes in life at the date of his will, but also for any that might emerge subsequently; if he neglected that precaution, the result of the birth of another child was to invalidate the testament. It was a deed disposing of the family estate. But in that the newly-born child had an interest as a joint owner, which could not be defeated except by his institution or exheredation.

¹¹ Paul. Sent. iii. 4a, § 4.

¹² Bachofen, Ausgewählte Lehren d. röm. Civilrechts (Bonn, 1848), p. 256.

¹³ See supra, § 11, note 9. [Cuq, p. 521 sq., regards the testament per aes et libram as a fusion of the comitial with the mancipation testament.]

In the absence of a testament, or on its failure from any cause, the succession opened to the heirs ab intestato. So notoriously were the sui heredes entitled to the first place—and that not so much in the character of heirs as of persons now entering upon the active exercise of rights hitherto existing, though in a manner dormant¹⁴—that the compilers of the XII Tables thought it superfluous expressly to declare it. “If a man die intestate, leaving no suus heres, his nearest agnate shall have his estate.¹⁵ If the agnate also fail, his gentiles shall have it.”¹⁶ It has been pointed out in dealing with the tutory of agnates (p. 117) that the notion of agnation,¹⁷ as a bond distinct from that which connected the gentile members of a clan, was due to the decemvirs.¹⁸ They ¹⁴ See Huschke, Studien, pp. 241, 242.

¹⁵ Si intestato moritur, cui suus heres nec escit, adgnatus proximus familiam habeto” (Ulp. Frag. xxvi. 1).

¹⁶ Si adgnatus nec escit, gentiles familiam habento” (Ulp. lib. regul. in the Collatio, xvi. 4, 2).

¹⁷ For a definition of “agnation” reference is made to p. 118, and to notes 7 and 9 thereon.

¹⁸ This view is expressed by Danz, Gesch. vol. ii. p. 95, and Hölder, Zur Geschichte d. röm. Erbrechts (Erlangen, 1881), p. 56, note. But the latter seems to go too far in also attributing the right of the gentiles of a deceased intestate to the Tables. It was much earlier. [Cuq (Inst. Jurid. p. 285 sq.) holds that agnates were not made heirs in the proper sense by the XII Tables, but that they had to devise a law of intestate succession suitable alike to the patricians who had gentes and the plebeians who had none. To put the latter in exactly the same position as the former was beyond their power; for the fact had to be faced that the plebeians had no gentile institutions, and to create them was impossible. The difficulty was overcome by accepting the principle of agnation upon which the patrician gens was constructed, and establishing an agnatic circle of kinsmen within the sixth degree,¹⁹ to which the gens as a corporation should be postponed in the case of patricians, and which should come in place of it in the case of plebeians. It was not perfect equalisation, but the nearest approach to it that the circumstances permitted. The difference was that, when the agnates of a plebeian intestate failed, his inheritance was vacant; whereas, on failure of those of a patrician, there was devolution to his gens in its collective capacity.²⁰ An interpretation put upon the statute, probably in the interest of the gentile houses, and which one can hardly suppose was in the minds of the decemvirs, made vacancy in the one case and devolution in the other more frequent than it would otherwise have been, viz. the limitation of the right of succession to the nearest agnates of the deceased; if brothers (say) survived him, and they declined the inheritance, an uncle or other remoter agnate was not allowed to take it, for he was not the nearest of degree in existence;²¹ the succession passed to the gens if the deceased had been a patrician, and was vacant if he had been a plebeian.²² Another interpretation, probably of were given a right to the familia or patrimonial estate—"familiam habeto"—failing sui heredes, and that it was due to interpretation that they were classed as heirs. In this view those who continued the sacra of an intestate who had no sui heredes were the persons who usucaptured pro herede.]

¹⁹ [As to the limitation to the sixth degree, see Rivier, Précis du droit de famille romain, pp. 22, 26.]

²⁰ [It may be that in the latter case a preference in the distribution was given to those who were of the same branch of the gens as the deceased. The intestate succession of clients would in the circumstances supposed go to the gens of their patron. See Karlowa, Röm. RG. ii. pp. 884, 885. Among plebeians a jus stirpis analogous to the jus gentilicium became in time recognised. See Cuq, p. 290, n. 3; cf. Mommsen, SR. iii. p. 74.]

²¹ Gai. iii. 12; Ulp. xxvi. 5. [Hence the maxim in legitimis hereditatibus non est successio.]

²² [There is no satisfactory proof that if the nearest agnate failed to accept, the

later date, curtailed the right of female agnates, by denying the succession to any kinswoman of a deceased intestate more remotely related to him than a sister;²³ the avowed object being to keep estates as much as possible within the family to which the intestate belonged, and prevent them being dispersed through marriages. The non-admission of representation, e.g., the exclusion of children of a brother who had predeceased from participation along with surviving brothers and sisters of the intestate, was an inevitable result of the language of the Tables;²⁴ the inheritance went to the nearest agnates, to the exclusion of all remoter ones; and the division, therefore, when several heirs concurred, was invariably per capita and not per stirpes.²⁵

The order of intestate succession thus established by the XII Tables, and which prevailed until amended by the praetors, probably in the eighth century of the city, was first to the sui heredes of the deceased, next to his nearest agnate or agnates, and finally, if the deceased was a patrician, to his gens.²⁶ His sui heredes included those of his descendants in his potestas when he died, who by that event (or even after it, but before his intestacy became manifest)²⁷ became sui juris, together with his wife in manu (who, as regarded his succession, was reckoned as a daughter); but did not include children whom he had emancipated, or daughters who had passed in manum of husbands. Emancipated children did not even come in as agnates on failure of sui; for emancipation severed the tie of succession of a patrician went to his gens. It became vacant. See Zoll, Römisches und heutiges Intestaterbrecht, in Grünhut's Zeitsch. xvii. p. 512. The quiritarian law recognised no successio ordinum or graduum. It was only when, as Gaius says (iii. 12), nullus adgnatus sit that the hereditas passed to the gens. Cf. Cuq, p. 290. Cuq regards the succession of the nearest agnates under the XII Tables as a right by which the deceased's familia returned to them (droit de retour légal), and that it gradually became a right of inheritance. He explains the right of cessio in jure of agnatic hereditas (Gai. iii. 34) on this assumption.]

²³ Gai. iii. 14; Ulp. xxvi. 6.

²⁴ Gai. iii. 15.

²⁵ Gai. iii. 16; Ulp. xxvi. 4.

²⁶ [The succession of gentiles still continued in the time of Cicero (In Verr. i. 45, § 115, De Orat. i. 39), but there is no instance of it so late as our era.]

²⁷ Just. Inst. iii. 1, 7. [The term sui heredes in a wide sense embraced every descendant in potestate of the deceased, though it is, in relation to intestate succession, commonly used to indicate those in the immediate power of the deceased at the time of his death. See Dig. xxix. 2 fr. 6, § 5; xxxviii. 6 fr. 7.]

agnation as well as that of potestas. For the same reason no kinsman who had been emancipated, and so cut off from the family tree, could claim as an agnate; for those only were agnates who were subject to the same patria potestas, or would have been had the common family head been still alive.

The opening of the succession (technically delatio hereditatis) in favour of sui heredes, whether in virtue of a testamentary institution or by operation of law on intestacy, at once invested them with the character, rights, and responsibilities of heirs. No acceptance was requisite, nor, according to the rules of the jus civile, was any declinature competent. They had been all along in a manner joint owners with their parent of the family estate, which by his death had become, nominally at least, an inheritance; and as he had not thought fit to terminate their interest in it by emancipating or disinheriting them, they were not now allowed to disown it.²⁸ Hence they were spoken of as necessary heirs (heredes sui et necessarii). A slave, too, whom his owner had instituted in his testament, was a necessary heir; he could not decline; and was invested with the character of heir the moment the testator died.²⁹ Not so with stranger institutes or agnates taking on intestacy; they were free to take or reject the inheritance as they saw fit; consequently an act of acceptance (aditio) was required on their part to make them heirs. This was originally a formal declaration before witnesses, which got the name of cretio; but in course of time informal acceptance, or even behaviour as heir, was in some cases sufficient.³⁰ It was not unusual for a testator, in instituting an heir, to require that he should make his formal declaration of acceptance within a limited time, failing which his right should pass to a substitute, who in turn was required to enter within a certain time; and so on with any number of substitutes,³¹ the series ending with one of his slaves, who became heir without entry, and thus saved the testator from the disgrace of post-mortem bankruptcy in the event of the inheritance proving insolvent.³²

The uti legassit of the Tables, as already remarked, con-

²⁸ Gai. ii. 157.

²⁹ Gai. ii. 153; Ulp. xxii. 24.

³⁰ Gai. ii. 164-173.

³¹ Gai. ii. 174-177.

³² Gai. i. 21.

ferred upon a testator very great latitude of testamentary disposition, even to the extent of disherison of sui heredes. This was a course, however, that it can well be assumed was rarely resorted to unless when a child had been guilty of gross ingratitude, or when the parent had reason to believe his estate was insolvent, and desired to protect his children from the responsibilities of inheritance. Usually his sui, if he had any, would be his institutes; and the purpose of the testament either to apportion the estate amongst them as he thought expedient, or to give him an opportunity of appointing tutors, bequeathing legacies, or enfranchising slaves. On intestacy the sui took equally, but per stirpes; that is to say, that grandchildren by a son who had predeceased or been emancipated, but who themselves had been retained in their grandfather's potestas, took amongst them the share to which their father would otherwise have been entitled, instead of taking equal shares with their surviving uncles.⁸³ It was by no means unusual, when the whole inheritance descended to sons, for them to hold it in common for many years as partners (consortes); indeed this seems to have been the earliest partnership known to the law; and some of the rules affecting the relationship of partners in the later jurisprudence bear the impress of their derivation from this early form of it.⁸⁴ But any one of them was entitled at any moment to claim a partition; which was effected judicially, by an arbitral procedure introduced by the XII Tables, and termed a judicium (sometimes arbitrium) familiae erciscundae.⁸⁵ Where two or more strangers were instituted testamentarily, whether to equal or unequal shares, if one of them failed, either by predecease or declinature, his share accrued ipso jure to the others; for it was a rule that very early became proverbial that a man could not die partly testate and partly intestate.⁸⁶ There was the same accrual amongst agnates on intestacy;⁸⁷ and both they and stranger testamentary institutes had the same action for division of the inheritance that was made use of by sui heredes.

⁸³ Gai. iii. 7, 8; Ulp. xxvi. 2.

⁸⁴ See supra, § 11, note 8.

⁸⁵ Gai. ii. 219; and ad ed. prov. in Dig. x. 2, 1, pr.

⁸⁶ Dig. l. 17, 7.

⁸⁷ Ulp. xxvi. 5.

Inheritance was by far the most frequent form of what in the texts is sometimes called universal acquisition, sometimes universal succession. But it was by no means the only one; for, not to speak of some of later introduction, the law was early familiar with the universal succession resulting alike from adrogation (pp. 30, 115), and in manum conventio (p. 27). An adrogator acquired in mass (per universitatem) all the property and patrimonial rights (with a few exceptions) of the paterfamilias he had adopted, and a husband acquired all those of a woman sui juris passing into his manus on marriage.³⁸ So did an heir, or a group of heirs, acquire all the property and patrimonial rights of the testator by whom they had been instituted, or of the person whose inheritance had come to them by devolution of law. But while an heir was liable for the debts of the person to whom he had succeeded, an adrogator and a husband were not.³⁹ It is obvious, therefore, that liability for debts was not inherent in the idea of universal succession. How account for the liability of an heir? The brocard heres eadem persona cum defuncto rather formulates a rule than explains the reason of it. So far as a suus heres was concerned, the reason may not be difficult to discover; as he had in his parent's lifetime been a member of the familia, and in a manner joint owner of the family estate, so it may be argued that he had been joint debtor with him in his engagements. But the stranger instituted in a testament and the agnate taking on intestacy were by no means in the same position. There was no room to pretend that either of them had in any sense been joint debtor with the testator or intestate; and if, as Gaius says, the capitis deminutio (which was civil death)⁴⁰ of a debtor extinguished his debts, it is a little difficult to comprehend how his actual death without leaving sui heredes could have failed to produce the same result. It would rather appear that the liability of heirs who were not sui arose from statutory enactment. Diocletian in one of his constitutions attributes it to the XII Tables;⁴¹ and there are other passages in the texts which state that these contained a provision to the effect that, where there was a plurality of ³⁸ Gai. iii. 82, 83.

⁴⁰ Gai. iii. 153.

³⁹ Gai. iii. 83, iv. 38.

⁴¹ Cod. iv. 16, 7.

heirs, each should be liable for a share of the hereditary debts corresponding to the share of the inheritance to which he had been instituted or to which he had succeeded ab intestato.⁴² Claims against debtors of the testator or intestate were apportioned on the same principle; they did not require to be dealt with in an actio familiae erciscundae.⁴³

As an heir was burdened with the defunct's debts, so was he also with his family sacra,—the sacrifices and other religious services that had periodically to be performed for the repose of the souls of the deceased and his ancestors. Whether the XII Tables contained any provision in reference to this matter is uncertain; it may be that it rested from the first on consuetude and pontifical regulation. The rule of the jus civile in reference to it was a very simple one,—that the heir was responsible for their maintenance. But in time this presented difficulties, especially when there was no heir, or when, although there was one, the substantial benefits of the inheritance went to third parties. Cicero⁴⁴ comments on two celebrated pontifical edicts amending the law on the subject, one published by Tib. Coruncanius, the first plebeian chief pontiff, who held that office about the year 502 of the city, and the other

⁴² Paul. ad ed. in Dig. x. 2, 25, § 13; Diocl. in Cod. ii. 3, 26; Sever. and Car. in Cod. iv. 2, 1. [On the original intransmissibility of debts, see Cuq, p. 695 sq.]

⁴³ Gordian, in Cod. iii. 36, 6. [This was a weakness in the system. It may be noticed that the doctrine of English law by which a person's succession mortis causa is divisible into two parts—the heir taking the realty and the executor the personalty, and becoming primarily responsible for debts charged on realty and for personal debts respectively—has been found inconvenient as regards administration, and subjected to modification by recent statute, viz. the Transfer of Land Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 65). By this statute the whole inheritance (with some unimportant exceptions) is to be taken by the executor in the first instance; he is to be not only personal but real representative in heritage, and must collect and pay the debts and distribute the estate among those entitled. This, which should be found to be a very convenient rule, may be regarded as to some extent a tribute to the superiority of the Roman notion of a universal successor, and has the advantage over it of in solidum right to and liability for debts. It does not seem hazardous to foretell the ultimate abolition of the distinction between real and personal property as regards right of succession in England.]

⁴⁴ Cic. De Leg. ii. 19, § 45, ii. 20, § 53. See on the subject generally, Savigny, Verm. Schrift. vol. i. p. 153 sq.; Heimbach, De sacror. privator. mortui continuandor. apud Romanos necessitate, Jena, 1827; Leist, Bonor. Possessio, vol. i. p. 10 sq., 41 sq.; Leist-Glück, vol. i. p. 164 sq.; Hölder, Erbrecht, p. 137 sq.

by P. Mucius Scaevola, chief pontiff in the year 631. Without going into the details of their arrangements, it may be enough to observe that the leading idea of both edicts was that the burden of the sacra should run with the pecunia, that is to say, should lie on him or those who had taken the greatest beneficial interest in the estate of the deceased, but without receding from the old principle that in the ordinary case the heirs were the proper parties on whom to impose it,—heredum causa justissima est. In time, as religious sentiment declined, the responsibility came really to be regarded as a burden, and an inheritance unaffected by it (hereditas sine sacris) to be hailed as a matter for rejoicing; and Cicero tells of the fiduciary coemption the jurists devised as a means of enabling women to rid an inheritance to which they had succeeded of an encumbrance which to them was often peculiarly inconvenient.⁴⁵

According to Gaius, it was as a stimulus to heirs to enter as soon as possible on an inheritance that had opened to them, and thus make early provision alike for satisfying the claims of creditors of the deceased and attending to his family sacra, that the law came to recognise the somewhat remarkable institution of usucapion or prescriptive acquisition of the inheritance in the character of heir (usucapio pro herede).⁴⁶ Such usucapion was impossible—there was no room for it—if the deceased had left sui heredes; for the inheritance vested in them the moment he died.⁴⁷ But if there were no sui heredes, then any person, by taking possession of the effects that had belonged to the deceased, and holding them for twelve months without interruption, thereby acquired them as if he were heir,—in fact, according to the views then held, he acquired the inheritance itself. Gaius characterises it as a dishonest acquisition, inasmuch as the usucapient knew that what he had taken possession of was not his. But, as already explained, the usucapion of the XII Tables did not require bona fides on the part of the usucapient; he might acquire ⁴⁵ Cic. Pro Mur. 12, § 27. See supra, § 30, note 37.

⁴⁶ Gai. ii. 52-55. The probable origin of usucapio pro herede is adverted to supra, § 11, in fine. On the subject generally, see Huschke, in the Z. f. gesch. RW. vol. xiv. p. 145 sq.; Leist-Glück, vol. i. p. 208 sq.; Hölder, Erbrecht, p. 129 sq.; Jhering, Scherz u. Ernst, pp. 137-171.

⁴⁷ Gai. ii. 58, iii. 201.

ownership by prolonged possession of what he knew did not belong to him, so long as he did not appropriate it theftuously, i.e. knowing that it belonged to another.⁴⁸ But an inheritance unappropriated by an heir who had nothing more than a right to claim it, in strictness belonged to no one;⁴⁹ and there was no theft, therefore, when a person took possession of it with a view to usucapion in the character of heir.⁵⁰ There can be little doubt that on the completion of his possession he was regarded as heir just as fully as if he had taken under a testament or as heir-at-law on intestacy,—that is to say, that he was held responsible to creditors of the deceased, and required to charge himself with the family sacra. Gaius does not say as much, but both the Coruncanian and Mucian edicts imposed the latter burden upon him who had usucaptured by possession the greater part of a deceased person's estate; and it is but reasonable to suppose that the burden of debts must in like manner have fallen on the usucapient or usucapients in proportion to the shares they had taken of the deceased's property.⁵¹

⁴⁸ [Supra, p. 139.]

⁴⁹ [In the early law a hereditas jacens was regarded as res nullius; it was not till the time of the classical jurists that the fiction of personality was attached to it. Cf. Kuntze, Excursus, p. 556 sq.]

⁵⁰ Rei hereditariae furtum non fit, Paul. in Dig. xlvii. 19, 6.

⁵¹ See Leist-Glück, vol. i. p. 173.

CHAPTER IV

JUDICIAL PROCEDURE UNDER THE DECEMVIRAL SYSTEM

SECTION 33.—THE LEGIS ACTIONES GENERALLY¹

WE owe to Gaius the only connected account we possess of the legis actiones, as the system of judicial procedure was called which prevailed in Rome until the substitution of that per formulas (§ 71) by the Aebutian and Julian laws. It is a slight account at the best; and unfortunately, owing to the condition of the Verona MS., has reached us very defectively. Moreover, it is not implicitly to be relied on; it was matter of history with which Gaius was dealing, his information probably imperfect, and his ideas certainly on some points confused. He says that the legis actiones were so called "either because they had been introduced by statute (leges), or because the very words of the enactments on which they proceeded were embodied in them, so that in style they became as immutable

¹ The literature on the subject is very voluminous, great part of it in periodicals. Amongst the leading works are those of Keller, Der röm. Civilprocess u. die Actionen (1st ed. 1852, 6th ed. by Wach, Leipsic, 1883), §§ 12-21; Bethmann-Hollweg, Der röm. Civilprocess in seiner geschichtl. Entwicklung (3 vols. Bonn, 1864-66), the first volume of which is devoted to the legis actiones; Buonamici, Delle Legis Actiones nell' antico diritto romano, Pisa, 1868; Bekker, Die Aktionen d. röm. Privatrechts (2 vols. Berlin, 1871-73), particularly vol. i. pp. 18-74; Karlowa, Der röm. Civilprozess zur Zeit d. Legis-actionen, Berlin, 1872; Padeletti, "Le Legis Actiones," in Arch. Giurid. vol. xvii. (1875), p. 321 sq.; Buonamici, La Storia della Procedura Romana, vol. i. (Pisa, 1886), pp. 15-86. Schultze, Privatrecht u. Process in ihrer Wechselbeziehung, vol. i. (Freiburg, 1888, vol. ii. not yet published), in pp. 439-532, presents some novel and not unimportant views. [Among more recent works see H. Krüger, Geschichte der cap. deminutio, vol. i. p. 128 sq.; Jobbé-Duval, Études sur l'histoire de la procédure civile chez les Romains, vol. i. 1896, pp. 1-31.]

as those enactments themselves"; and he proceeds to illustrate this latter view by narrating the case of a man suing another for penalties for maliciously cutting his vines, whose action was thrown out of court because he complained of injury to his vines instead of to his trees (arbores), this last being the word used in the provision of the XII Tables on which he was founding.² Here there is a manifest confusion of legis actiones as generic modes of procedure, and legis actiones as specific actions falling under one or other of those modes. Even as regards such specific actions it is clear that in many of them no statute was founded on at all, as when a man was claiming a thing as his property; and it is difficult to believe that those which had a statutory foundation were so stereotyped as Gaius represents, or to suppose that those who from time to time made and published collections of them always literally reproduced the styles recommended by their predecessors.³ As generic modes of procedure (genera agendi), there can be no doubt that they underwent modification as time progressed; both Rudorff and Bekker have called attention to a variety of instances in which we know for certain that some new feature was added or some old one discarded or amended.⁴ This is a difficulty that besets the subject, as it does so many other branches of Roman law,—the operation of changes which must necessarily, though sometimes all but imperceptibly, have been wrought on an institution in the lapse of centuries.

As *genera agendi*⁵ Gaius tells us that the legis actiones were five in number, each taking its name from its special characteristic feature, viz. (1) the legis actio per sacramentum, (2) that per iudicis postulationem, (3) that per conductionem, (4) that per manus injectionem, and (5) that per pignoris capionem. The third was unknown in the decemviral period, and will be dealt with subsequently (§ 41). The other four were all more or less regulated by the XII Tables, but must in some form have been anterior to them. It is utterly impossible, however, to say of any one of them at what time it was introduced, or

² Gai. iv. 112.

³ Bekker, Aktionen, vol. i. p. 95; [Wlassak, Prozessgesetze, i. p. 30].

⁴ Rudorff, Röm. RG. vol. i. p. 105; Bekker, l.c.

⁵ So they are called by Pomponius, in Dig. i. 2, fr. 2, § 7.

what was the statute (lex) by which it was sanctioned; indeed it may well be that they were not of statutory introduction at all, but called legis actiones simply because recognised and indirectly confirmed by the Tables.⁶ In character and purpose they were very different. The first two were directly employed for determining a question of right or liability, which, if persistently disputed, inevitably resulted in a judicial inquiry; the fourth and fifth might possibly result in judicial intervention, but primarily were proceedings in execution, in which the party moving in them worked out his own remedy. Which of them was of greatest antiquity is naturally a matter of controversy. There is much to be said for the view of Jhering and Bekker that manus injectio, as essentially nothing more than regulated self-help, must have been the earliest,—that the legis actio sacramento and the judicis postulatio must have been introduced in aid of it, and to prevent too hasty resort to it where there was room for doubt upon question either of fact or law.

Before any step could be taken in either of the judicial legis actiones a preliminary procedure was necessary for bringing the respondent into court. The duty was not committed to any officers of the law; there was no writ of summons of any sort; the party moving in the contemplated litigation had himself to do what was needed. How it was to be gone about was explained in the very commencement of the XII Tables. "If a man summon another to court, the latter must go. If he go not, witnesses must be called. Then let the summoner apprehend him. If he hang back or try to take to his heels, then there may be manus injectio."⁷ Should illness or old age

⁶ Bekker (Aktionen, vol. i. p. 88, note) says that lege agere meant to proceed according to statute (nach dem Gesetz verfahren),—the view generally adopted. "To proceed as prescribed by statute" seems to be the idea in his mind. "To proceed in the way recognised by statute," i.e. by the XII Tables, appears more accurate. In jure cessio (surrender before a magistrate) was a legis actio (Gai. ii. 24) whether employed to effectuate an adoption, an emancipation, a manumission, or a conveyance of property; but there is no reason to believe that it was a statutory invention; all that we are told of its history is that it was confirmed by the XII Tables (Paul. lib. i. manual, in Vat. Frag. § 50); and, as regards the leg. act. per pignoris capionem, Gaius says expressly [iv. §§ 26, 27] that in some cases its employment was sanctioned not by statute but by custom.

⁷ A party who would not do what was necessary to the trial of a cause was

be an obstacle, the summoner must provide a conveyance, but need not furnish a litter unless he likes," and so on.⁸ Once before the magistrate (king, consul, or praetor), the plaintiff stated his contention in a few formal words. If admitted unqualifiedly by the defendant, the magistrate at once pronounced his decree, leaving the plaintiff to work out his remedy as the law prescribed. But if the case presented was met either with a denial or a qualified defence, and appeared to the magistrate to be one proper for trial, he remitted it for that purpose either to a collegiate tribunal or to one or more private citizens as judges or arbiters. The act of remit was technically litis contestatio or ordinatio judicii; the first so named because originally the parties called upon those present to be witnesses to the issue that was being sent for trial.⁹ This was the ordinary practice both under the system of the legis actiones and that of the formulae, and prevailed until the time of Diocletian.¹⁰

In the first stage the proceedings were said to be in jure, and the duties of the magistrate in reference to them made up his jurisdictio; in the second they were said to be in judicio, those presiding in it being styled judices. The similarity of the terms used to denote those two distinct functions is remarkable. Judex is the same as jus dicens; yet the magistrate was also said jus dicere.¹¹ The most likely explanation is that given by Cicero and Dionysius,—that originally the judicial office was not thus partitioned, but that in ordinary litigation the king not only decided whether there was a relevant case averred, but himself heard and considered the merits and pronounced a final judgment.¹² As the duties and avocations of the supreme magistrate became more onerous, it was found necessary to delegate to others part of his judicial functions. In some cases the delegation seems to have been regarded as declining the defence, and dealt with as judicatus. See Unger, Z. f. RG. vol. vii. p. 206.

⁸ See Bruns, p. 16, and compare Voigt, XII Tafeln, vol. i. p. 693.

⁹ Paul. Diac. v. Contestari (Bruns, p. 265).

¹⁰ [As to litis contestatio under the formulary system, see infra, p. 335.]

¹¹ The consuls were sometimes officially styled judices (Varro, De L. L. vi. 88, Bruns, p. 306).

¹² Cic. De Rep. v. 2, 3 (as in § 15, note 6); Dion. Hal. x. 1.

to the pontiffs, in others to lay senators, and at last to have been definitely regulated by Servius Tullius, to whom there seems reason to attribute alike the creation of the centumviral court and the institution of the single judge (unus judex).¹³ After that it became the rule that the magistrate, in the exercise of his jurisdictio, if the matter could not be settled at once by admission on the part of the defendant (confessio in jure), did no more than determine whether the plaintiff was entitled to an issue, remitting it if granted either to the centumvirs or a single judge to pass judgment on the question involved. This was all the judge, whether sole or collegiate, had to do. He was "right-declarer" only, not "right-enforcer." If his judgment was for the plaintiff, the latter, if he failed in obtaining an amicable settlement, had himself to make it operative by subsequent proceedings by manus injectio, and that under the eye of the magistrate, not of the judge.

From an enumeration in Cicero of a variety of causes proper to the centumviral court, the conclusion seems warranted that it was its peculiar province to decide questions of quiritary right in the strictest acceptation of the words.¹⁴ They were all apparently real actions (vindicationes);¹⁵—claims of property in land or of servitudes over it, of right as heir under a testament or in opposition to it, of rights of tutory and succession ab intestato as agnate or gentile, and so forth. In all of these it was a numerous court of Quirites, advised in the early republic by a pontiff, that determined by its vote the question of quiritary right submitted to it. Many such questions in course of time, possibly at first of express consent of parties, came to be referred to a single judge; but some, and notably claims of inheritance under or in opposition to a testament, were still remitted to the centumviral court in the classical period. Personal actions, however, unless, perhaps, when they arose under a lex Mancipii (p. 133), do not appear ever to have fallen within its cognisance: these were usually sent to a single judge—a private citizen—selected by the parties, but appointed by the magistrate, and to whom the latter administered an oath of office. But in a few cases in which an action involved not so much a disputed question of right as the exercise of skill and discretion in determining the nature and extent of a right that in the abstract was not denied, the remit was to a plurality of private judges or arbiters, usually three.

¹³ See supra, § 15, and notes 10-17.

¹⁴ "In quibus usucapionum, tutelarum, gentilitatum, agnationum, alluvionum, circumluvionum, nexorum, mancipiorum, parietum, luminum, stillicidiorum, testamentorum ruptorum aut ratorum, ceterarumque rerum innumerabilium jura versentur" (Cic. De Or. i. 38, § 173).

¹⁵ The "nexorum . . . jura" in the passage quoted in last note does not refer to the obligatory nexum described in a previous section (§ 31), and which was abolished by the Poetilian law of 428, but to one of the titles (fiducia) on which real property might be held. The word occurs frequently in Cicero in this sense; e.g. De harusp. resp. 7, § 14—"Multae sunt domus in hac urbe . . . jure hereditario, jure auctoritatis (usucapion ?), jure mancipii, jure nexi."

SECTION 34.—THE LEGIS ACTIO SACRAMENTO¹

The characteristic feature of the legis actio sacramento (or actio sacramenti) as described by Gaius,² and that from which it derived its name, was that the parties, after a somewhat dramatic performance before the consul or praetor, each challenged the other to stake a certain sum, whose amount was fixed by statute, and which was to abide the issue of the inquiry by the court or judge to whom the cause was eventually remitted. This stake Gaius refers to indifferently as sacramentum, summa sacramenti, and poena sacramenti. The formal question the court had to determine was,—whose stake had been justified, whose had not (cujus sacramentum justum, cujus injustum); the first was returned to the staker, the second forfeited originally to sacred and afterwards to public uses. But the decision on this formal question necessarily involved a judgment on the matter actually in dispute; and, if it was for the plaintiff, entitled him, failing an amicable arrangement, to take ulterior steps for making it effectual. The procedure was still employed in the time of Gaius in the few cases that continued to be referred to the centumviral court, but otherwise had been long in disuse.

¹ To the literature in § 33, note 1, may be added Asverus, Die legis actio sacramenti, Leipsic, 1837; Huschke (rev. Asverus), Richter's Krit. JB. vol. iii. (1839), p. 665 sq.; Stintzing, Verhältniss d. l. a. sacramento zum Verfahren durch sponsio praesudicialis, Heidelberg, 1853; Danz, Sacrale Schutz, pp. 151-221; Maine, Anc. Law, p. 375 sq.; Danz, "Die l. a. sacram. u. d. lex Papiria," in Z. f. RG. vol. vi. (1867), p. 339 sq.; Huschke, Die multa u. d. sacramentum, Leipsic, 1874; Lotmar, Zur l. a. sacramento in rem, Munich, 1876; Brinz (crit. Lotmar), "Zur Contravindication in d. l. a. sacr." in the Festgabe zu Spengel's Doctor-jubiläum (Munich, 1877), pp. 95-146; Münderloh, "Ueber Schein u. Wirklichkeit an d. l. a. sacramenti," in the Z. f. RG. vol. xiii. (1878), p. 445 sq.; E. Roth, in the Z. d. Sav. Stift. vol. iii. (1882), R. A. p. 121 sq.; Fioretti, Legis actio sacramento, Naples, 1883; Jhering, "Reich u. Arm im altröm. Civilprozess," in his Scherz u. Ernst, p. 175 sq.

² Gai. iv. 13-17.

Gaius explains that it was resorted to both in real and personal actions. Unfortunately the MS. of his Institutes is defective in the passage in which he described its application to the latter. We possess the greater part of his account of the actio in rem as employed to raise and determine a question of ownership; but the illustration he adduces is that of vindication of a slave,—not so interesting or instructive as the proceedings for vindication of land. These, however, can be reconstructed with tolerable certainty with the aids derivable from other sources.³

The parties appeared before the magistrate, each armed with a rod (festuca) representing his spear (quir or hasta), the symbol, as Gaius says, of ownership in law.⁴ The first word was spoken by the raiser of the action, and addressed to his opponent:⁵ “I say that the land in question [describing it sufficiently for identification] is mine in quiritary right (meum esse ex jure Quiritium); wherefore I require you to go there and join issue with me in presence of the magistrate (in jure manum consererere).” Thereupon, according to the earliest practice, the magistrate and the parties, accompanied by their friends and backers (or, as one might say, their seconds), proceeded to the ground for the purpose,—the court was transferred from the forum to the land itself. As distances increased,

³ Principally Cic. Pro. Mur. 12, § 26, and Aul. Gell. xx. 10.

⁴ Gai. iv. 16. [Some writers think that the action was originally only applicable to movables. This is in accordance with the theory that private ownership and alienation of land was unknown in early Rome. See supra, p. 39, n. 9.]

⁵ In a sacramental litigation about a question of property the parties were not exactly plaintiff and defendant; for he against whom action was taken had to maintain his own right, and not merely deny that of his opponent. Hence Gaius does not speak of them as actor and reus (plaintiff and defendant), but as adversaries (adversarii). One vindicated; the other counter-vindicated. [It was in a sense an action directed against the thing itself. The one party brought it into court and claimed it as his; the other counterclaimed. Girard, p. 963, n. 4.]

however, and the engagements of the consuls multiplied, this became inconvenient. Instead of it this course was adopted,—that the parties went to the spot without the magistrate but on his command, and joined issue in the presence of their backers, who had been ordered to accompany them, and who may have made a report on their return of the due observance of formalities. Still later the procedure was further simplified by having a turf brought from the place beforehand—probably as time advanced there would be no very particular inquiry as to where it had been obtained—and deposited a few yards from the magistrate's chair; and when he ordered the parties to go to the ground and join issue, they merely brought forward the turf and set it before him, and proceeded to make their formal vindications upon it as representative of the whole land in dispute.⁶

The ritual was as follows. The raiser of the action, addressing his adversary, again affirmed his ownership,⁷ but this time with the significant addition—"As I have asserted my right by word of mouth, look you, so do I now with my vindicta;"⁸ and therewith he touched the turf with his rod (which was called vindicta when employed for this purpose).

⁶ Joinder of issue on the spot in presence of the magistrate was technically IN jure manum conserere; before witnesses, but outwith his presence, it was EX jure manum conserere; on the turf before him it was again IN jure manum conserere. Some editors read manus conserere instead of manum conserere. But this destroys the idea. It was not that the parties lifted or pretended to lift their hands against each other; it was that they asserted and counter-asserted ownership under the old name of manus. This is evident from the language of Gellius in xx. 10, § 8—correptio manus, not manibus; and xx. 10, § 9—ad conserendam manum, not conserendas manus. [Müller in his edition of Varro, de L. L. vi. § 64, prints "adserere manu" but remarks that the MSS. have "manum." See supra, p. 60, n. 23; Cuq, p. 409, n. 4.]

⁷ The words in Gaius (iv. 16) are—"meum esse aio secundum suam causam." The "secundum suam causam" is generally printed as part of the formula recited by the vindicant, and supposed to have occurred in all vindications. But it rather seems to be parenthetical. Gaius is giving the ritual appropriate in vindication of an individual (homo); and in such a case it was often necessary to explain in what character he was claimed,—as a filiusfamilias, pupil ward, free bondman, or what not. All he means, therefore, by the words "secundum suam causam" is that the vindicant should be careful to make the necessary explanation. There was often no occasion for it in vindication of land, as in the example in the text.

⁸ This is a free paraphrase of the words of Gaius—"sicut dixi, ecce tibi, vindictam imposui."

The word was then taken up by the magistrate in the shape of a question to the other party whether he meant to counter-vindicate. If he replied in the negative, or made no response, there was instant decree (addictio) in favour of the first party, and the proceedings were at an end.⁹ If, however, he counter-vindicated, it was by repeating the same words and re-enacting the same play as his adversary:—"I say that the land is mine in quiritary right, and I too lay my vindicta upon it." The verbal and symbolical vindication and counter-vindication completed what was technically the manus consertio. The parties were now in this position,—that each had asserted his ownership, and had figuratively had recourse to arms in maintenance of his contention. But the matter was to be settled judicially; so the magistrate once more intervened, and ordered both to withdraw from the land. The dialogue was then resumed, the vindicant demanding to know from his opponent upon what pretence (causa) he had counter-vindicated. In the illustration in Gaius he avoided the question, and pleaded the general issue,—“I have done as is my right in laying my vindicta on the land.”¹⁰

The proceedings had now reached the stage at which the sacrament came into play. The first challenge came from the vindicant,—“Since you have vindicated unrightfully, I challenge you with a sacrament of 500 asses ;” to which the counter-vindicant responded,—“And I you.” This was

⁹ By arrangement between transferrer and transferee, the procedure down to this point was often employed as a mode of conveyance, the transferee taking the position of vindicant; it constituted the surrender in court (in jure cessio) referred to in previous sections (see p. 137).

¹⁰ There can be little doubt, however, that in certain circumstances the counter-vindicant would deem it expedient to disclose his title. This was very necessary where he attributed his right to a conveyance upon which two years' possession had not yet followed; in such a case he had to name his author (auctorem laudare) if he desired to preserve recourse against the latter on the warranty implied in the mancipation. That probably entailed a suspension of the proceedings, to allow of the author's citation for his interest; and on their resumption, if he appeared and admitted his auctoritas, he was formally made a party to the action. Valerius Probus, iv. 7 (Coll. lib. jur. antejustiniani, vol. ii. p. 144), has preserved the interrogatory addressed to him by the vindicant—“Quando in jure te conspicio, postulo, an ne far (fias?) actor?” Cicero (Pro Mur. 12, § 26) quotes the first five words. On the subject of laudatio auctoris generally, see Voigt, XII Tafeln, vol. ii. p. 195 sq.

technically the sacramento provocatio. The magistrate thereupon remitted the matter for trial to the centumviral court, or possibly, in certain cases, to a single judge;¹¹ and in the presence of witnesses called by the parties (litis contestatio) declared what exactly was the question put in issue, and which court or judge was to decide. At the same time, according to Gaius's account of the procedure, he required sureties from the parties for the eventual payment by him who was unsuccessful of the sacrament he had offered to stake, and which became a forfeit to the exchequer. (The original practice was that the stake was deposited by both parties in the hands of the pontiffs before they were heard by the centumviral court; after judgment that of the gainer was reclaimed by him, while that of the loser was retained for religious uses.¹²) The magistrate also made arrangements for the interim possession of the land by one or other of the litigants, taking security from him that, if he was eventually unsuccessful, it should be returned to his opponent, along with all the fruits and profits drawn in the interval. At the trial, as both parties were vindicants, there must have been a certain burden of proof upon both sides. The vindicant, one may believe, must have been required to establish in the first instance that the thing he claimed had at some time been his; and then, but probably not till then, the counter-vindicant would have to prove a later title in his person, sufficient to exclude that of his opponent. The judgment, as already observed, necessarily involved a finding on the main question; but in form it was a declaration as to the sacrament,—that of the party who prevailed was declared to be just, and that of his unsuccessful opponent unjust.¹³

¹¹ In what remains of his description of the actio sacramento in personam Gaius says that, in terms of a lex Pinaria (which Huschke, Rüdorff, and Mommsen attribute to the year 282, and Voigt to 322), the praetor required the parties to attend on the thirtieth day after the sacramento provocatio for the appointment of a judge; and because, in speaking of the action in rem, he says that after provocation the same procedure followed as in the personal one (eadem sequebantur quae cum in personam ageretur), most writers assume that here too there was a remit after thirty days to a single judge. Probably in time, with certain exceptions, this became common enough; but originally, as has been shown in a previous section, and possibly for a couple of centuries, the remit in real actions was usually to the centumviral court. [Supra, p. 72.]

¹² See Appendix, Note D.

¹³ Cic. Pro. Caec. 33, § 97.

Looking at this ritual as a whole, the conviction is irresistible that it could not have been so devised by one brain. It reveals and combines three distinct stages in the history of procedure,—appeal to arms and self-help, appeal to the gods and the spiritual power,¹⁴ appeal to the civil magistrate and his judicial office. As Gellius says, the real and substantial fight for might, that in olden days had been maintained at the point of the spear, had given place to a civil and festucarian combat in which words were the weapons, and which was to be settled by the interposition of the praetor.¹⁵ But this does not explain the sacramentum. Very various are the theories that have been proposed to account for it. According to Gaius, it was nothing more than the sum of money staked by each of the parties, and which was forfeited originally to sacred and afterwards to public uses by him who was unsuccessful, as a penalty for his rashly running into litigation; and substantially the same explanation is given by Festus in one of his definitions of the word.¹⁶ But this is far from satisfactory; for it involves the absurdity of declaring that a penalty imposed by law could be unjust (injustum) in any case, and the still greater absurdity of declaring it just in the case of the party who was in the right, and unjust in the case of him who was in the wrong. There is another definition in Festus¹⁷—"a thing is said to be done sacramento when the sanction of an oath is interposed"—that lends support to the opinion of Danz, Huschke, E. Roth, and one or two others, that there was a time when parties to a question of right were required to take an oath to the verity of their respective assertions; that they were also required concurrently to deposit five bullocks or five sheep,

¹⁴ It must not be lost sight of that in the regal period the king was also chief pontiff,—that he was the embodiment of the spiritual as well as of the secular power.

¹⁵ Aul. Gell. xx. 10, § 10. Vindicare is just vim dicare, to proclaim a mighty right. [The derivation seems to be from vim dicere in the sense of asserting a violent claim (hence vindex, vindicare) as contrasted with jus dicere, asserting a rightful claim (hence judex, judicare). Some philologists, however, favour the derivation of vindicare from venum dicere in the sense of declare the price, or declare for sale—claim, the ē of venum changing its quantity before nd. See Wharton, Etym. Lat. p. 116; H. Krüger, Gesch. d. cap. dem. pp. 192 sq.]

¹⁶ Fest. v. Sacramentum (Bruns, p. 289). [Cf. Varro, de L. L. v. 180.]

¹⁷ Fest. v. Sacramento (Bruns, p. 289).

according to the nature or value of the thing in dispute, to abide the issue of the inquiry;¹⁸ that the question for determination was whose oath was just and whose unjust; and that he who was found to have sworn unjustly forfeited his cattle or sheep as a piamentum,—a peace-offering to the outraged deity,—while the other party reclaimed his from the repository in which they had been detained in the interval.¹⁹

The authors referred to are far from unanimous as to details, which is not surprising considering how meagre are the materials upon which their theories are constructed. But there seems to be enough to render it more than probable that, at an intermediate stage between the vera solida vis of the ancient times and the vis civilis et festucaria which Gellius and Gaius depict, there was a procedure by appeal to the gods through means of oaths of verity sworn by the parties, in the manner and with the consequences that have been indicated. Whether that was still the practice at the time of the decemviral legislation there is no means of judging. That in time it should have dropped out of the ritual is quite in the order of things. Its tendency was to become a mere form, imposing no real restraint on reckless litigation. The restraint was rather in the dread of forfeiture of the sacramental cattle, sheep, or money that would follow a verdict that an oath had been unjust. And it must have been felt besides that it was unfair to brand a man as a false-swearer, needing to expiate his offence by an offering to the gods, whose oath had been perfectly honest. That he should suffer a penalty for his imprudence in not having taken more care to ascertain his position, and for thus causing needless annoyance to others, was reasonable, but did not justify his being dealt with as one who had knowingly outraged the deity to whom he had appealed. So the oath—the original sacramentum—disappeared, the name passing by a natural enough process to the money which had been wont to be deposited before it was sworn; but which now ceased to be an offering in expiation by a false-swearer, and became a mere penalty of rash litigation (poena temere litigantis).²⁰ The incongruity was in the retention in the mouth of the judex of the old formula—"The sacrament of A is just, that of N unjust;" to be explained only by that spirit of conservatism which pervaded the Roman jurisprudence, and which forbade the abandonment of old forms on merely theoretical considerations, so long as they could be adapted in practice to altered conditions.

¹⁸ It was the Lex Aternia Tarpeia of the year 300 u.c. that commuted the five bullocks and five sheep into 500 and 50 lbs. of copper respectively (Cic. De Rep. ii. 35, § 60, where the words usually printed “de multae sacramento” should read “de multa et sacramento”); Fest. v. Peculatus (Bruns, p. 279). For the pounds’ weight of raw metal the XII Tables substituted the same number of asses; declaring that 500 should be the summa sacramenti when the cause of action was worth 1000 asses or more, 50 when worth less, or the question one of freedom or slavery (Gai. iv. 14). [Gell. xi. 1; supra, p. 57.]

¹⁹ See Appendix, Note E.

It may well be assumed that in most cases the finding of the court as to the justness or unjustness of the respective sacraments of the parties was the end of the case,—that it was at once accepted and loyally given effect to. If in favour of the party to whom interim possession had been awarded by the magistrate, there could be no difficulty; he retained the object of dispute, with the fruits and profits he had drawn in the interval between litiscontestatio and judgment. If, however, the finding was for the other party, and amicable arrangement was delayed, it is by no means quite clear what course was followed. Gaius says that in awarding interim possession (vindicias dicere) the praetor required the grantee to give security by sureties (praedes) to his adversary for restitution to the latter in the event of his success;²¹ while Festus preserves a law of the XII Tables which, according to Mommsen's rendering, declared that when it turned out that interim possession had been awarded to the wrong party, it was to be in the latter's power to demand the appointment of three arbiters, who should ascertain the value of the object of vindication and its fruits, and assess the damages due for non-restitution at double the amount.²² This provision seems to have been intended to afford the wrongful interim possessor, who was not in a position to make specific restitution to his successful opponent, a means of avoiding the apprehension and imprisonment which were the statutory consequences of failure to implement a judgment (§ 36).²³ It is probable that in time this duplicated money payment came to be regarded as the satisfaction to which the successful party in a vindication was entitled in every case in which, no matter for what reason, he was unable to obtain the thing itself and its fruits from their interim possessor; that consequently an arbitrium litis aestimandae, or reference to arbiters to assess their value, resulted in every such case; and that it was to assure its payment that the praetor required the party to whom the interim possession was awarded to give to his opponent the sureties (praedes litis et vindictiarum) to whom Gaius alludes.²⁴

²⁰ Rubr. tit. Inst. iv. 16.

²¹ Gai. iv. 16.

²² "Si vindiciam falsam tulit, si velit is, praetor arbitros tris dato. Eorum arbitrio rei fructus duplione damnum decidito:" Fest. v. Vindiciae (Bruns, p. 300); Mommsen, Fest. cod. quatern. XVI. (Berlin, 1864), p. 84. This law is generally supposed to have been in one of the supplementary Tables of the year 304; if so it was probably intended to qualify the rigour of the provisions about manus injectio in Table III. See Voigt, Jus. nat. vol. iii. pp. 702-716.

Such was the legis actio sacramento in rem when the ownership of lands was the matter of controversy. But every sort of manus which a man could pretend to have over persons or things might be vindicated by the same process, although necessarily with variations, more or less important, in the ritual. If his right over a woman whom he alleged to be his wife was disputed, or over a person who he averred was his filiusfamilias, or his free bondman in mancipio, or his slave, an actio sacramenti in rem was the appropriate remedy. So it was when he claimed an inheritance as heir; and so it was when he claimed an easement or right of servitude over another person's land, or desired to have it established that his own was free from such a burden. If a man detained by another as a slave alleged that he was really a freeman, it was by the same process that he obtained a judgment, suing by a third party who got the name of adsertor libertatis; in this case the XII Tables limited the sacramental penalty to fifty asses, and prescribed that during the dependence of the process the party whose status was in dispute should enjoy that of a freeman. It has even been suggested, though somewhat tentatively, by so circumspect an authority as Brinz,²⁵ that it is possible that the actio sacramento in personam (described by Gaius in a page of which unfortunately not more than half a dozen words are legible in the Verona MS.) was originally nothing but a vindicatio. Entertaining, as he does, the opinion that in the old law a debtor was practically subject to the manus of his creditor, who might reduce him into quasi-slavery on his failure to meet his engagements, he asks—Was the personal action at first anything else than a dispute as to the bondage or freedom of the debtor,—an action in rem, in which a vindex (p. 194) took the place of an adsertor libertatis? The suggestion is novel, and worthy of further consideration.

²³ Voigt (Jus. nat. vol. iii. p. 705 sq.; XII Tafeln, vol. ii. p. 656, note 14) holds, contrary to the view generally entertained, that the provisions of the Tables in reference to execution upon res jure judicatae were not confined to judgments for money.

²⁴ [Another theory is that, while the possessor could not be proceeded against, the praedes, who were really bound in his place and not merely as accessories, were directly subject to execution as debtors of the State. On this and other theories, see Cuenot, Nouv. Rev. Hist. 1893, p. 345 sq.; cf. Jhering, Geist (4th edition), 1888, iii. Vorrede, p. xi. sq.; Girard, pp. 328, 329 note 1.]

The ordinarily received opinion, but which rests on slender foundations, is that from the first the parties to a personal action met on equal terms; that if it was a case of money debt, the creditor commenced the proceedings with the averment that the defendant owed him the sum in question,—“I say that you ought to pay me (dare oportere) 1000 asses;” that this was met with a denial; and that a sacramental challenge followed on either side.²⁶ All are agreed that the remit was to a single judex, after an interval of thirty days from the proceedings in jure; that where the claim was for a definite sum the plaintiff had to establish his case to the letter; and that his sacrament was necessarily declared unjust if he failed to prove his claim by a single penny. But there is considerable diversity of opinion as to whether by this form of process a claim of uncertain amount could be insisted on,—as, for example, one for damages for breach of a warranty (by lex Mancipii) of acreage of lands sold, or of their freedom from burdens. If it could, then probably the question raised and dealt with sacramento was the abstract one of liability,—was the warranty given, and has it failed? the sum due in respect of the breach being left to be dealt with in a subsequent arbitral process (arbitrium litis aestimandae).

²⁵ In his paper “On the idea involved in the word obligatio” (Grünhut's ZSchr. vol. i. p. 23 sq.).

²⁶ Valer. Prob. iv. Nos. 1 and 2, has these formulae—“aio te mihi dare oportere,” and “quando negas, te sacramento quingenario provoco.” The latter has all the appearance of having belonged to the sacramental procedure: but the former may quite as well have belonged to the legis actio per conditionem (infra, § 41).

SECTION 35.—THE LEGIS ACTIO PER JUDICIS POSTULATIONEM¹

The defects of the Verona MS. have deprived us of Gaius's account of the legis actio per judicis postulationem. There is little elsewhere that can with any certainty be said to bear upon it. The most important is a note in Valerius Probus—T.P.R.I.A.V.P.V.D., which is interpreted—*te, praetor, judicem arbitrumve postulo uti des.*² This petition to the magistrate—king, consul, praetor—to appoint a judge, arbiter, or arbiters (as the case might be), in all probability was part of the procedure in the action, and that from which it derived its distinctive name. Beyond this all is conjecture alike as to the nature and form of the action and the cases to which it was applicable. Gaius says of the legis actio sacramento that it was general, and that it was the procedure that was to be resorted to where no other was prescribed by statute. The extant fragments of the XII Tables contain no such indications as this would lead us to expect; there is not a trace in them of an express instruction that proceedings, in any particular case were to be per judicis postulationem. There are amongst them, however, two or three provisions about arbitria,³—references of questions to arbiters, which were to be determined by them, not necessarily by an affirmance or negation of the respective pretensions of parties, but according to their conviction of what was right in the circumstances, although it might fall short of what was claimed on the one side or be in excess of what was conceded on the other. The number of those arbitria may have increased subsequently to the decemviral legislation; indeed, Cicero applies the name to all those actions which gave rise to what are more familiarly termed bonae fidei judicia (p. 337); and some of them may have been initiated by proceedings per judicis postulationem so long as the legis actiones were in general use.⁴

¹ To the literature in note 1 to § 33 add—Baron, “Zur leg. act. per judicis arbitrive postulationem,” in the Festgabe für Aug. W. Heffter (Berlin, 1873), p. 29 sq.; Huschke, Multa, etc. p. 394 sq.; Adolf Schmidt, “Ueber die l. a. per jud. post.” in the Z. d. Sav. Stift. vol. ii. (1881), R. A. p. 145 sq.; Voigt, XII Tafeln, vol. i. § 61. [Cuq, Inst. Jurid. pp. 415-422.]

² Valer. Prob. iv. 8 (Coll. libror. Jur. Antejust. vol. ii. p. 144). [As to the first letters T.P.R. see Rudorff in Puchta, Inst. ii. § 162, note a; Huschke, Jurisp. Antej. (5th ed.), p. 139; Schmidt, as above, p. 147, n. 1.]

³ E.g. “arbitrium falsae vindiciae,” Fest. v. Vindiciae (Bruns, p. 300); “arbitrium familiae erciscundae,” Cic. P. Caec. 7, § 19, Gai. in Dig. x. 2. 1, pr.; “arbitrium finium regundorum,” Cic. De Leg. i. 21, § 55.

An incidental observation of Gaius's, however, about another matter,⁵ leaves little doubt that the judicis postulatio was also employed to initiate stricti juris judicia,—actions in which the judge had no latitude, but was bound to find for the defendant unless the plaintiff established his claim to the very letter of it. What were they? When one looks into the matter, it is apparent that under the arrangements of the XII Tables sacramental procedure must often have been out of the question.⁶ A man would hardly think of raising in that form a vindication of property of less value than the minimum sacramental penalty, or of claiming by it (say) a fine of five-and-twenty asses for an assault, or of the same sum for the loss of a tree of his cut down maliciously.⁷ As the condictio was of later introduction, the conclusion is all but inevitable that his remedy must have been per judicis postulationem. Many jurists, however, are of opinion that its employment was not limited to cases whose trifling pecuniary importance rendered sacramental procedure inappropriate. Huschke seems inclined to hold that in most personal actions the plaintiff had it in his option to proceed in either form he pleased. Karlowa main-

⁴ [Upon arbitria see Cuq, pp. 663-67. He attaches much importance to them in the development of the law.]

⁵ Gai. iv. 20. He is speaking of the leg. act. per conductionem (infra, § 41), introduced by the Silian and Calpurnian laws. That action was for obtaining a judgment upon a claim for a definite sum of money or some other res certa. He says the necessity for it was far from obvious, seeing that such claims could quite well have been insisted in sacramento or per judicis postulationem. Yet the judicia to which those statutes gave rise were in the first instance essentially stricti juris.

⁶ Bekker (Aktionen, vol. i. pp. 65-67) points out a considerable number of the remedies of the XII Tables which it would have been very difficult to make operative sacramento.

⁷ Such was the penalty imposed by the Tables for the offences referred to.

tains the doctrine that outside the XII Tables there was a great variety of rights whose sanction was jus,—consuetudinary, not statute law; that actions for their protection were jurgia, not lites; and that judicis postulatio was the procedure by which such jurgia were dealt with.⁸ Voigt discovers ample scope for the employment of this form of procedure within the Tables themselves. He finds in them the matter of not less than fifty-two actions; and, undaunted by Gaius's remark about the generality of the actio sacramento, does not hesitate to assign to each of them its appropriate procedure. No fewer than thirty-five of them must, in his view, have been initiated by judicis arbitrive postulatio, of which nine resulted in arbitria and the remainder in judicia.⁹ His reasoning is ingenious, but, in the almost entire absence of direct authority to support it, can hardly be called convincing.

While it is impossible with certainty to trace the history of this procedure to its first beginnings, yet the impression is general that it must have originated in the regal period. There were three different positions in which an appeal for aid might be made to a court of justice—(1) when it was a question of civil right that had to be decided in terms directly affirmative or directly negative of the contention of the raiser of the action, and in which questions both of law and fact were involved; (2) when it was only a question of fact that had to be ascertained, the legal result of the fact, if established, being known beforehand; (3) when facts had to be set against facts, and a result arrived at that in the judgment of those who had to balance them was fair and reasonable in the circumstances. In the first case, as when the contention was meum esse or dari oportere (otherwise than under an obligatory nexum), the procedure was sacramento, and the reference originally (in all probability) to the pontiffs, although afterwards to the centumviral court or to a judex; in the second, as when the question was—had or had not the defendant assaulted the plaintiff, and so incurred the fixed and invariable statutory penalty?—it was probably to a judex without the intervention of a sacrament;

⁸ Karlowa, Röm. CP. pp. 47 sq., 122 sq.; [see supra, p. 70, n. 6].

⁹ Voigt, XII Tafeln, vol. i. pp. 586-589. See also Jhering (as in § 34, note 1), p. 203 sq. [Cuq, p. 421.]

in the third, as when the matter in hand was the partitioning of an inheritance amongst co-heirs, or the determining whether operations of the defendant were interfering with the natural drainage of the plaintiff's land and how the mischief was to be abated, or the assessment of damages for injury to property, or of the sum sufficient to relieve from talion or the statutory penalty of theft, the reference was to an arbiter or arbiters. In the procedure sacramento the pleadings opened directly with an averment of right—"I say that this is mine," "I say that the defendant is bound to pay me so much;" but in that per judicis arbitrive postulatio there is reason to surmise that they commenced with an averment of fact, followed by the resulting demand of the plaintiff. The details, however, are quite uncertain; with this exception, that in some arbitria the plaintiff expressly threw himself upon the discretion of the arbiters—quantum aequius melius est ob eam rem mihi dari.

SECTION 36.—THE LEGIS ACTIO PER MANUS INJECTIONEM¹

In one of his most interesting chapters, and in the shape of a dialogue between Sex. Caec. Africanus the jurist, and Favorinus the philosopher, while they and a few others were waiting in the quadrangle of the palace to pay their court to the emperor, Aulus Gellius introduces an account, put into the mouth of Africanus, of some of the provisions of the XII Tables, and in particular those regulative of manus injectio.² Africanus is made to say that, according to his belief (opinor), the words of the statute were these: "Aeris confessi rebusque jure judicatis triginta dies justi sunt. Post deinde manus injectio esto. In jus ducito. Ni judicatum facit, aut quis endo eom jure vindicit, secum ducito: vincito aut nervo aut compedibus. Quindecim pondo, ne majore, aut si volet minore, vincito.³ Si volet suo vivito. Ni suo vivit, qui eom vinctum habebit, libras farris endo dies dato. Si volet plus dato." Africanus continues narrativé: "There was still room for the parties to come to terms; but if they did not, the debtor was kept in chains for sixty days. Towards the end of them he was brought before the praetor in the comitium on three consecutive market-days, and the amount of the judgment-debt proclaimed. After the third capite poenas dabat, or else he was sent across Tiber to be sold to a foreigner. And this capital penalty, sanctioned in the hope of deterring men from unfaithfulness to their engagements, was one to be dreaded because of its atrocity, and of the new terrors with which the decemvirs thought right to invest it. For if it was to more creditors than one that the debtor had been adjudged, they might, if they pleased, cut up and divide his body. Here are the words of the statute, 'Tertiis nundinis partis secanto. Si plus minusve secuerunt, se fraude esto.'"

¹ To the literature in § 33, note 1, may be added Huschke, Nexum (1846), p. 79 sq.; Savigny, "Das alt-röm. Schuldrecht," in his Verm. Schrift. vol. ii. (1850), p. 369 sq.; Hoffmann, Die Forsten u. Sanaten, nebst Anhang über d. altröm. Schuldtrecht (Vienna, 1866), p. 54 sq.; Unger, in the Z. f. RG. vol. vii. (1868), p. 192 sq.; Vainberg, Le nexum et la contrainte par corps en droit rom. (Paris, 1874), p. 36 sq.; Bruns, in the Z. f. RG. vol. xii. (1876), p. 128 sq.; Exner, in the Z. f. RG. vol. xiii. (1878), p. 392 sq.; Voigt, "Ueber d. Gesch. d. röm. Executionsrechtes," in the Berichte d. K. Sächs. Gesellsch. d. Wissenschaften, phil.-hist. Cl. vol. xxxiv. (1882), p. 76 sq.; Voigt, XII Tafeln, vol. i. §§ 63-65; Jhering (as in § 34, note 1), pp. 196 sq., 232 sq. [Add H. Krüger, Gesch. der cap. dem. p. 192 sq.; Carle, Origini, p. 206 sq.; Cuq, Inst. Jurid. pp. 422-29].

² Gell. Noct. Att. xx. 1, §§ 41-51.

Such is Gellius's account of the provisions of the XII Tables in reference to this legis actio. I have preferred giving the statutory words in the original; because in some points there is considerable dubiety as to their meaning. But it is to be borne in mind that Gellius does not vouch for their accuracy; the Tables were already in his time matter of antiquity, and even the jurists knew nothing of them beyond what was still in observance.⁴ That he has reproduced them only partially seems almost beyond question; for in another chapter he himself quotes a couple of sentences that are to all appearance from the same context, "Adsiduo vindex adsiduus esto. Proletario jam civi, quis volet vindex esto"—"The vindex for a freeholder must himself be a freeholder; but any one who likes may be vindex for a proletarian.”⁵ We have to face, therefore, the extreme probability that the record is incomplete, and the possibility besides that it is not literally accurate. There is room for error, consequently, in two directions; but the nature and effect of the procedure in its main features may be gathered from the texts as they stand with reasonable certainty.

³ The MSS. have "ne minore aut si volet majore." Puchta (Inst. vol. i. § 179, note 1), Lange (Röm. Alt. vol. i. p. 155), and Hoffmann (l.c. p. 68) support this reading; but most authors concur in altering it as above.

⁴ Gell. xvi. 10, §§ 2-8. [Seneca, however (Ep. 114, 13), speaks of the fondness for antiquarian studies in his time, "Multi ex alieno seculo petunt verba, XII Tabulas loquuntur."]

It was a procedure in execution; but against whom? The answer depends on the interpretation of the words, “Aeris confessi rebusque jure judicatis.” The natural reading is, “For acknowledged money debts and judgments obtained by regular process of law (jure) there shall be thirty days’ grace.” The general opinion is that the aeris confessi referred to formal admission by a defendant in an action for money due, when he first appeared before the magistrate, of the incontrovertibility of the plaintiff’s claim,⁶ what in the later jurisprudence was called confessio in jure; and that the rebus jure judicatis referred to judgments by judices on remit from the magistrate in cases of disputed litigation.⁷ But this view of the matter is open to the objection that it excludes manus injectio on a party’s acknowledgment or confession where the cause of action was anything else than money resting-owing.⁸ The more probable explanation is that every acknowledgment before the magistrate in the initial stage of a litigation was regarded in the ⁵ Gell. xvi. 10, § 5. These two sentences are usually imported into the first Table, which regulates in jus vocatio; but comparison with chap. lxi. of the L. colon. Jul. Genetivae (Bruns, p. 111) shows that they related to manus injectio.

⁶ [Or informal admission when he has not properly contested the claim.]

⁷ Most modern civilians hold that a judgment required to be for a certain sum of money in order to warrant manus injectio. But, if the generally accepted reading of Gaius, iv. 48, be right, namely, that under the system of the legis actiones a judicial condemnation was in the ipsa res, and not in a pecuniary equivalent, there does not seem to be any authority for such an opinion. (This view of Gaius’s statement, however—which, it is admitted on all hands, requires some correction—has been vigorously combated by Brini, “Della condanna nelle leg. act.” in the Arch. Giurid. vol. xxi. (1878), p. 213 sq., and Montagnon, Sur la nature des condamnations civiles (Lyons, 1883), p. 6 sq. They hold that what Gaius really said was that from the first condemnations were always in a sum of money.)

⁸ There was, of course, no room for manus injectio on confession, or rather non-counter-vindication, in an actio sacramento in rem in reference to a movable at any time, or to land when the procedure was on the spot; for the vindicant had simply then and there to appropriate it.

decemviral period as res jure judicata; ⁹ for, although it is nowhere so stated, it is impossible to suppose that an admission or non-negation of a plaintiff's claim by the defendant was not followed by a magisterial finding or declaration, which was as much a judgment as the decision of the centumvirs or a judex on the justness or unjustness of a sacrament.¹⁰ From this point of view the aeris confessi of the Tables must have had reference to something else than confessio in jure; and this, as has already been observed, can only have been nexal indebtedness (p. 150). If, as some think, this was created not simply by a lender imposing obligation on a borrower by the words dare damnas esto, but by the latter acknowledging its existence in the words dare damnas sum, it would be difficult to conceive a more perfect illustration of aes confessum. But even without the debtor's verbal acknowledgment, his acceptance of the loan on the terms recited by his creditor in presence of the representatives of the people was a public recognition of indebtedness to which the epithet was hardly less appropriate. Gaius, in explaining the way in which an obligation was discharged by the copper and the scales,¹¹ says it was the proper course to be followed when the debt had arisen either per aes et libram or ex causa judicati; in the former case, he says, the debtor was called damnatus, in the latter judicatus or condemnatus. In his brief description of manus injectio,¹² he limits its application to the same two classes, the judicati and the damnati. There is not a word in either passage about the (in jure) confessus. No other explanation of the omission is possible but this, that such an one was regarded as judicatus. The aeris confessi of the Tables, therefore, must have referred to the case of the debtor whom Gaius calls damnatus,—him who had been laid under obligation per aes et libram and dare damnas esto; in other words, the nexus or nexal debtor.¹³

⁹ What else was the meaning of the brocard, "Confessus pro judicato habetur"?

¹⁰ [Cf. the addiction which terminated a cessio in jure.—Gai. ii. 24.]

¹¹ Gai. iii. 173-175.

¹² Gai. iv. 21.

¹³ Gaius includes amongst the damnati the heir whom a testator had burdened with a legacy by the words "dare damnas esto" (termed "legatum per damnationem," Gai. ii. 201). But this was unknown at the time of the enactment of the Tables; and the aeris confessi, therefore, can have referred only to the case of the nexus. See Appendix, Note F. [Cf. Carle, Origini, p. 206.]

The legis actio was competent, then, against either a nexus or a judgment-debtor (the latter including an in jure confessus); but only after thirty days from maturity of the debt in the one case, or of the judgment (or admission) in the other. It was apprehension of the debtor by the creditor himself; in its first stage, at least, an act of pure self-help. What accompanied and followed it in times anterior to the XII Tables it is impossible to say; probably there was an indefiniteness and uncertainty about the whole procedure which the new provisions were intended to abate. According to Gaius¹⁴ the cause of the arrest had to be stated by the creditor then and there,—for example, that the arrestee was due so much on a judgment, but had not paid, and that the manus injectio was in respect of the debt referred to. Whether nexal or judgment debtor, he had at once to be brought before the magistrate. But the purpose was not the same in both cases. In that of the nexal debtor, as has been explained in a previous section (p. 150), it was to give him an opportunity of proving by the mouths of the five witnesses of the nexi liberatio that his loan had been repaid, or he at any rate formally released by the lender; if he did not avail himself of it, the procedure, so far as he was concerned, was at an end, and the creditor at once and at his own hand carried him off in the exercise of his contractual right of detention.¹⁵ With a judgment-debtor it was different. He also was brought before the magistrate; but the object was that his creditor might obtain authority to carry him away and provisionally confine him in the domestic lock-up (domum ducere). Such a course, however, was avoided either (1) by instant payment or other implement of the judgment (ni judicatum facit), or (2) by the intervention of a vindex or champion.¹⁶ The position taken by the latter was not exactly that either of a surety or of an attorney for the judicatus

¹⁴ Gai. iv. 21.

¹⁵ Our only authority is Gellius; and, so far as his description goes, the proceedings subsequent to the first bringing of the arrestee before the magistrate (in jus ducito) are limited to the case of a judgment-debtor (judicatus). As pointed out on p. 151, some of them would have had no meaning in that of a nexal debtor arrested in respect of aes confessum.

¹⁶ Vindex = "qui in eo vim dicit," i.e. "in eo vim monstrat" (Schoell, XII Tab. reliquiae, p. 91). In the Lex col. Juliae Genetivae, cap. 61 (Bruns, p. 111), the corresponding phrase is "in eo vim faciet." [See supra, p. 182, n. 15.]

demanding a rehearing of the case; he appeared rather as a controverter in his own name of the right of the creditor to proceed further with his execution, on the ground that the judgment was invalid. This necessitated a new action between the creditor and the vindex, but to which the debtor was not a party. If it failed, then the vindex was liable for double the amount of the original debt,¹⁷ as a penalty on him for having improperly interfered with the course of justice; but on payment he had relief against the original debtor, who had been liberated through his intervention.¹⁸ Failing a vindex and failing payment, the creditor took his debtor home and put him, or at least was entitled to put him, in chains, whose weight was limited by the statute to fifteen pounds. The prisoner might live at his own cost if he pleased; but otherwise his creditor had to give him daily at least a pound of spelt. This provisional confinement was to continue for sixty days, to allow opportunity for arrangement; and during the last month the creditor had to produce his debtor in the comitium on three consecutive market-days, proclaiming aloud the amount for which he was detained, on the chance that some compassionate citizen might offer a ransom.¹⁹ If the third market-day passed without payment or compromise, there was a formal addictio or magisterial decree awarding the debtor to his creditor.²⁰ The debtor, says Gellius, capite poenas dabat,

¹⁷ Unger (l.c. n. 1) holds that the vindex, if he failed in his action with the creditor, lost his sacramentum, but was not liable any further; that the creditor might then proceed with his execution against his arrestee, and that it was against the latter that the amount of the debt was duplicated, as the penalty of his denial (involved in his putting forward the vindex) of the validity of the judgment. [Girard, Droit romain, p. 959, n. 3, suggests what seems not improbable, that the vindex by intervening was treated as having committed a delict, and must maintain his defence on that footing. This would explain the condemnation in duplum.]

¹⁸ He probably operated his relief by manus injectio pro judicato on his own account, on the ground of his payment for the debtor, technically depensum; for though Gaius (iv. 22) appears to attribute the introduction of that procedure to a Lex Publilia, yet there is reason to think that that statute merely extended to a sponsor what had previously been the practice in the case of a vas, a praes, and a vindex. Comp. Bekker, Aktionen, vol. i. p. 41, and see supra, p. 158.

¹⁹ [For a similar practice where debtors failed to pay wehrgeld, see the Salic Law, 58 (ed. Geffcken, 1898), noted by Girard, p. 959, n. 5.]

²⁰ Gellius (xx. 1, § 44) speaks of the magistrate's warrant to the creditor to carry home and incarcerate his debtor as the addictio. But as Livy constantly or was sold across the frontier as a slave; and if the judgment on which he had been incarcerated had been obtained by a plurality of creditors, they might cut his body in pieces and divide it, but without prejudice if any one had more or less than his fair share.

Such, says Gellius, was the law of the XII Tables; and so also says Quintilian fifty years earlier, and Tertullian fifty years later,²¹ although there is not a hint of it in Cicero, Livy, or Dionysius,²² or in the pages of any of the jurists. While there are still some very eminent authorities²³ who, like Gibbon, "prefer the literal sense of antiquity to the refinements of modern criticism," yet latterly the majority alike of jurists and historians seem to be of opinion that Gellius has put on the words of the Tables an interpretation they were never meant to bear. It is a little remarkable, however, that though they resent the idea of an actual section and partition of the debtor's body, very few of them find any difficulty in accepting the notion that his creditor or creditors might put him to death. Yet it is one that cannot well stand examination; the results to which it leads are too extravagant. For example: the punishment the XII Tables imposed upon manifest theft was slavery,—the thief became the slave of the individual whose goods he had stolen.²⁴ That of non-manifest theft was a pecuniary penalty,—twofold the value of the thing refers to judicati and addicti as distinct classes, the better opinion seems to be that the addictio was the final magisterial decree, when the provisional detention of the judicatus had failed to elicit a satisfactory arrangement.

²¹ Quint. Inst. Or. iii. 6, 84; Tertull. Apolog. 4. Their language is vague. Neither professes acquaintance with the words of the statute; and both admit that a sectio corporis had never been known in history.

²² It is mentioned, however, by Dio Cassius, writing a quarter of a century after Tertullian. See the fragments in Mai, Coll. script. vet. vol. ii. p. 144.

²³ Kohler, who applies the provisions of the Tables to the nexus as well as the judicatus and confessus, is one of them; see his Shakespeare, etc. p. 8. There is no denying that, with the aid of the comparative jurisprudence in which he is so profoundly versed, he makes out a strong case for the realistic interpretation he puts upon them. The results of his researches are summed up in a few sentences in his tractate Das Recht als Culturerscheinung (Würzburg, 1885), p. 17, quoted infra, Appendix, Note G. [Bourcart (trad. Muirhead), p. 268 n., gives a list of recent authors who accept the literal interpretation. It might be considerably increased. In particular, add Jhering, Vorgesch. d. Indoeurop. p. 78 sq.]

²⁴ Gell. xi. 18, § 8, xx. 1, § 7; Gai. iii. 189. [Gaius says there was a controversy as to whether it was actual slavery.]

that had been abstracted.²⁵ But if it had been the case that every judicatus who failed within three months to satisfy his creditor might be put to death, then the non-manifest thief, against whom a judgment had been obtained, must often in the end have suffered a penalty more serious than that which overtook him whose theft had been manifest,—slavery for the graver offence, death for the lighter.²⁶ Capite poenas dabat, therefore, cannot have meant death. But it is just as impossible that it can have meant slavery.²⁷ Indeed there is abundant evidence that the addictus, even when his two months of provisional detention were ended, was not only still de jure free, but was not capite minutus even as regarded citizenship or family rights, and that any property he had still remained his own.²⁸ The only other explanation is that “he paid the penalty²⁹ with his person,”³⁰ in contradistinction to “his means.”³¹ Caput is used in opposition to bona. Under the law of the Tables, unless when the debtor was sold beyond Tiber and thus made the slave of his foreign purchaser, the extent of the creditor’s right was to detain him in free bondage, making what use he could of his services, and exercising discipline over him as if he were a slave. But for the mis-

²⁵ Gai. iii. 190.

²⁶ Even the man sentenced to twenty-five asses for a petty assault, and who could not pay it, might in this view have had to suffer death as the alternative!

²⁷ Capitis poena, capital punishment, meant death, slavery, or deprivation of citizenship; and this no doubt accounts for the all but universally prevalent idea that by capite poenas dabat the Tables must have meant one or other of them.

²⁸ It is true that Dionysius (vi. 36) speaks of a creditor incarcerating not only his debtor but also the latter’s two sons, and that he once or twice indicates that the debtor’s goods were likewise seized. But those instances were anterior to the law of the Tables, and before the power of creditors exercising their right of self-redress had been made matter of statutory regulation. The servitium to which an addictus was subjected was essentially a punishment. But it was a principle of Roman law that punishment affected only the wrongdoer. A man’s wife and children were not sent into exile, or banishment, or slavery with him on account of his offence; and there is no authority for holding that they were treated differently when the punishment was bondage without loss of either freedom or citizenship.

²⁹ More accurately, “made amends” (Curtius, Gr. Etym. No. 373).

³⁰ A very familiar signification of caput, as in the old definition of tutela in Inst. i. 13, i,—“Vis ac potestas in capite libero,” etc.

³¹ “Fama et corpore judicati atque addicti creditoribus satisfaciebant, poenaeque in vicem fidei cesserat” (Liv. vi. 34, § 2).

taken notion that a creditor was entitled after the expiry of the three months to put his debtor to death,—of which there is not a single instance on record,—it is unlikely that so many would have thought of imputing to the partis secanto such an inhuman meaning as that a plurality of creditors might cut the body of their addictus in pieces and each take a share.

Those who hold that capite poenas dabat meant death can hardly avoid this interpretation of the partis secanto; but console themselves, like Gellius, with the conviction that it was never meant to be enforced. Those, again, who hold that the former of these phrases implied slavery, assume that the second meant joint ownership of the slave or distribution of the price obtained for him; while some, who are of opinion that addictio involved the passing of the debtor's familia to his creditor, hold that this also fell within the sectio. There is no objection to the employment of the word secare in the sense of "distribute"; for he who had bought a confiscated estate in mass, and afterwards resold it in lots, was called bonorum sector; ⁸² and both Cicero and Varro speak of sectio personae when meaning nothing more than dispersal of his estate.⁸³ But the application of the phrase simply to the case of the detention of a debtor as a free bondman does not seem altogether appropriate, and renders the "si plus minusve secuerunt se fraude esto" harder than ever to explain.⁸⁴ The difficulty disappears at once if we make a slight rearrange-

⁸² [As to the application of the term sector to the purchaser of booty in mass who afterwards sells in single lots, see Jhering, Vorgesch. d. Indoeurop. p. 402. On the derivation of the word sector, see Schulin, Lehrbuch, p. 369, n. 1; A. Gellius (xviii. 9); Festus (v. Sectores). References in Gellius (l.c.) show its connection with an old verb secēre, meaning to declare (root sak, sag, as in sagen)—the sector being one who declares aloud the price he will give for the goods.]

⁸³ Cic. Philipp. ii. 26, § 65, xiii. 14, § 30; Varro, De R. R. 10, 4 (Bruns, p. 311). In like manner the "praedes vendere jus potestasque esto" of the Lex Malacitana (temp. Domitian, § 64, Bruns, p. 139) can have meant no more than sale of the estates of the defaulting sureties.

⁸⁴ One of the first to condemn the Gellian interpretation of partis secanto was Dr. Taylor, in his Commentarius ad l. decemviralem de inope debitore in partis dissecando (Cambridge, 1742). He himself understands it thus (p. 15): "Qui uni debet, uni addictus serviat; qui pluribus, ejus addicti partis, i.e. operas, servitia, ministeria communes illi foeneratores communiter dividunt; communis sit servus eorum qui quidem adfuerint; et sine fraude esto, si ceteri toties pro-citati suas quoque partis in debitore non vindicaverint."

ment of the provisions brought under our notice by Gellius, and accept the suggestion that the plurality of creditors he speaks of can have referred only to the case of co-heirs taking proceedings against a debtor of their predecessor's.⁸⁵ Rearrangement is quite legitimate,—some rearrangement indeed is imperative if the words of the Tables are to be reconstructed.⁸⁶ On consideration of the whole matter, the explanation that most commends itself to me is this,—that where there was but one creditor concerned, and the two months of provisional detention expired without payment, intervention of a vindex, or compromise of some sort, the debtor definitively became his creditor's free bondman in virtue of the magisterial addictio;⁸⁷ but that where co-heirs were concerned, as bondage and service to all of them would have been inconvenient if not impossible when they were not to continue to possess the inheritance in common, the debtor was sent over Tiber and sold as a slave, and the price got for him divided amongst them. If one or other got more than his fair share, no harm was done; for the disproportion would eventually be redressed in an action of partition (actio familiae erciscundae).⁸⁸

⁸⁵ The suggestion is Voigt's (XII Tafeln, vol. ii. p. 361). He puts it that once a debtor was domum ductus it was impossible for any other creditor to proceed with manus injectio. Co-heirs were on a different footing; for, by a law of the Tables, each was entitled to proceed against a hereditary debtor only for so much of the debt as corresponded to his share of the inheritance. But Voigt holds—wrongly, as I think—that what they divided was the debtor himself, the members of his family, and his goods.

⁸⁶ Gellius quotes the law as "Tertiis nundinis partis secanto"; whereas immediately after the "Tertiis nundinis" must have come the provision as to what was to be done with the debtor when there was only one arresting creditor. That he explains narrativè.

⁸⁷ There is room for speculation as to what were the actual words of the statute. Quintilian (Inst. Or. vii. 3, 26) says: "Addictus, quem lex servire, donec solverit, jubet"; and in Decl. 311: "Quid enim lex dicit? addictus, donec solverit, serviat." Voigt (Execution, p. 88) supposes Quintilian to refer to the Poetilian law. May it not have been to the XII Tables?

⁸⁸ Reconstructions are always hazardous; and Krüger and Jhering have recently used their pens in sympathetic warning. But, on the footing above explained, the provision of the Tables may have been something like this: "Tertiis nundinis addicitor. Capite poenas dato. Si plures sunt, trans Tiberim peregre venum danto: partis secanto. Si plus minusve secuerunt, se fraude esto."—On the third market-day there shall be decree of addiction. The addictus shall then pay the penalty with his person. If there be several creditors

The abuses to which manus injectio gave rise, particularly in the case of nexal debtors, have already been referred to (§§ 20, 31). The nexi were probably much more numerous than the judicati (or more properly addicti); and, being in great part the victims of innocent misfortune, it was the sufferings they endured at the hands of relentless creditors that so often roused the sympathies and indignation of the populace, and more than once brought the republic to the verge of dissolution. But the judgment-debtors had suffered along with them; and some of the provisions of the Poetilian law (p. 153) were meant to protect them against the needless and unjustifiable severity that had characterised their treatment by their detaining creditors. The manus injectio itself was not abolished, nor the possible intervention of a vindex; neither were the domum ductio that followed, and the provisional imprisonment, with the light chains authorised by the Tables while it lasted; nor was the formal addictio of the debtor to his creditor when the sixty days had expired without arrangement.⁸⁹ But after addiction, if it was for nothing more than civil debt, there were to be no more dungeons and stripes, fetters and footblocks; the creditor was to treat his debtor and his industry as a source of profit that would in time diminish and possibly extinguish his indebtedness, rather to whom he is awarded, let them sell him beyond Tiber and divide the price. If any of them have got more or less than his fair share, this shall not prejudice them." [Another ingenious explanation has been offered by Schulin, Lehrbuch, p. 535 (cited by Cuq, p. 425). He suggests that the words partis secanto should read partis secunto, the word secunto coming from the old verb secere, meaning to declare (supra, n. 32), so that the meaning of the passage "Si plus minusve," etc. would be that the several creditors in conducting their debtor before the praetor would announce the shares which each had. An error in the declaration was not to prejudice them. To all such explanations, however, including that of our author, there is the fatal objection that they contradict the express statements of the old writers. Africanus, whose words are given by Gellius (l.c.), is quite distinct, and he must have known the construction put upon the law by the jurists of the republic, as, for instance, by Sextus Aelius in his Tripertitum. There is nothing more astonishing in a creditor being allowed to kill his debtor than in a father being allowed to kill his son.]

⁸⁹ Proof abounds in Plautus and Terence, Cicero, Seneca, Quintilian, and Gellius; see also the Lex col. Juliae Genetivae of 710 u.c. cap. 61 (Bruns, p. 111). The latter enactment contains the provision—"jure civili vinctum habeto." [Girard, p. 960, thinks the lex Poetilia suppressed the sixty days' detention.]

than as an object upon which he might perpetrate any cruelty by way of punishment. Although the edict of P. Rutilius of 647 U.C. provided a creditor with machinery for attacking the estate of his debtor, yet he had still the alternative of incarceration. This, as already shown (pp. 93, 153), might be avoided under the Julian law of cessio by the debtor's making a complete surrender of his goods to his creditor; but, failing such surrender, incarceration continued to be resorted to even under the legislation of Justinian.⁴⁰ Latterly, however, it was not by manus injectio that the incarceration was effected; for it went out of use with the definitive establishment of the formular system of procedure.⁴¹

It was as directed against nexal and judgment debtors that manus injectio was of most importance, and chiefly made its mark in history. But there were other cases in which it was resorted to under special statutory authority, where a remedy seemed advisable more sharp and summary than that by ordinary action. In some of these it was spoken of as manus injectio pro judicato (i.e. as if upon a judgment); in others as simple manus injectio (manus injectio pura). In the first the arrestee was not allowed to dispute his alleged indebtedness in person; he could do so only through a vindex; and if no one intervened for him in that character, he was carried off and dealt with by his arresting creditor as if a judgment had been obtained against him. A person who, having by sponsio become surety for another, had been required to pay for him, was entitled by a Publilian law of uncertain date to deal in this way with the principal debtor if he did not within six months refund what had been paid (depensum) on his account; but this was probably nothing more than an extension to a sponsor of the remedy previously competent to the vas, the praes, and the vindex (p. 157). Gaius states that the same procedure was sanctioned by statute in a variety of other cases; and there is reason for thinking that it was employed by a legatee against an heir delaying to pay a legacy bequeathed in the words "heres dare damnas esto."⁴² In simple manus injectio the arrestee was not required to find a vindex, but might himself dispute the verity of the charge made against him, under penalty, however, of a duplication of his liability if he failed in his defence; as, for example, when proceedings were instituted against a usurer (under the Marcian law) to compel him to repay interest taken by him beyond the legal rate, or against a legatee (under the Furian law) to compel him to refund what he had taken by way of legacy in excess of what that law allowed. By a certain Lex Vallia, probably in the latter half of the sixth century of the City, this manus injectio pura was substituted for that pro judicato in all cases in which the ground of arrest was neither judgment nor depensum.⁴³

⁴⁰ See § 31, note 29.

⁴¹ Gaius (iv. 30) attributes the establishment of the formular system (§ 71) to the Aebutian law in the beginning of the sixth century, and the Julian judiciary laws in the time of Augustus; but it is clear (note 39) that it could not have been till after 710 U.C. that manus injectio disappeared.

SECTION 37.—THE LEGIS ACTIO PER PIGNORIS CAPIONEM¹

In the ritual of the actio sacramenti, as described in a previous section (§ 34), the vis civilis et festucaria was a reminiscence of the vera solida vis with which men settled their disputes about property in the earliest infancy of the commonwealth. Manus injectio was a survival from times when the wronged was held entitled to lay hands upon the wrongdoer, and himself subject him to punishment; custom and legislation intervened merely to regulate the conditions and mode of exercise of what essentially was still self-help. In pignoris capio self-help was likewise the dominant idea. It may be fairly enough described by the single word "distress,"—the taking by one man of property belonging to another, in satisfaction of or in security for a debt due by the latter, but which ⁴² Gai. ii. 201, compared with iii. 175 and iv. 21.

⁴³ On manus injectio pro judicato and pura, see Gai. iv. 22-25, and note 18 above. Manus injectio upon nexal debt had been abolished long before the Vallian law.

¹ To the literature in § 33, note 1, may be added Degenkolb, Die lex Hieronica (Berlin, 1861), p. 95 sq.; Jhering, Geist, vol. i. § 11c; Voigt, XII Tafeln, vol. i. p. 502 sq. [For a comparative view see Maine, Early Institutions, p. 275 sq.; D'Arbois de Jubainville, in Nouv. Rev. Hist. 1892, p. 373; Pollock and Maitland, Hist. of English Law, ii. p. 573; Jenks, Law and Politics in the Middle Ages, p. 263 sq.]

he had failed to pay.³ The taking did not proceed upon any judgment, nor did it require the warrant of a magistrate; it might be resorted to even in the absence of the debtor; but it required to be accompanied by certain words of style, spoken probably in the presence of witnesses.⁸

The remedy, however, was not competent to creditors generally, but limited to a few special cases. Gaius says of it that by customary law a soldier might distrain upon his paymaster for his pay,⁴ and a knight for the sum allowed him for the purchase of a charger or for his forage money.⁵ By the XII Tables distress was authorised at the instance of the vendor of an animal for sacrifice against the vendee who failed to pay for it; and so it was at the instance of a husbandman against a neighbour for the hire⁶ of a plough-ox given in location on purpose thereby to raise money for a periodical offering to Jupiter Dapalis.⁷ The farmers of the revenue (publicani) were also empowered by the contracts entered into by them with the censors to make use of the same remedy against persons whose rates or taxes (vectigalia) were in arrear.⁸ Whether this exhausted the list of cases in which it was competent it is of course impossible to say.⁹

³ [One theory is that p. c. was an extension of the practice of magistrates in matters concerning the State—compelling obedience to their orders by seizure, through their officials, of property belonging to the party refusing to obey—the pignus being in this case destroyed, if resistance was continued. See Girard, p. 956.]

⁸ Gai. iv. 29.

⁴ It was not until the year 348 U.C. that soldiers were paid from the public purse (Liv. iv. 59).

⁵ Gai. iv. 27.

⁶ [I.e. the consideration money to be given. The informal contracts of sale and location giving rise to no action by the old jus civile the vendor and locator would have been, apart from the pignoris capio, without a remedy.]

⁷ Gai. iv. 28; Cato, De R. R. §§ 50, 131, 132; Paul. Diac. v. Daps (Müll. p. 68).

⁸ Gai. iv. 28.

⁹ Bethmann-Hollweg (Röm. CP. vol. i. p. 204, note 13) and Karlowa (Röm. CP. p. 216) are of opinion that it was resorted to in the case of damnum infectum, i.e., that, when a man had reason to apprehend damage from (say) the ruinous state of his neighbour's house, he might if necessary at his own hand enter into possession of it and make the requisite repairs. This view is combated by Bekker (Aktionen, vol. i. p. 45) and by Burckhard (Die cautio damni infecti, Glück-Burckhard, vol. ii. p. 73 sq.); but receives some countenance from the words of Gaius (iv. 31), who, after saying that it was still competent to proceed by legis actio on account of damnum infectum, adds that no one any longer cared to do so, "sed potius stipulatione, quae in edicto proposita est, obligat adversarium suum; itaque et commodius jus et plenius est [quam] per pignoris [caponem]."

Quite as difficult is it to determine what was the effect of the distress. An observation of Gaius's,¹⁰ in speaking of the action which, under the formular system of procedure, was granted to a revenue collector in place of the legis actio per pignoris capionem, favours the assumption that the debtor had the right, within a limited period, to redeem his property from the distrainer; and the time is by some supposed to have been two months, the term of redemption of the later pignus in causa judicati captum.¹¹ If indebtedness was admitted, one can understand that the debtor might either abandon the thing distrained to his creditor if it did not greatly exceed in value the amount of the debt, or claim its redemption on payment of what was due, with possibly a small addition as a fine. At the same time it is obvious that prolongation of this power of redemption even for two months would in some cases have defeated the purpose of the distress; for example, the farmer who had to make his offering to Jupiter Dapalis could not postpone it, and delay in converting his pignus into money must often have been extremely inconvenient to a soldier. It is by no means improbable, therefore, that, even when the debt was not disputed, the power of redemption was in some cases more circumscribed than in others. But what if the existence of the debt was either wholly or partially denied? It cannot be doubted that in such a case the legitimacy of the distress might be called in question in a judicial process; otherwise pignoris capio might have become a cloak for robbery. We are very much in the dark, however, as to the course of procedure. Jhering, founding on some expressions of Cicero's,¹² conjectures that, whether the debt was disputed or not, the distrainer could neither sell nor definitively appropriate his pignus without

(The word "quam" is not in the MS.; "pignoris" is the last word in the page, and the whole of that which follows is illegible. Most editors regard "est" as the last word of the sentence, and make "per pignoris capionem" the commencement of a new paragraph. But, as the matter of pignoris capio is apparently exhausted in §§ 26-29, and one would naturally expect an indication of the particular procedure which was surpassed in convenience and amplitude by the praetorian stipulation, it seems more reasonable to assume that the transcriber accidentally omitted the letter "q"—the ordinary contraction for "quam," and that the passage should read as printed above.) [Cf. Wlassak, Processgesetze, i. p. 259 sq.; Cuq, p. 355; Girard, p. 972, n. 2.]

¹⁰ Gai. iv. 32.

¹¹ Dig. xlii. 1, fr. 31.

¹² Cic. In Verr. II. iii. 11, § 27.

magisterial authority,—that in every case he was bound to institute proceedings in justification of his caption, and to take in them the position of plaintiff.¹³ The idea is ingenious, and puts the pignoris capio in a new and interesting light. It makes it, like the sacramentum and (in many cases) the manus injectio, a summary means of raising a question of right, for whose judicial arbitrament no other process of law was open; with this additional advantage,—that it secured instant satisfaction to the raiser of it in the event of the question being determined in his favour. If against him, the inevitable result, in substance at least, must have been a judgment that he had no right to retain his pledge, with probably a finding that he was further liable to its owner in the value of it, as a punishment for his precipitancy.¹⁴

SECTION 38.—JUDICIAL OR QUASI-JUDICIAL PROCEDURE OUTSIDE THE LEGIS ACTIONES

Whatever may have been the extent of the field covered by the actions of the law, it is very manifest that they did not altogether exclude other judicial or quasi-judicial agencies. The supreme magistrate every now and then was called upon to intervene in matters brought under his cognisance by petition or complaint, and in which his aid was sought not so much to protect a vested right of property or claim as to maintain public order, or prevent the occurrence or continuance of a state of matters that might prove prejudicial to family or individual interests. The party whose conduct was complained of was not brought into court (in jus vocatus) by the complainer, but usually cited by the magistrate if the complaint seemed to him relevant. The process was not an action, with its stages in jure and in judicio, but an inquiry (cognitio) conducted from first to last by the magistrate himself; and his finding, unless it was a dismissal of the complaint or petition, was embodied in an order (decretum, interdictum), which it was for him to enforce by such means as he thought fit,—manu militari, or by fine or imprisonment.

¹³ [Jhering, Geist, i. 158 sq. This theory of Jhering is ill-supported by Gai. iv. 29, 32, but is followed by Sohm, Inst. d. R. R. § 35, and semble, by Girard, p. 956. For other theories, see Wlassak, Processgesetze, i. 252; Jobbé-Duval, La Procédure Civile, p. 10.]

¹⁴ This was according to the spirit of the early system, which endeavoured to check reckless or dishonest litigation by penalties; e.g. forfeiture of the summa sacramenti and duplication of the value of unrestored property and profits in the sacramental procedure; duplication of the value of the cause when judgment was against the defendant in an action upon an engagement embodied in a lex Mancipii or lex nexi; duplication against a vindex who interfered ineffectually in manus injectio against a judgment-debtor; duplication against an heir who refused without judicial compulsion to pay a legacy bequeathed per damnationem (Gai. ii. 282); the addition of one-third more by way of penalty against a debtor found liable in an actio certae creditae pecuniae (Gai. iv. 171), etc.

Some jurists are disposed to give a very wide range to this magisterial intervention. One of its most important manifestations was in connection with disputes about the occupancy of the public domain lands. These did not belong in property to their occupants (p. 87); so that an action founded on ownership was out of the question. But as the occupancy was not only recognised but sanctioned by the state, it was right, indeed necessary in the interest of public order, that it should be protected against disturbance. In the measures resorted to for its protection Niebuhr recognised the origin of the famous possessory interdict uti possidetis; and although opinions differ as to whether protection of the better right or prevention of a breach of the peace was what primarily influenced the magistrate's intervention, there is a pretty general accord in accepting this view. It may well be that originally the procedure was simpler than that described by Gaius;¹ but it can hardly be doubted that it commenced with a prohibition of the disturbance of the status quo, and was followed when necessary by an inquiry and finding as to which of the disputants was really in possession, and which of them therefore, by persisting in his pretensions, was contravening the interdict. Another illustration of this magisterial intervention is to be found in the interdiction of a spendthrift (p. 121),—a decree depriving of his power of administration a man who was squandering his family estate and reducing his children to penury;² a third presents itself in the removal of a tutor from office on the ground of negligence or maladministration, brought under the notice of the magistrate by any third party in what was called postulatio suspecti tutoris (p. 120); and a fourth in the putting of a creditor in possession of the goods of an insolvent debtor, which must have been common enough even before the general bankruptcy regulations of the Rutilian edict (p. 153). These are to be taken merely as examples of this magisterial intervention, which manifested itself in very various directions; indeed it does not seem to be going too far to assume that, although the classification belongs to a later period, the interdicts already in use were not confined to the prohibitory, but included many that were either exhibitory or restitutory,—that is to say, in which the party complained of was ordered to produce or restore something in which the complainer had an interest.³ It is easy to see how largely such procedure might be utilised for remedying the grievances of persons who, from defect of complete legal title, want of statutory authority, or otherwise, were not in a position to avail themselves of the ordinary “actions of the law.”

¹ Gai. iv. §§ 160, 166-170; infra, p. 346.

² Ulpian (in Dig. xxvii. 10, fr. 1, pr.) says that this interdiction was authorised by the XII Tables; Paulus (Sent. iii. 4a, § 7) attributes it to custom (mores). But both probably are right. The practice was customary before the

In one of the Valerio-Horatian laws consequent on the second secession of the plebeians there was mention of ten judges (judices decemviri), whose persons were declared as inviolable as those of the tribunes of the people and the plebeian aediles. It has already been explained (pp. 74, 82) that those were a body of judges elected to officiate on remit from a tribune or aedile acting as jus dicens in questions arising between members of the plebeian body.⁴ We are without details as to the institution of this plebeian judicatory, the questions that fell under its cognisance, the forms of process employed, the law administered by it, and the effect of its judgments. The tribunes were not invested with the jurisdictional any more than the military imperium, and manifestly were not magistrates qualified to superintend and direct the course of a legis Tables; these confirmed it, with this new feature (Ulp. Frag. xii. 2), that the interdicted spendthrift was to be in the guardianship of his agnates.

³ Gai. iv. §§ 140, 142.

⁴ See Schwegler, Röm. Gesch. vol. ii. p. 279; Hartmann, Der Ordo jud. privator. (Göttingen, 1859), p. 87 sq.; Huschke, Das alte röm. Jahr, p. 301, note 206; Voigt, XII Tafeln, vol. i. p. 634 sq.

actio. One can understand that, prior to the enactment of the XII Tables, but after the constitutional recognition of the plebs as a quasi-corporation with its own officials and its own council, they may have thought it expedient, because of the uncertainty of the law, and the scant justice their members got from patrician magistrates and judges, to invest their presidents with jurisdictional powers, and elect some of their own number to act under them as judices, and in this way to some extent mitigate one of their grievances, the tribunes being fettered by no strict rules in formulating the question at issue, and the judges—who probably acted singly and not collegiately—determining it with equal freedom, untrammelled by statutory practice. But after the promulgation of the Tables, establishing a written law that was to apply to all the citizens alike, the reason for the maintenance of this plebeian tribunal is far from obvious. Did its members still act under a reference from a tribune or aedile? Or did they continue to be elected annually as a body independent of the tribunes and aediles, but from which the supreme magistrate (consul or praetor) was required to select a judex when both the parties were plebeians and formulated a demand to that effect? Whichever view may deserve preference, it may reasonably be inferred from the absence of further allusion to it in the pages of the historians, that the institution did not long survive; the equalisation of the orders in matters social and political deprived it of its raison d'être.⁵

As all in a manner exercising judicial or quasi-judicial functions must also be mentioned the pontiffs, the consuls and afterwards the censors as magistri morum, the chiefs of the gentes within the gentile corporations, and heads of families

⁵ Hartmann (Ordo, p. 109) attributes the decadence of this plebeian tribunal to the fact that the Lex Hortensia of 468 made the nundinae lawful court days (dies fasti), and so made it possible for the country folks coming to the city to market to carry on their processes before the praetor. As observed in a previous section (p. 74), there is no sufficient ground for identifying the plebeian judices decemviri with the decemviri litibus judicandis who, Pomponius says (Dig. i. 2, fr. 2, § 29), were made presidents of the centumviral court early in the sixth century of the City. [Voigt's opinion, founded upon Pomponius and an inscription (C. I. L. i. 38), is that by the lex Hortensia the decemviri of the lex Valeria Horatia became the decemviri stlitibus judicandis with jurisdiction extended to patricians, Röm. RG. Beil. I.; contra, Wlassak, Processgesetze, i. p. 144 sq.]

within their households. While it may be the fact that with the enactment of the XII Tables the jurisdiction of the pontiffs⁶ was materially narrowed, yet it certainly did not disappear; witness the famous case in which Cicero made before them the oration of which he was so proud pro domo sua. In the time of the kings, with a variety of laws whose contravention entailed consecratio capitis, and with the sacramental procedure in their hands, the judicial duties of the pontiffs must have been somewhat onerous. But even after these had devolved on secular judges, and the sacer esto had all but disappeared from the sanctions of penal statutes, there were still not a few matters in which their judicial functions could not be dispensed with. It was the pontifex maximus that alone exercised jurisdiction and discipline over vestals and flamens. It may be that, with the positive declaration of the Tables, uti legassit . . . ita jus esto, he and his colleagues were no longer called upon to decide and report to the comitia whether or not a citizen's testamentary intentions were such as religion and law could sanction; but their assistance long continued to be indispensable in an adrogation, — the ceremony could not proceed until they had investigated the circumstances (cognitio), embodied their finding in a judgment (decretum), and dissociated the adrogatus from the cult of his father's house (alienatio sacrorum). It was the pontiffs that determined what were impediments to marriage, that were judges in contraventions of the annus luctus, that not only performed the ceremony of diffareation but were judges of its legality. They alone could determine whether land or buildings or movables were excluded from commerce on the ground of their being sacred or religious. It has been maintained that, as charged with the cognisance of perjury and disregard of an oath, they really exercised jurisdiction in questions of breach of contract or engagement. It is extremely probable that at one time it was within their province to impose a penalty for violation of a promissory oath; but during the earlier republic the action of the consuls and censors as guardians of public morals,⁷ and the social and political disqualifications and pecuniary penalties with which they visited persons who had been guilty of perjury or gross perfidy, did more than any intervention of the pontiffs to foster fidelity to engagements. Through the same agency the exercise of a variety of rights was controlled and kept within bounds whose abuse could not be made matter of action,—the husband's power over his wife, the father's over his children. It was not on light grounds, indeed, that the majesty of the paterfamilias within the household could be called in question; but only when he forgot that in the exercise of serious discipline within his family he was bound to act judicially. For he also was a judge,—judex domesticus, as he is sometimes called;⁸ required, however, in all cases of gravity to invoke the advice of his kinsfolk as a family council.⁹ On him lay the duty of controlling his family; if he failed to do so he was himself in danger of censorial animadversion. That his gens also, if he were a patrician, had some supervision and power of calling him to account is extremely probable; every corporation had it more or less over its members; but neither historians nor jurists give us any definite information.¹⁰

⁶ Comp. Hüllmann, Jus pontificium der Römer (Bonn, 1837); Cauvet, Le droit pontifical chez les anciens Romains (Caen, 1869); Bouché-Leclercq, Les Pontifes de l'ancienne Rome (Paris, 1871; Marquardt, Röm. Staatsverwalt. vol. iii. p. 290 sq. [Girard, p. 954, n. 7.]

Between citizens and foreigners, with whom Rome was in alliance by a treaty conferring reciprocal right of action (actio), the proceedings took the form known as recuperatio.¹¹

⁷ See Jarcke, Darstellung des censorischen Strafrechts d. Römer (Bonn, 1824); Karlowa, Röm. RG. i. p. 236 sq.

⁸ See § 9, note 29.

⁹ In 447 U.C. the censors removed L. Annius from the senate because he had divorced his wife without laying the matter before the consilium (Val. Max. ii. 9, 2). There is no recorded instance of the interference of the censors on account of abuse of the patria potestas; but it can hardly be doubted that the interests of children would no more be neglected by them than those of a wife.

¹⁰ Livy (vi. 20, §§ 13, 14) speaks of a nota gentilicia; but he is in fact referring to a decree of the Manlian gens, forbidding that any member of it should afterwards be called Marcus. See Voigt, XII Tafeln, vol. ii. § 170.

¹¹ See supra, § 25, and Festus, v. Reciperatio (Bruns, p. 286). Comp. Ph. E. Huschke, De recuperatoribus, in I. H. Huschke's Analecta litteraria (Leipsic, 1826), pp. 208-253; Collman, De Romanor. jud. recuperatorio, Berlin, 1835; Carl Sell, Die recuperatio der Römer, Brunswick, 1837; Huschke (rev. Sell), in Richter's Krit. Jahrb. vol. i. (1837), pp. 868-911; Voigt, Jus nat. etc. vol. ii. §§ 28-32; Karlowa, Röm. CP. pp. 218-230. [Wlassak, Processgesetze, ii. p. 308 sq.]

A foreigner could not be a party to a legis actio, nor could a Roman citizen in foreign territory claim the benefit of the laws and civil procedure there prevailing. Yet, where commercium (p. 107) had been established between them, matters of dispute must occasionally have arisen in connection with their trading and other transactions, demanding the intervention of a tribunal for their settlement. It was therefore usually provided in the treaty conceding reciprocal commercium that recuperatio should run along with it. This was an international process, modelled to some extent upon and deriving some of its technical terms from the fetial clarigatio. In the Cassian treaty of 262 U.C.—and no doubt it was the universal practice whether expressed or not—it was provided that it should be instituted in the forum contractus. The generally accepted opinion is that it commenced with what was called a condictio,—a formal and public requisition by the plaintiff to the defendant to attend on the thirtieth day thereafter, before a competent magistrate of the state in which the process was raised, in order that, if there was no settlement in the interval, the matter of dispute might be formulated and sent to recuperators for trial. The adjustment of the issue on the thirtieth day (condictus dies) was the work of the magistrate; he heard what parties had to say in plaint and defence, and then put in simple shape the points of fact and law arising on them, authorising the recuperators to find for plaintiff or defendant according to circumstances. The recuperators were sometimes three, sometimes five, sometimes still more numerous, but always in odd number; whether the nationality of both parties required to be represented does not appear. The day appointed for further procedure before them, usually the third, was called status dies. So imperative was it that parties should appear at both stages that in Rome status condictusve dies cum hoste was a valid excuse for a man's absence from proceedings in a legis actio, and relieved a soldier from joining the ranks.¹² Expedition

¹² From the order in which the two words occur in various passages in the lay writers, Karlowa is of opinion—contrary to the ordinary interpretation of the definitions of status dies in Festus, v. Status (Bruns, p. 295), and Macrob. i. 16, § 14—that this was the first term of appearance before the magistrate; that the condictio was given in his presence; that the condictus dies was not the thirtieth day after the condictio, but, if circumstances justified it, might even be being in most cases a matter of importance, the recuperators were required to give judgment within ten days. How execution proceeded upon it, if it were for the plaintiff, does not clearly appear; Voigt,¹³ founding on a few words in Festus,¹⁴ concludes it must have been by something like the pignoris capio explained in last section.

This recuperatory procedure in time came to be resorted to in some cases even where both parties were citizens.¹⁵ There are numerous instances of it in Cicero; and it is remarkable that in most of the purely praetorian actions ex delicto the remit was not to a judex but to recuperators. The explanation may be in the comparative summariness of the remedy.

the next; and that the proceedings before the recuperatores might be at any time convenient for all parties, so long as they were finished within ten days from the remit to them. [See Momms. SR. iii. p. 602 sq.]

¹³ Jus nat. etc. vol. ii. p. 195.

¹⁴ Festus, v. Nancitor (Bruns, p. 274): "In foedere Latino, 'Si quid pignoris nanciscitur, sibi habeto.'"

¹⁵ [See Wlassak, Processgesetze, ii. 309 sq., who holds that originally a unus judex might be appointed alternatively to recuperators in suits with peregrins.]

CHAPTER V

THE STIPULATION AND THE LEGIS ACTIO PER CONDICTIONEM

SECTION 39.—INTRODUCTION OF THE STIPULATION¹

FEW events in the history of the private law were followed by more far-reaching consequences than the introduction of the stipulation. It exercised an enormous influence on the law of contract; for by means of it there was created a unilateral obligation that in time became adaptable to almost every conceivable undertaking by one man in favour of another. By the use of certain words of style in the form of question and answer, any lawful agreement could thereby be made not only morally but legally binding; so that much which previously had no other guarantee than a man's sense of honour now passed directly under the protection of the tribunals. Stipulations became the complement of engagements which without them rested simply on good faith; as when a vendor gave his stipulatory promise to his vendee to guarantee peaceable possession of the thing sold or its freedom from faults, and the vendee in turn gave his promise for payment of the price. The question and answer in the form prescribed by law made the engagement fast and sure. Hence the generic name of the contract; for Paul's derivation of it from stipulum, "firm," is much to be preferred to the earlier and more fanciful ones from stips or stipula.² It was round the stipulation that the jurists grouped most of their disquisitions upon the general doctrines of the law of contract,—capacity of parties, requisites of consent, consequences of fraud, error, and intimidation, effects of conditions and specifications of time, and so forth. It may well be said, therefore, that its introduction marked an epoch in the history of the law.

¹ Literature: Liebe, Die Stipulation u. das einfache Versprechen (Brunswick, 1840); Schmidt (rev. Liebe), in Richter's Krit. Jahrb. vol. v. pp. 869 sq., 961 sq.; Gneist, Die formellen Verträge d. röm. Rechts (Berlin, 1845), p. 113 sq.; Heimbach, Die Lehre vom Creditum, Leipsic, 1849; Danz, Der sacrale Schutz im röm. Rechte (Jena, 1857), pp. 102-142, 236 sq.; Schlesinger, Zur Lehre von den Formalcontracten (Leipsic, 1858), § 2; Voigt, Jus nat. etc. d. Röm. vol. ii. § 88, vol. iv. Beilage xix.; Girtanner, Die Stipulation, Kiel, 1859; Bekker, Aktionen, vol. i. pp. 382-401; Karsten, Die Stipulation, Rostock, 1878; [Voigt, Röm. RG. § 7].

And yet there is no certainty either as to the time or as to the manner of its introduction. So far as appears, it was unknown at the time of the compilation of the XII Tables, at least in private life; and one of the first unmistakable allusions to it is in the Aquilian law of 467 U.C.³ The mention of it in that enactment, however, is with regard to a phase of it which cannot have been reached for some years after it had come into use; and the probability is that it originated before the middle of the fifth century. In its earliest days it bore the name not of stipulatio but of sponsio; for the reason that the interrogatory of the party becoming creditor was invariably formulated with the word spondes—e.g. centum dare spondes?—while the answer was simply spondeo. There has been much speculation as to the significance of the word.⁴ Modern criticism has three theories,—(1) that it was the verbal remnant of the nexum, after the business with the copper and the scales had gone into disuse;⁵ (2) that it was evolved out of the oath of covenant at the great altar of Hercules or the appeal to Fides

² Stipulum,—Paul. Sent. v. 7, 1, Just. Inst. iii. 15, pr.; Stips,—Fest. v. Stipem (Bruns, p. 295), Varro, De L. L. v. 182 (Bruns, p. 303); Stipula,—Isidore, Orig. v. 24, § 30 (Bruns, p. 327). [Jhering (Geist d. r. R. iii. § 46, n. 747) thinks that the derivation is from stips (i.e. stipes, staff, Sanscrit sthā), stipulum being derived from stipes, as indicated in the Institutes.]

³ Gai. iii. 215. The date is not absolutely certain. [See Girard, p. 402, n. 5.]

⁴ See Festus, v. Spondere (Bruns, p. 295); Varro, De L. L. vi. 69-72 (Bruns, pp. 304, 305).

⁵ [The strong objection to this theory is that the nuncupatory words of the nexum are unlike the question and answer of the stipulatio. As we learn from the formula of nexi liberatio given by Gaius (iii. § 174), the creditor in a nexum probably used the words "damnas dare esto" and the debtor became damnatus. But there is no trace of this in the stipulatio; see Hunter, Roman Law, p. 536 sq.]

(p. 50); (3) that it was imported from Latium, which it had reached from some of the Greek settlements farther south. The latter is the most probable. Verrius Flaccus, as quoted by Festus, connects it with the Greek σπένδειν and σπονδή; and Gaius incidentally observes that the word was said to be of Greek origin.⁶ A libation (σπονδή) is frequently referred to by Homer and Herodotus as an accompaniment of treaties and other solemn covenants,—a common offering by the parties to the gods, which imparted sanctity to the transaction. Leist⁷ is of opinion that the practice passed into Sicily and Lower Italy, but that gradually the libation and other religious features were dropped, although the word σπονδή was retained in the sense of an engagement that bound parties just as if the old ritual had been observed; and that it travelled northward into Latium and thence to Rome under the name of sponsio, being used in the first instance in public life for the conclusion of treaties, and afterwards in private life for the conclusion of contracts. The meaning of spondes as a question by a creditor to his debtor (although latterly, we may well believe, unknown to them) thus came to be—"Do you engage as solemnly as if the old ceremonial had been gone through between us?" There are many parallels for such simplification of terms; none more familiar than when a man says, "I give you my oath upon it," without either himself or the individual addressed thinking it necessary to go through the form.⁸

It is not a little remarkable that, although the idea was derived from abroad, the use of the words spondes and spondeo in making a contract, down at least to the time of Gaius,

⁶ Gai. iii. 93.

⁷ Graeco-ital. Rechtsgesch. pp. 465-470. Upon the sponsionis vinculum internationally, see Liv. ix. 9.

⁸ [There is much to be said, however, for the view that the stipulatio (sponsio) was of native origin—common to the Latins with other Aryan races—and that used at first as mere customary observance (sponsio ad aram) it gradually, like other primitive Roman institutions, became by selection admitted into the quiritarian law. When this happened it is impossible to say, but probably after the passing of the lex Poetilia when the nexum began to fall into disuse. About the same time the expensilatio and mutui datio became established as binding obligations. Cf. Sohm, Inst. (Eng. trans.), p. 38. For other theories, see Girard, p. 475; Karlowa, Röm. RG. ii. 699 sq.]

was confined in Rome to Roman citizens.⁹ The sponsio as a form of contract was essentially juris civilis. So at first were the later and less solemn forms of stipulation,—promittisne? promitto, dabisne? dabo, and the like. Gaius speaks of these as juris gentium, i.e. binding even between Romans and peregrins. Such they became eventually; but not until towards the end of the republic. Yet, although juris civilis, both the sponsio and the later forms were from the first free from many of the impediments of the earlier actus legitimi. No witnesses were required to assist at them; and they were always susceptible of qualification by conditions and terms. It was very long, however, before parties had much latitude in their choice of language; spondeo was so peculiarly solemn that no equivalent could be admitted; and even the later styles may be said to have remained stereotyped until well on in the empire. And it was the use of the words of style that made the contract. It was formal, not material; that is to say, action lay upon the promise the words embodied, apart from any consideration whether or not value had been given for it. In time this serious disadvantage was abated; first by the introduction in certain cases of words that excluded action in presence of fraud, antecedent or subsequent, on the part of the creditor (clausula doli); and afterwards by praetorian exceptions, such as a plea of “no value,” or by having the contract set aside on the motion of the nominal debtor before proceedings had been taken upon it by the creditor.

SECTION 40.—THE SILIAN AND CALPURNIAN LAWS

Bekker seems to be the only authority of note who holds that stipulations were in use before the XII Tables, and

⁹ Gai. iii. §§ 93, 119, 179. It is sometimes said (on the authority of Gaius, iii. 120, iv. 113) that the heir of a sponsor (as the debtor was called) was not liable under the latter's engagement. Was this universal in the time of Gaius? or was it only when the sponsor was a surety, and because of the nature rather than the form of his obligation? [This singular rule seems to have been confined to stipulations (1) of suretyship and (2) those of which the object was a facere or non-facere. It was abolished by Justinian, Cod. viii. 38, 13. See Esmein, in Nouv. Rev. Hist. (1887), p. 49 sq.]

enforcible by an actio sacramenti.¹ Most writers agree that, whether in use earlier or not, they first became actionable, and therefore effectual in law, in virtue of a lex Silia. Gaius speaks of it as the enactment that introduced the legis actio per condictionem for enforcing payment of a definite sum of money.² Its date is matter of controversy;³ and Gaius remarks that the purpose of it was far from obvious, as there was no difficulty in recovering money either by a sacramental action or by one per judicis postulationem. He overlooks the fact that money due under a nexal contract was recoverable by neither of those processes, but by the much more summary one of manus injectio (§ 31).⁴ By the Poetilian law of 428 this was declared unlawful. I am disposed to regard the lex Silia and the new procedure it authorised as a result of the change. To have put off a creditor for money lent either with a sacramental action or one per judicis postulationem, would have been to deprive him of the advantages of manus injectio to a greater extent than was called for. It was right and proper in the interests of humanity that a creditor should no longer have the power of reducing his debtor to a condition of de facto slavery; but there was no good reason why the debtor should be allowed to dispute his obligation without incurring any penalty if unsuccessful.⁵ So it was provided by the Silian law that when a man disputed his liability for what was called pecunia certa credita, and forced his creditor to litigation, the latter was entitled to require from him an engagement to pay one-third more than the sum claimed by way of penalty in the event of judgment being against him; while the soi-disant creditor had to give an engagement to pay as penalty the same amount in case of judgment in favour of the alleged debtor.⁶

¹ Aktionen, vol. i. pp. 146, 147.

² Gai. iv. 19.

³ Voigt places it between the years 326 and 329 U.C.; Jhering ascribes it to the first half of the fifth century; Huschke and Rudorff to the beginning of the sixth. But the fact that stipulation is referred to in the Aquilian law of 467 as a contract already well developed seems to put the sixth century out of the question.

⁴ [I.e. on the author's theory.]

⁵ The sacramentum was a penalty in one sense; but the successful litigant gained nothing by it, as it was forfeited to public uses (p. 177).

⁶ Gai. iv. §§ 13, 171, 172, 180.

Those engagements (sponsio et restipulatio tertiae partis) were not allowed in every case in which a definite sum of money was claimed per condictionem, but only when it was technically pecunia credita. In Cicero's time creditum might arise either from loan, stipulation, or literal contract (expensilatio, p. 258);⁷ but the last dated at soonest from the beginning of the sixth century, and stipulation was a result of the Silian law itself;⁸ so that the pecunia credita of this enactment can have referred only to borrowed money. The same phrase, according to Livy, was employed in the Poetilian law; it was thereby enacted, he says, that for pecunia credita the goods, not the body of the debtor, ought to be taken in execution.⁹ A connection, therefore, between the Poetilian law and abolition of the nexum on the one hand, and the Silian law and introduction of the legis actio per condictionem on the other, can hardly be ignored; and raises more than a probability that the latter statute was a consequence of the former, and must have been passed immediately or soon after the year 428. And we are entitled to regard it not merely as the enactment introducing a new action, applicable (though with different limitations) to suits alike for repayment of loans and for payment of money debts of definite amount, no matter how arising, but as that which gave legal sanction to the sponsio or stipulation. The sponsio tertiae partis was its first exemplification. But once recognised as a binding contract, its manifest convenience must very soon have given it a greater range in money obligations, especially in agreements for interest upon loans.

There was a sort of loan, however, which was very common, whose repayment nevertheless could not be enforced by a condition under the Silian law, namely, a loan of seed corn, to be repaid after harvest, with a certain addition by way of interest. The reason was that the Silian condition was limited to actions for current money. A later statute, the lex Calpurnia, extended the remedy, which was much simpler than that by sacrament, to every personal claim for a thing or ⁷ Cic. Pro Rosc. com. 4, § 13; 5, § 14.

⁸ [Rather, the Silian law made the stipulation actionable. Cf. Buckler, Contract in Roman Law, p. 101 sq.]

⁹ Liv. viii. 28, § 9.

quantity of things, other than money, that was definite and certain (omnis certa res);¹⁰ and the action authorised by it got the name of condictio triticaria,¹¹ from the material (triticum) in reference to which the need for it was first experienced.¹²

In course of time the stipulation came to be employed in engagements that were from the first indefinite. But this seems to have been due to the intervention of the praetors, and to have originated after the system of the legis actiones had begun to give place to that per formulas (§ 71). The remedy in such a case was not spoken of as a condictio, but as an actio ex stipulatu.¹³

SECTION 41.—THE LEGIS ACTIO PER CONDICTIONEM¹

Little is known of the procedure in the legis actio introduced by the Silian and Calpurnian laws; for, in consequence of the loss of a leaf in the Verona MS., we are deprived of part of Gaius's account of it. It got its distinctive name, he says, from the condictio or requisition made by the plaintiff on the defendant, whom he had brought into court in the usual way, to attend again on the expiry of thirty days to have a judge appointed. Exception has been taken to this explanation by many jurists, on the ground that a requisition or invitation by one only of the parties hardly corresponds to the idea of condictio, which seems to imply common action; but it is a matter of detail of pure form and comparatively little importance. That the requisition was made in presence of the praetor

¹⁰ Gai. iv. 19. [See Voigt, Röm. RG. p. 45.]

¹¹ Fr. 1 Dig. De conductione triticaria (xiii. 3). The action was so called at any rate under the formular system; and it is more than probable that popularly it was so known under that of the legis actiones.

¹² [The above theory which makes the stipulatio originate with the Silian law as an actionable contract and enforceable solely by condictio is supported, among others, by Cuq, Inst. Jurid. p. 668, but controverted by Girard, p. 479, n. 2. Girard holds that it might be enforced by sacramental action in personam.]

¹³ Gai. iv. 136; Just. Inst. iii. 15 pr. [Infra, p. 337, n. 9.]

¹ To the literature in § 33, note 1, add—Asverus, Die Denunciation der Römer (Leipsic, 1843), p. 129 sq.; Mommsen (rev. Asverus), in Richter's Krit. Jahrb. vol. ix. (1845), p. 875 sq.; Bekker, Aktionen, vol. i. cap. 4-7; Voigt, Jus nat. vol. iii. §§ 98, 99, vol. iv. Beilage xix. Nos. 1, 2, 7; Baron (as in § 35, note 1), p. 40 sq.; Baron, Die Conditionen (Berlin, 1881), §§ 15, 16. [Add Jobbé-Duval, Études sur l'histoire de la procédure, pp. 59, 196.]

and in consequence of the denial by the defendant of the plaintiff's claim,² is more than probable; for it was the condictio that was the essential feature of the legis actio; and we have for it the testimony of Gaius that, except in pignoris capio, what was characteristic of the legis actiones was done in jure.³ The procedure on the reappearance of parties on the thirtieth day (provided a settlement had not been arrived at in the interval) must have varied according as the action was (1) for a definite sum of money that fell under the category of pecunia credita, (2) for any other definite sum of money, or (3) for a definite thing or quantity of things other than money. It was in the first case alone that there intervened promise and repromise of a third part of the sum claimed by way of penalty (sponsio et restipulatio tertiae partis);⁴ and it is probable that, if either party refused on the praetor's command so to oblige himself towards the other, judgment was at once pronounced in favour of the latter without any remit to a judex.

How the issue was adjusted when the sponsion and restipulation were duly given we are not informed; but, judging by analogy from the procedure in an action for breach of interdict under the formular system,⁵ and on the broader ground that there must have been machinery for a condemnation of the plaintiff on his restipulation in the event of his being found in the wrong,⁶ it may reasonably be concluded that there were in fact three concurrent issues sent to the same judex,—the first on the main question, the second on the defendant's sponsion, and the third on the plaintiff's restipulation. The first issue was an echo of the averment with which the plaintiff had originally come into court,—“If it appear

² In the edict which regulated the formular actio certae creditae pecuniae (which came in place of the legis actio) the praetor declared that, if the plaintiff referred the matter to the oath of the defendant, he (the praetor) would compel the latter either to swear that he was not resting owing or to pay,—“solvere aut jurare cogam” (Dig. xii. 2, fr. 34, § 6). Some jurists [e.g. Girard, p. 966 n.] think this must originally have been a provision of the Silian law. If so, it would greatly enhance the value of the remedy. ³ Gai. iv. 29.

⁴ [Jobbé-Duval, op. cit. pp. 196-206, takes a different view; cf. Voigt, Röm. RG. p. 45. The view taken in the text is the prevailing one.]

⁵ Gai. iv. 165, and infra, § 78.

⁶ “Restipulationis poena omnimodo damnatur actor si vincere non potuerit” (Gai. iv. 180).

that the defendant ought to pay (si paret dare oportere) the plaintiff the sum of 1000 asses of credita pecunia, in that the judge will condemn him; should it not so appear, he will acquit him." Where a sum of money other than pecunia credita was sued for, the issue was substantially the same, those two words being omitted; but subsidiary issues were unnecessary, as there was neither sponsion nor restipulation.⁷

As Baron has demonstrated,⁸ it was not the usual practice to introduce any words explanatory of the ground of indebtedness when the action was either for money (other than pecunia credita) or for a thing or quantity of things. It might be loan, or bequest, or sale, or purchase, or delict, or unjustifiable enrichment, or any of a score of causae; it would have to be stated of course before the judge; but in the initial stage before the praetor and in the issue all that was necessary was the averment that the defendant was owing such a sum of money or such a thing. It was for the judge to determine whether or not the averment was established, and, in certain cases, that non-delivery was due to the fault of the defendant; the plaintiff, however, being bound to make his averment good to the letter of his claim. Proof of 900 resting owing where 1000 had been claimed necessarily involved a judgment for the defendant; unless the plaintiff proved all, he got nothing; for the procedure was pre-eminently stricti juris. In the event of the plaintiff being successful in an action for certa pecunia, but delay made by the defendant in satisfying the judgment, execution followed in ordinary form. How the matter was arranged in an action on the Calpurnian law for a certa res is not so obvious. What the plaintiff wanted was specific delivery or damages, and by some the opinion is entertained that he formulated his claim alternatively. Of this there is no evidence; and Gaius's statement that under the system of the legis actiones condemnation was always in the ipsa res, i.e. the specific thing sued for,⁹ leads to the assumption that a judgment for the plaintiff, on which specific implement failed, must have been followed by an arbitrium litis aestimandae for assessment of the damages in money, and that execution proceeded thereon as if the judgment had been for a sum of money in the first instance. The general opinion, however, is that the judge to whom the issue was remitted assessed the damages himself and as a matter of course,—that the instruction to him was quanti res erit, tantam pecuniam condemnato.

⁷ [But see supra, n. 4.]

⁸ [Cited supra, n. 1.]

⁹ Gai. iv. 48. But see supra, § 36, n. 7.

PART III

THE JUS GENTIUM AND JUS HONORARIUM

Latter Half of the Republic

PART III

THE JUS GENTIUM AND JUS HONORARIUM

Latter Half of the Republic

CHAPTER I

INFLUENCES THAT OPERATED ON THE LAW

SECTION 42.—GROWTH OF COMMERCE AND INFLUX OF FOREIGNERS

WHILE it may be admitted that commerce was beginning to take root in Rome in the fifth century, yet it was not until the sixth that it really became of importance. The campaigns in which Rome was engaged until the end of the First Punic War absorbed all her energies. But after it the influx of strangers, and their settlement in the city for purposes of trade, became very rapid,—first Latins and other allies, and afterwards Greeks, Carthaginians, and Asiatics. For them and the regulation of their affairs the jus civile—the law peculiar to Rome and her citizens¹—was applicable only if they were members of allied states to which commercium and recuperatio were guaranteed by treaty (p. 103). But multitudes were not in this favoured position; and even those who were, soon found the range of Roman modes of acquiring property and contracting obligations too narrow for their requirements.

¹ Just. Inst. i. 2, 1.

So there gradually developed a *jus gentium*² which very early in its history drove treaty covenants for recuperatio out of use; whose application may for a time have been limited to transactions between non-citizens, or between citizens and non-citizens, but which was eventually accepted in the dealings of citizens inter se, and became part and parcel of the jus Romanorum. Gaius and Justinian speak of it as "the common law of mankind," "the law in use among all nations."³ But the language must not be taken too literally. The Roman jus gentium was not built up by the adoption of one doctrine or institution after another that was found to be generally current elsewhere. In the earliest stages of its recognition it was "an independent international private law, which, as such, regulated intercourse between peregrins, or between peregrins and citizens, on the basis of their common libertas;"⁴ which during the republic was purely empirical and free from the influence of scientific theory, but whose extensions in the early empire were a creation of the jurists,—a combination of comparative jurisprudence and rational speculation.⁵ To say that it was de facto in observance everywhere is inaccurate; on the contrary, it was Roman law, built up by Roman jurists, though called into existence through the necessities of intercourse with and among non-Romans.

It was in matters of contract that there was the greatest scope for the development of the new system; and to it may be attributed the relaxation of the stipulation and the recognition of the so-called real and consensual contracts as creative of obligation apart from any formalities of word or deed. But it was not without its influence in other departments of the law. It is questionable whether, as is sometimes said, the

² On the Roman jus gentium, see Voigt, Das jus naturale, æquum et bonum, und jus gentium d. Römer, 4 vols. Leipsic, 1856-75: Nettleship, in the Journal of Philology, vol. xiii. (1885), p. 169 sq.; [Voigt, Röm. RG. i. § 15. Mommsen, SR. iii. p. 604 n., defines jus gentium as "das ungeschriebene allgemeine Recht," and gives an enumeration of institutions founded on it. See Cuq, pp. 488-91; Krüger, Gesch. d. Quellen, §§ 16, 17.]

³ Gai. i. 1; Just. Inst. i. 2, 1.

⁴ Voigt, Jus nat. vol. ii. 661. He distinguishes the jus civile, jus gentium, and jus naturale as the systems which applied respectively to the citizen, the freeman, and the man. Comp. Cic. De Orat. i. 13, § 56.

⁵ Voigt, vol. i. pp. 399, 400.

great reform worked on the law of property by the Publician edict,—the recognition, namely, of an inferior sort of ownership of res Mancipi, the beneficial interest without the quiritary title (§ 52), can be regarded as one of its manifestations; for what Theophilus calls bonitary ownership proceeded upon a fiction of usucapion, and this, down at least to the time of Gaius, was competent only to citizens and non-citizens enjoying commercium.⁶ It made its mark, however, both on the law of the family and on that of succession. This indeed was inevitable. Marriages between Roman citizens and women of peregrin birth with whom they had no conubium became not uncommon. They were not justae nuptiae, and so did not make the wife justa uxor or give the husband potestas over his children. To have altogether ignored such a union, however, would have been disastrous; so it was treated as juris gentium marriage.⁷ The wife consequently was allowed an action for her dowry when the union was dissolved,⁸ and the husband an accusatio adulterii when his wife proved unfaithful.⁹ His children, although they were held to be peregrins like their mother,¹⁰ and were not in his potestas, yet were in a sense his lawful children (justi liberi patris),¹¹ so that he was bound to aliment them, entitled to plead his paternity as an excuse from undertaking a tutory,¹² and so forth; and Theophilus states expressly that it was on their account that testamentary trusts (fideicommissa) were originally introduced, their want of citizenship preventing them from taking their father's succession ab intestato, and him from either instituting them as his testamentary heirs or leaving them direct bequests.¹³

It may be a little difficult for a modern jurist to say with perfect precision what were the doctrines and institutions of the jus gentium as distinguished from the jus civile. But the

⁶ Gai. ii. 65. [The recognition of occupation, accession, and tradition as modes of acquiring property is attributable to the jus gentium.]

⁷ Callistratus in Dig. l. 1, 37, § 2 calls it matrimonium non legitimum.

⁸ Cic. Top. 4, § 20.

⁹ Ulp. lib. 2 de adult. in Dig. xlviii. 5, fr. 13, § 1.

¹⁰ Gai. i. 67.

¹¹ Gai. i. 77.

¹² Papin. lib. 5 quaestion. in Vat. Frag. 194.

¹³ Theoph. Paraphr. ii. 23, § 1.

distinction must have been very familiar to the Romans; otherwise we should not have had the statement of Marcian in reference to the ἀπόλλιδες,—that they enjoyed all the rights competent to a man under the former, but none of those competent to him under the latter.¹⁴

SECTION 43.—THE INSTITUTION OF THE PEREGRIN PRAETORSHIP

The praetorship¹ was an outcome of the Licinian laws of the year 387 U.C. (p. 85). The object of its institution was that the administration of justice might be retained in the hands of patricians, although the consulate had been thrown open to the lower order. “Qui jus in urbe diceret” are the words in which Livy describes the principal function of the new official.² In dignity he was on a footing of almost perfect equality with the consuls, and in their absence from the city he was qualified in some matters to act as their substitute; in fact, he had the same imperium as they in all but military command. In course of time the office, which, like the consulate, was an annual one, was opened to plebeians as well as patricians; but nothing was changed in its duties; down to the end of the fifth century the praetor superintended single-handed the administration of justice, alike between citizens and foreigners. But with the altered conditions of things in the beginning of the sixth century, and the influx of strangers which has already been alluded to, the work seems to have been found too onerous for a single magistrate, and a second praetor was appointed. The date is not absolutely certain, though generally assumed to have been about the year 512 U.C.;³ but Pomponius⁴ says distinctly that the creation of

¹⁴ Dig. xlviii. 19, fr. 17, § 1. [See generally on the matter of this section, Puchta, Inst. i. §§ 83, 84.]

¹ See Labatut, Histoire de la Préture (Paris, 1868); Mommsen, Röm. Staatsrecht, vol. ii. p. 176 sq.; Faure, Essai historique sur le Préteur romain, Paris, 1878; Karlowa, Röm. RG. vol. i. p. 217 sq.

² Liv. vi. 42, § 11.

³ Lydus (De Magistr. i. 38, 45) says it was in the year 507, which corresponds to 510 of the Varronian era. Livy (Epit. 19) says it was in 512.

⁴ Pompon. in Dig. i. 2, fr. 2, § 28.

the new office was rendered necessary by the increase of the peregrin population of Rome, and that the new magistrate got the name of praetor peregrinus because his principal duty was to dispense justice to this foreign element.⁵ After the submission of Sicily and Sardinia the number of the praetors was increased to four, and after the conquest of Spain to six; Sulla raised the number to eight, and Caesar eventually to sixteen. But all the later creations were for special purposes; the ordinary administration of justice within the city was left with the representatives for the time of the two earliest, who came to be distinguished as praetor urbanus (qui jus inter cives dicit) and praetor peregrinus.

Although material fails for instituting a comparison between the edicts⁶ of those two magistrates, and estimating the extent to which each may be credited with influencing the development of the jus gentium, yet it is but reasonable to assume that, in many directions at least, the greater impetus must have been given to it by the peregrin praetor, moulding and modifying the jus civile to suit peregrin requirements where that was possible, and where it failed introducing a jus honorarium. It would be going too far to speak of him as the principal author of the jus gentium; for a large proportion of the actions for enforcing juris gentium rights were civil, not honorary,—a fact which proves that the rights they were meant to protect and enforce had their origin in the jus civile, although moulded to meet new requirements by tacit consuetude and the agency of the jurists. But even in this view the peregrin praetor must have had a powerful influence in giving shape and consistency to the rising jurisprudence, through means of the formulae he adjusted for giving it practical effect.⁷

⁵ In the extant remains of later republican legislation and in inscriptions he is alluded to sometimes as “praetor qui inter peregrinos jus dicit,” sometimes as “praetor qui inter cives et peregrinos jus dicit,” and sometimes simply as “praetor peregrinus.”

⁶ Gaius (i. 6) speaks of the edicts of the peregrin praetor as equally a source of the jus honorarium with those of his urban colleague.

⁷ [On the influence of the jus gentium upon the praetorian law, see Puchta, Inst. i. § 85.]

SECTION 44.—SIMPLIFICATION OF PROCEDURE AND INTRODUCTION OF NEW REMEDIES UNDER THE AEBUTIAN LAW¹

The lex Aebutia is only twice mentioned by ancient writers,² and we know neither its precise date nor its specific provisions. And yet, to judge by its effects, it must have been one of the most important pieces of comitial legislation in the latter half of the republic; for Gellius speaks of it as having given their death-blow to many of the institutions of the XII Tables, and Gaius couples it with two Julian laws as the statutory instruments whereby the formular system of procedure (§ 71) was substituted for that per legis actiones. The probability is that it was enacted immediately or soon after the institution of the peregrin praetorship.³ Its purpose, whatever may have been its terms, seems to have been to authorise the praetors to simplify the existing forms of process or substitute new ones in actions on the jus civile. It can hardly be that it authorised the praetors to publish and enforce edicts, for that had from time immemorial been a prerogative of all magistrates invested with the imperium. Nor can it be that it authorised them to give the character of rights and wrongs to what had not previously been so regarded, by supporting the one with actions and visiting the other with punishment; for not only would that have been to empower the praetors jus facere (which they always disclaimed), but it would have made it incomprehensible why praetorian actions could be raised only within the year of office of the praetor who had promised to grant them, while actions of the jus civile, though appearing for the first time in their new shape on the praetor's album, were perpetual.⁴

¹ [On this section see Wlassak, Röm. Prozessgesetze, i. pp. 58-166; Cuq, Inst. Jurid. p. 712 sq.; Voigt, Röm. RG. i. § 13. Cuq is of opinion that the lex Aebutia had the effect of putting an end to the legis actio per condictionem while leaving the other legis actiones still in use.]

² Gell. xvi. 10, 8; Gai. iv. 30.

³ It has sometimes been put as late as the beginning of the seventh century. For some of the dates assigned to it, and the reasons for them, see Padelletti, Storia del diritto romano (Florence, 1878), p. 251 sq. [Padell.-Cogl. p. 403 sq.; Appleton, Nouv. Rev. Hist. ix. p. 489. Voigt, Röm. RG. i. Beil. 6, places it between the years 513-517 u.c.; Girard, pp. 36 and 971, about a century later.]

⁴ [See Wlassak, op. cit. pp. 48-50, as to the limitation in time of judicia legitima and judicia imperio continentia.]

It seems rather to have been intended to empower them to adapt existing remedies to altered circumstances, and to fashion new actions on the jus civile for the use of the peregrins to whom the procedure of the legis actiones was incompetent; while it may possibly at the same time have expressly authorised the insertion in the styles to be devised by them of clauses that would give protection when required against claims that in law were well founded but in fact inequitable.⁵ But whatever may have been the actual provisions of the statute, the result was the introduction of a procedure which gradually supplanted that by the "actions of the law"; which was much more pliant than the latter; and whose characteristic was this,—that instead of the issue being declared by word of mouth by the parties, and requiring in many cases to embody with perfect accuracy the statutory provision upon which it was based, it was now formulated in writing by the praetor, in the shape of an instruction to the judge to inquire and consider, with power to condemn or acquit according to his finding (§ 71).

SECTION 45.—PROVINCIAL CONQUESTS

The growth of commerce and the enormous increase of wealth, which made great capitalists and enabled them through the agency of freedmen and slaves to carry on trade on a scale hitherto unknown, and which thus helped to foster the jus gentium, was no doubt due to a large extent to provincial conquests. But these operated also in other directions. The authorities who proceeded to the conquered provinces as governors found themselves face to face with laws and institutions in many respects differing from those of Rome. Political considerations dictated how far these were to be respected, how far subverted. In some provinces, more especially the eastern ones, it was thought unnecessary to do more than supplement the existing system by the importation of doctrines of the jus gentium and the procedure of the praetor's edicts; while in others, in which it was deemed expedient to destroy as rapidly as possible all national feeling and every national rallying-point, a romanising of all their institutions was resorted to, even to the extent of introducing some of the formal transactions which previously had been confined to citizens. But in either case there was a reflex action. The native institution had to be studied, its advantages and disadvantages balanced, the means considered of adapting it to the praetorian procedure, and the new ideas so presented as to make them harmonise as far as possible with the old. All this was a training of no small value for those who, on their return to Rome, were to exercise an influence on legislation and the administration of the law. They brought back with them not merely an experience they could not have obtained at home, but sometimes a familiarity with foreign institutions that they were very willing to acclimatise in Italy. Roman law was thus enriched from her provinces, deriving from them her emphyteutic tenure of land, her hypothec, her Rhodian law of general average, and a variety of other features that were altogether novel. Some of them were sanctioned by tacit recognition, others by edicts of the praetors; but, in whatever way received, they were indirectly fruits of provincial conquest.

⁵ [For a different theory regarding the purport and effect of the lex Aebutia, see Wlassak, as cited, n. 1 supra. Sohm, Inst. (English trans.), pp. 168-174, summarises the views of Wlassak, Eisele, and other recent inquirers on the subject.]

SECTION 46.—SPREAD OF LITERATURE AND PHILOSOPHY

The effect on Roman civilisation of the addiction of educated men in the later republic to literature and philosophy is a matter for consideration in connection with Rome's general history. It is not proposed to consider here the question how far specific doctrines of Roman law bear the impress of the influence of the schools, especially that of the Stoics; it is a subject much too large to be disposed of in a few lines.¹ The matter is mentioned simply for the sake of noting that the spirit of critical inquiry, aroused and fostered by literary and philosophical study seriously and conscientiously undertaken, contributed greatly to promote a new departure in jurisprudence that became very marked in the time of Cicero,—the desire to subordinate form to substance, the word spoken to the will it was meant to manifest, the abstract rule to the individual case to which it was proposed to apply it. This was the first effort of what then was called equity to temper and keep within bounds the rigour of the jus strictum. The praetors, the judges, and the jurisconsults all had their share in it. Although modern jurists are prone to speak of praetorian equity as if it were a thing apart, yet the same spirit was leavening the law in all directions and in the hands of all who had to deal with it; the difference being that the form and publicity of the Edict gave to its applications by the praetors a more prominent and enduring record than was found in the decisions of private judices or the opinions of counselling jurisconsults.

¹ It is one that was discussed with much greater fervour a century ago than it is now. Of the later literature may be mentioned—Van Vollenhoven, De exigua vi, quam philosophia Graeca habuit in efformanda jurisprudentia Romana, Amsterdam, 1884; Ratjen, Hat die Stoische Phil. bedeutenden Einfluss gehabt, etc. Kiel, 1889; Voigt, Jus nat. etc. vol. i. §§ 49-51; Laferrière, De l'influence du Stoicisme sur la doctrine des jurisconsultes romains, Paris, 1860; Hildenbrand, Gesch. u. System d. Rechts- und Staatsphilosophie, Leipsic, 1860, vol. i. §§ 141, 142. For the earlier literature, see Hildenbrand, l.c. p. 593.

SECTION 47.—DECLINE OF RELIGION AND MORALS

It would be equally out of place to enlarge here on the causes and manifestations of that decline in religious sentiment and public and private virtue which were fraught with such disastrous results in the later days of the republic. The private law was influenced by it to a considerable extent, alike in those branches of it which regulated the domestic relations and those which dealt with property and contract.

The ever-increasing disregard of the sanctity of the marriage tie is one of those features in the history of the period which strikes even the most unobservant. While from the first the law had denounced causeless separation and visited it with penalties, yet in principle it maintained the perfect freedom of divorce,—that it was improper to force persons to continue in the bonds of matrimony between whom matrimonial affection no longer existed. With the simple and frugal habits of the first five centuries of Rome and the surveillance of the consilium domesticum, the recognition of this principle produced no evil results; family misunderstandings were easily smoothed over, and divorces were of rare occurrence.

But from the time of the enactment of the Maenian law in 586¹ there seems to have been a change for the worse. It inter alia displaced the family council as a divorce court, and transferred its functions in that matter to a judicium de moribus,—a court of inquiry nominated by the praetor, and whose duty it was to decide to what extent there should be forfeiture of the nuptial provisions in case of separation or repudiation. The motives of the statute may have been of the best, but its tendency was injurious; for not only did it indirectly facilitate divorce, but it rendered the idea of it familiar, and overthrew that respect for the domestic council which had hitherto been a check upon it.²

This looseness of the marriage bond, as was naturally to be expected, had its effect on the other family relations. The obligation of a father to provide for his children began to be lightly esteemed. The law—possibly only the interpretation put upon the uti legassit of the XII Tables—had empowered him testamentarily to disinherit them, or in instituting them to limit their right to a mere fraction of the inheritance (p. 162); but it was assumed that this power would be exercised with discretion and only when justified by circumstances. But in the latter days of the republic, amid the slackened ties of domestic life, paternal as well as conjugal duty seems to have often been lost sight of, and children disinherited, or cut off with a nominal share of the inheritance, in order that a stranger might be enriched. This led to the introduction by the centumviral court, without any legislative enactment or

¹ See Voigt, Die Lex Maenia de dote (Weimar, 1866), and criticism by Arndts in the Z. f. RG. vol. vii. (1867), p. 1 sq. Gellius relates (iv. 3) that in 523—in another place he says 519, while Dion. Hal. and Valer. Max. say 520—Sp. Carvilius Ruga, with approval of the domestic council (xvii. 21, § 44), put away the wife he fondly loved because she was barren, and he consequently was unable with a safe conscience to assure the censors that he had a wife who would bear him children. There seems to have been a difficulty about her dowry; for Gellius observes, on the authority of Servius Sulpicius, that thenceforth it was thought proper to have a dotal settlement providing for such a contingency. The Maenian law appears to have been, in part at least, a statutory regulation of the matter. It is right to observe that Czycharz, in the introduction to Das römische Dotalrecht (Giessen, 1870), maintains that the evidence produced by Voigt is insufficient to prove that there ever was such an enactment, and that several more recent authors entertain grave doubts about it. [See Girard, p. 931, n. 6.]

² [As to repudiation, in general, and its effect upon the dos see Cuq, p. 493 sq.]

praetor's edict to warrant it, of what was called the querela inofficiosi testamenti,—challenge of a testament by a person whose natural claims had been capriciously and causelessly disregarded.³ While the practice may for a time have been hesitating and uncertain, yet before long, through means of this querela, the rule came to be established that every child was entitled, notwithstanding the terms of his father's testament, to at least a fourth (portio legitima, quarta legitima, the legitim of the law of Scotland and various Continental countries)⁴ of what would have come to him had his parent died intestate, unless it appeared that the latter had had adequate grounds for excluding him or limiting him to a smaller share.⁵ A parent might in like manner challenge an undutiful testament made by his child to his prejudice; and in certain cases so might brothers and sisters inter se.⁶

³ The mention by Cicero (In Verr. II. i. 42, § 107) of a “testamentum non improbum, non inofficiosum, non inhumanum,” has led most writers to the conclusion that the remedy in question was already known in his time, although there are some who postpone it to the Augustine period. Valerius Maximus, however, refers to it (vii. 7, 4) in connection with Calpurnius Piso, the urban praetor, whom Drumann (Gesch. Roms, vol. ii. p. 92 sq.) takes to have been the same who held that office in the year of Verres's prosecution. It is extremely probable that the practice of the court in regard to it was at first irregular, perhaps spasmodic; and that, though commenced during the republic, it did not become settled until early in the empire. [For a new and ingenious theory regarding the querela which throws light on various texts in Dig. vi. 2, see Eisele, Z. d. Sav. Stift. (R. A.) vol. xv. pp. 256-306.]

⁴ It was called portio legitima, statutory share, because the “fourth” was borrowed from the Lex Falcidia (infra, p. 270), which declared that every testamentary heir should be entitled to have that proportion of the succession free from bequests to legatees. Justinian (Nov. 18) raised the legitim to one-third in any case, and to one-half where more than four children had to participate (infra, p. 397). [Though the legitim of Continental systems of law, which are based on the Roman, is derived from this portio legitima, the same cannot, it is thought, be said of Scotland. Legitim in Scottish law, as well as the jus relictæ of a wife, is traceable rather to the doctrine of rationabilis pars in old English, and probably Norman customary law. As such it is mentioned in Glanvil and in the Regiam Majestatem. See Inaugural Lecture by the present editor on The Fate of the Roman Law North and South of the Tweed (1894), pp. 31-32; Pollock and Maitland, History of English Law, ii. p. 346 sq.]

⁵ Justinian, by his 115th Novel, remodelled the details of the practice, fixing statutorily what should in future be regarded as sufficient grounds of disherison, and requiring them to be expressly narrated in the testament (infra, p. 396).

⁶ [This seems not to have been definitely fixed as regards brothers and sisters till the time of Constantine, Cod. Th. ii. 19, 1.]

The decline of morals had an equally marked effect on the transactions of daily life, calling for precautions and remedies that had not been found requisite in the heyday of the πίστις τῶν Ῥωμαίων. Men no longer cared to rely on each other's good faith unless backed by stipulations, cautions (cautiones), and guarantees of one sort and another. The Rutilian bankruptcy arrangements,⁷ and the actio Pauliana for setting aside alienations in fraud of creditors,⁸ indicate a laxity in mercantile dealings that was perhaps an inevitable consequence of the growth of trade and commerce. But that such remedies as, for example, the exceptio rei venditae et traditae or the exceptio non numeratae pecuniae should have been found necessary,—the one an answer to a vendor (with the price in his pocket) who attempted to dispossess his vendee simply because some of the formalities of conveyance had been neglected, the other an answer to an action on a bond for repayment of money that by some accident had never been advanced,—proves that the law had now to encounter fraud in all directions, and that Graeca fides had to a great extent displaced the old Roman probity.

⁷ Gai. iii. §§ 77-81.

⁸ Cic. Ad Att. i. 1, § 3; Just. Inst. iv. 6, 6.

CHAPTER II

FACTORS OF THE LAW

SECTION 48.—LEGISLATION

It cannot be said that during the period of nearly two centuries and a half embraced within the present chapter the private law owed much to legislation. The vast majority of the enactments of the time referred to by the historians dealt with constitutional questions, municipal and colonial government, agrarian arrangements, fiscal policy, sumptuary prohibitions, criminal and police regulations, and other matters that affected the public law rather than the private. Those of the latter class mentioned by Gaius and Ulpian in their institutional works barely exceed a score in number; and of these not above half a dozen can be said to have exercised a permanent influence on the principles (as distinguished from the details) of the law. Most of them were enactments of the *concilium plebis*¹ or of the comitia of the tribes, to which ordinary legislation had passed as more readily convened and more easily worked than the comitia of the centuries.²

¹ Gellius (x. 20, 9) observes that enactments that were strictly speaking plebiscita were nevertheless usually spoken of as leges.

² Among them may be mentioned the Lex Aebutia (supra, p. 230) that directly or indirectly introduced the formular procedure; a Cornelian law of 687, requiring the praetors to adhere to the law they had published in their edicts on accession to office; the Lex Cincia de donis of 550, which exercised a considerable influence on the law of donation, but was primarily enacted for a political purpose,—to restrain lavish gifts to public men and pleaders, as really often a vehicle of corruption; the Atilian and Julia-Titian laws, empowering magistrates in Italy and the provinces respectively to appoint tutors to pupils and grown women, failing testamentary appointees and tutors-at-law; the Lex

SECTION 49.—EDICTS OF THE MAGISTRATES¹

The practice of propounding edicts was very ancient, and had been followed by kings and consuls long before the institution of the praetorship. It was one of the most obvious ways of exercising the imperium with which the supreme magistrate was invested,—to lay an injunction upon a citizen and enforce his obedience, or to confer upon him some advantage and maintain him in its enjoyment. It was one of the ways in which public order was protected where there had been no invasion of what the law regarded as a right, and where, consequently, there was no remedy by action. That the earlier edicts of the praetors were of this character—issued, that is to say, with reference to particular cases, and what afterwards came to be called edicta repentina or prout res incidit proposita—there is little reason to doubt. In time a new class of edicts appeared which got the name of edicta perpetua (or perpetuae jurisdictionis causa proposita),—announcements by the praetor, published on his album (as the white boards displayed for the purpose in the forum were called), of the relief he would be prepared to grant on the application of any one alleging that the state of facts contemplated had arisen.

Plaetoria, for the protection of minors beyond the age of pupillarity; the Lex Atinia, prohibiting the usucapion of stolen goods even by innocent third parties; the Lex Aquilia of 467, giving a remedy for culpable damage to property; the Apuleian, Furian, Cicereian, and Cornelian laws for alleviating the position of sureties; the Lex Voconia of 585, imposing disabilities upon women in the matter of succession, and forbidding legatees to take more than a certain amount under a testament; and the Falcidian law of 714, empowering a testamentary heir to retain one-fourth of the inheritance even though more than three-fourths had been given away in legacies. In Rudorff (Röm. RG. vol. i. §§ 10-44) will be found a classified and descriptive list of all the leges and plebiscita mentioned either in law-books or elsewhere, including those of the early empire. The Index Legum, in the third part of Orelli's Onomasticon Tullianum, contains an account of those mentioned in Cicero, Livy, Vell. Paternulus, and Aul. Gellius. There is also a classified list, with references to the books in which fuller accounts may be found, in Rivier, Introd. §§ 40-49.

¹ See Lenel, Beiträge zur Kunde des praetorischen Edicts (Stuttgart, 1878), and the introductory chapters in his great book, Das Edictum Perpetuum (Leipzig, 1888); Karlowa, Röm. RG. i. § 60. The attempts made from time to time to reconstruct the Edict are referred to infra, § 58, in connection with the Julian consolidation. [Add Voigt, Röm. RG. §§ 19, 20; Cuq, p. 476 sq.; Krüger, Quellen, § 5.]

The conjecture lies near at hand that this may have been done in the first instance by some praetor who had experience of frequently recurring applications similar in nature and purpose; and who, judging that the remedy he offered was needed and appreciated, thought it wise to certiorate the lieges generally of his readiness to grant it. The next year's praetor was free to adopt the edicts of his predecessor or not; but it was usual for him to do so if they had been found beneficial in practice, he adding to them new provisions suggested by demands made upon past praetors for edicta repentina (which they had not seen fit to generalise), or even proposing for acceptance some remedy entirely of his own devising. As each new praetor entered upon office he announced his jurisdictional programme,—his lex annua, as it was called from this particular point of view;² by far the greater part of it tralaticium, i.e. transmitted from his predecessors, and only a few paragraphs, diminishing in number as time progressed, representing his own contribution. And so it went on in the first years of the empire, until the praetorian function was eclipsed by the imperial; and at last, after having, by instruction of Hadrian, been subjected to revision, and consolidated with the edicts of the peregrin praetors and provincial governors, it was sanctioned as statute law for the empire through the medium of a senatusconsult (p. 290).

There is some reason for supposing that the Edict attained considerable proportions in the time of Cicero; for he mentions that, whereas in his youth the XII Tables had been taught to the boys in school, in his later years these were neglected, and young men directed instead to the praetor's edicts for their first lessons in law.³ Of a few of them the date and authorship are known with tolerable precision; but of the history of the majority, including some of the most important, such as those introducing restitutio in integrum on the ground of lesion through error, absence, minority, and the like, and those ² Cic. In Verr. II. i. 42, § 109.

³ Cic. De Leg. i. 5, § 17, ii. 23, § 59. Yet in a passage which he is supposed to have written before he had reached his twenty-fifth year (De Invent. ii. 22, § 67) he speaks of some portions of the edict as having become fixed and certain on account of their long observance (propter vetustatem).

revolutionising the law of succession, we are to a great extent in the dark. It is not necessary to assume either that the Julian consolidation exhibits all the provisions that from first to last appeared on the album, or that those preserved in it were originally in the shape in which they are there presented. It is much more likely that we have in it only those that had stood the test of generations, and that many of them are the result of the combined wisdom and experience of a series of praetors. It was one of the great advantages the edicts had over legislative enactments that they might be dropped, resumed, or amended by a new praetor according to his judgment of public requirements. For the Edict was viva vox juris civilis,⁴—intended to aid, supplement, and correct it in accordance with the ever-changing estimate of public necessities;⁵ and this would have been impossible had its provisions from the first been as stereotyped as they became by its consolidation in the time of Hadrian.

The Edict seems to have contained two parts; the first what may be called the edict or edicts proper, and the second an appendix of styles of actions, etc., whether derived from the jus civile or from the jus praetorium. The contents of the Edict proper were in detail very various, but all devoted to an exposition of the ways in which the praetor meant to explicate his jurisdiction during his year of office. They were not didactic or dogmatic formulations of law, but rather announcements or advertisements of what remedy he would grant in such and such circumstances, or direct orders to do or prohibitions against doing certain things. "I will hold it (an agreement) valid," "I will not sustain it," "I will give him an action," "I will give him an exception," "I will reinstate him in his former position," "I will ordain him to give security," "I will put him in possession of the estate he claims," "I will give him time to deliberate" (about acceptance of an inheritance), "I will require him either to deny the debt on oath or to pay it,"—these are examples of the operative words of edicts of the first class; while "He must restore it," "He must exhibit it," "He must not do it," "I forbid the employment of forcible means" (say to alter the state of possession), may be taken as examples of the second. A party claiming an action or whatever else it might be under any of them, did so not of right, as he would have done had his claim had a statutory or customary foundation, but of grace,—on the strength of the praetor's promise to grant him what he claimed⁶ and make the grant effectual. That was why originally such an action had to be raised and concluded within the particular praetor's year of office; a rule which in time, by abuse, was converted into this somewhat different one,—that a purely praetorian action (i.e. not originally of the jus civile) had to be raised within a year of the occurrence to which it referred.

⁴ Marcian, in Dig. i. 1, fr. 8.

⁵ "Quod praetores introduxerunt adjuvandi, vel supplendi, vel corrigendi juris civilis gratia, propter utilitatem publicam" (Papinian, in Dig. i. 1, fr. 7, § 1).

As already observed, the praetors' edicts proceeded to a greater extent than the earlier legislation of the comitia upon lines of equity; that is to say, they set themselves against the strictness and formalism of the jurisprudence of the XII Tables. Such may be said to have been the general tendency of the praetorian edicts as a whole. But it was the tendency of the whole jurisprudence of the time, and by no means peculiar to the praetorian creation. Nowhere in the texts are the praetors spoken of as the special mouthpieces of equity as distinguished from law. Such a distinction recurs frequently in Cicero; he identifies aequitas with the spirit of a law or agreement, and jus with its letter; but it is in order to sing the praises, not of the praetors, but of the pleaders who maintained the former as against the latter, and of the judges who were persuaded by their arguments. Much of what was contained in the Edict might quite as well have been embodied in statute, and we know that in time statute came to its aid; witness a very remarkable provision of it,—“I will give bonorum possessio as may be enjoined by statute, whether comitial enactment or senatusconsult.”⁷

Of the edicts of the peregrin praetor and their relation

⁶ Gaius frequently speaks of bonorum possessiones which praetor pollicetur or promittit (see ii. §§ 119, 135).

⁷ Ulp. lib. 49 ad edict. in Dig. xxxviii. 14, l. un. pr. [This constituted the order of succession called bonorum possessio tum quibus ex legibus, Inst. iii. 9, § 8.]

to those of his urban colleague little is known. That they differed in some respects there can be no doubt; for in the Lex Rubria (of 706?) for settling the government of Cisalpine Gaul,⁸ the magistrates were directed, with reference to a certain action, to formulate it in the way prescribed in the edict of the peregrin praetor. The latter, therefore, must to some extent have been in advance of that of the urban praetor; probably in this respect,—that, being prepared primarily for the regulation of questions affecting non-citizens, it more thoroughly than the other avoided formalities that were competent only to citizens, and thus to a greater extent simplified procedure. In the edict of the urban praetor there were provisions that could benefit none but citizens; for example, the Publician action introducing the tenure in bonis of res Mancipi, which proceeded upon a fiction of completed usucapion, and therefore, even well into the empire, was not available to a peregrin.⁹ In that of the peregrin praetor, on the other hand, we are entitled to believe that such a remedy could have had no place, and that its provisions must have throughout been such as would apply indifferently to citizens and non-citizens. The edicts of the provincial governors must have varied according to circumstances; being in all cases composites of provisions, more or less numerous, borrowed from the edicts of the praetors, and additions suggested by the peculiar wants of the different provinces for which they were framed (provinciale genus edicendi). Among these may have been regulations for protection of quasi-property in land and quasi-real rights; for land in the provinces in theory belonged to the state, its occupants having no more than a transmissible and inheritable right of usufruct.¹⁰ As for the edicts of the curule aediles, who, amongst other duties, were charged with the supervision of markets, their range was very limited; their most important provisions having reference to open sales of slaves, horses, and cattle, and containing regulations about the duties of vendors exposing them, and their responsibility for faults and vices.¹¹

⁸ Lex Rubria, cap. 20 (Bruns, p. 92). [Voigt, Röm. RG. p. 214, gives 713 as the date.]

⁹ [See infra, p. 252, n. 10.]

¹⁰ Gai. ii. 7.

¹¹ See tit. Dig. "De aedilitio edicto et redhibitione et quanti minoris" (xxi. 1), and tit. Cod. "De aedilitiis actionibus" (iv. 58).

SECTION 50.—CONSUETUDE, PROFESSIONAL JURISPRUDENCE, AND RES JUDICATAE¹

Great as may be the difficulty experienced by philosophical jurists in defining the ground of the authority of consuetudinary law, there is no room to dispute the importance of its contributions to every system of jurisprudence, ancient or modern. The men who first drew, accepted, and endorsed a bill of exchange did as much for the law as any lawgiver has ever accomplished. They may or may not have acted on the advice of jurists; but, whether or not, they began a practice which grew into custom, and as such was recognised by the tribunals as a law-creating one,—one conferring rights and imposing obligations.² There is much of this—far more probably than is commonly imagined—in the history of every system of law.

In Rome the process was sometimes wonderfully expeditious; witness what Justinian narrates of the introduction and recognition of testamentary trusts and codicils to last wills, both in the time of Augustus.³ It can hardly be doubted that the literal contract per expensilationem (p. 259 sq.) originated in the same way, probably in the end of the fifth or beginning of the sixth century. The keeping of domestic account-books may have been enjoined and enforced by the censors; but it was custom, and neither statute nor praetor's edict, that made an entry in them to another person's debit creative of a claim against the latter for certa pecunia credita, that might be made effectual by an action under the Silian law (§ 40). It must have been in exactly the same way that mutuum, formless loan of money, came to be regarded as the third variety of certa credita pecunia, and to be held recoverable by the same sort of action. True, this could not have been attained without the co-operation of the courts. But then those courts were composed each of a single private citizen, whose office ended with his judgment in the particular case remitted to him, and who was untrammelled by the authority of any series rerum judicatarum.⁴ He had simply to decide whether in his view expensilation or formless loan created such an obligation as was covered by the words pecuniam dari oportere. There may for a time have been a divergent practice, contradictory findings, as Cicero says there were in his day upon the question whether aequitas or jus strictum was to be applied to the determination of certain matters; but the gradual ascendancy and eventual unanimity of judicial opinion in the affirmative was but the expression of the general sentiment of the citizens of whom the judices were the representatives.

¹ [See Inst. i. 2, 9; and, generally, on this section Voigt, Röm. RG. i. §§ 18-22.]

² [Apparently the author does not here mean to say that the Romans understood the nature of Bills of Exchange. But though it has been usual to attribute the origin of these negotiable instruments to the necessities of merchants in the Middle Ages, there is reason for thinking that something like them was known to the Romans. Jhering expresses a strong opinion to this effect and finds in the actio receptitia the means by which they were made effectual, an action which Justinian (Cod. iv. 18, 2) abolished, though to a certain extent transferring its characteristics to the action de constituta pecunia. Jhering, Geist, iv. pp. 218-221. See Cic. Ad Att. xv. 15, 4; Kuntze, Excuse, p. 496; Karlowa, Röm. RG. ii. p. 758 sq. As to the use of Bills of Exchange among the Greeks, see Theureau, "Notice sur le prêt à intérêt," in Nouv. Rev. Hist. 1893, p. 708.]

³ Just. Inst. ii. 23, 1; ii. 25, pr.

These are but examples of the way in which consuetudinary law was constructed. It required the combined action of the laity and the judices, both at times acting under professional advice. In some cases even that of the praetors was necessary. It would have been impossible, for instance, to have introduced the consensual contracts into the Roman system, and determined what were the obligations they imposed on either side, without magisterial co-operation in framing the formulae that were to be submitted to the judges. Taking the action on sale as an illustration, the formula substantially was this:—"It being averred that the defendant sold such or such a thing to the plaintiff, whatever, Judge, it shall appear that the defendant ought in good faith to give to or do for the plaintiff in respect thereof, in that (or rather its equivalent in money) condemn the defendant; otherwise, acquit him." It is very manifest that the free hand here given to the judge must immensely have facilitated the reception of customary doctrine into the law. The judge was to a great extent the spokesman of the forum; his judgment was formed in accordance with current public opinion, which he had ample opportunity of gauging; it was the reflection of that general sentiment of right, which, phrase it how we may, is the real basis of all customary law. And so in an action for establishing a right of property in a res nec mancipi. The formula was very simple:—"If it appear that such or such a thing belongs to the plaintiff in quiritary right, should the defendant refuse to restore it on your order, then, Judge, whatever be its value for the plaintiff, in that condemn the defendant; should it appear otherwise, acquit him." The primary duty of a judge on such a remit was to determine whether the title on which the plaintiff founded his pretensions gave him a right that came up to property; and it can hardly be disputed that it was by the decisions of a series of judges, in a series of such actions, that the long list of natural modes of acquiring property given by Justinian under technical names was gradually brought into view. Those decisions, whether upon the obligations of a vendor, direct or indirect, or upon the sufficiency of a title founded on by a party averring a right of property by natural acquisition, may in many cases have been arrived at under professional advice, and were in all cases embodied in judgments. But that does not in the least deprive the doctrine deduced from them of its character of customary law. It was not until the empire that the opinions of the jurists submitted to a judge (responsa prudentium, see § 59) were invested with quasi-legislative authority. During the republic, if a judge deferred to them, it was simply because he regarded them as in consonance with well-qualified public opinion; and what a series of consistent judgments of this sort built up was in the strictest sense a law based on consuetude.⁵

⁴ It was not until the empire that a "series rerum perpetuo similiter judicatarum," a uniform series of precedents, was held to be law. [Dig. i. 3, fr. 38.] During the republic a judge was much freer, and not only entitled but bound to decide according to his own notion of what was right, taking the risk of consequences if his judgment was knowingly contrary to law.

⁵ The doctrines of the classical jurists as to the necessity of longa, inveterata consuetudo, and so forth, had no application to the formative jurisprudence of the republic, and in fact refer not to general consuetude but to particular custom when founded on in derogation of the common law.

As regards the professional jurists in particular,⁶ it has already (p. 73) been observed that, according to the testimony of the historians, the law was a monopoly of the patricians down at least to the middle of the fifth century of the city. Livy goes so far as to speak of it as in penetralibus pontificum repositum,—among the secrets of the pontifical college.⁷ It undoubtedly was so to a great extent in the regal period. But after the publication of the Twelve Tables, with the letter of the law displayed before the eyes of the citizens in black and white, those words of his were true only in a qualified sense. Pomponius explains that no sooner was the decemviral legislation published than the necessity was felt for its interpretation, and for the preparation by skilled hands of styles of actions whereby its provisions might be made effectual.⁸ Both of those duties fell to the pontiffs as the only persons who, in the state of civilisation of the period, were qualified to give the assistance required; and Pomponius adds that the college annually appointed one of its members to be the adviser of private parties and of the judices in those matters. The interpretatio, commenced by the pontiffs and continued by the jurists during the republic, and which, Pomponius says, was regarded as part of the jus civile, was not confined to explanation of the words of the statute, but was in some cases their expansion, in others their limitation, and in many the deduction of new doctrines out of the actual jus scriptum, and their development and exposition.⁹

An event that did much to diminish the influence of the pontiffs in connection with the law was the divulgement in the year 450 by Cn. Flavius, secretary of Appius Claudius Caecus, and probably at his instigation, of a formulary of actions and calendar of lawful and unlawful days, which got the name of Jus Flavianum.¹⁰ The practice adopted in the ⁶ Rudorff, Röm. RG. vol. i. §§ 62-65; Sanio, Zur Geschichte der röm. Rechtswissenschaft, Königsberg, 1858; Grellet-Dumazeau, Études sur le barreau romain, 2nd ed. Paris, 1858; Danz, Gesch. d. röm. Rechts, vol. i. § 49; Karlowa, Röm. RG. i. § 61.

⁷ Liv. ix. 46, 5.

⁸ Pomp. in Dig. i. 2, fr. 2, §§ 5, 6. On the functions of the pontiffs in settling styles of actions upon the Tables, see Bekker, Aktionen, vol. i. p. 68. [Cuq, p. 145 sq.; Voigt, Röm. RG. i. p. 27.]

⁹ For illustrations, see Voigt, Jus. nat. etc. vol. iii. pp. 287-294.

¹⁰ Liv. ix. 46; Gell. vii. 9; Pomp. l.c. § 7; [Cic. Pro Mur. c. 11].

beginning of the sixth century by Tiberius Coruncanius, the first plebeian chief pontiff, of giving advice in law in public,¹¹ had a still greater effect in popularising it; and the Jus Aelianum, some fifty years later, made it as much the heritage of the laity as of the pontifical college.¹² From this time onwards there was a series of jurists (prudentes), gradually increasing in number and eminence, of whom a list is given by Pomponius, and many of whom are signalised by Cicero, particularly in his Orator and Brutus.¹³ They occupied themselves in giving advice to clients, teaching,¹⁴ pleading at the bar, framing styles of contracts, testaments, and various other deeds of a legal character, or writing commentaries or shorter treatises on different branches of the law. Among them may be mentioned the two Catos,—M. Porcius Cato Censorius, who wrote some commentaries on the jus civile, and his son, M. Porcius Cato Licinianus, the author of a famous doctrine in the law of legacies known as the regula Catoniana; ¹⁵ M. Junius Brutus, who wrote three books de jure civili; M. Manilius, whose styles of con-

¹¹ Cic. De Orat. iii. 33, § 134; Pomp. l.c. §§ 35, 38.

¹² This was a compilation by Sext. Aelius Paetus, consul 556, censor 560, containing the XII Tables, the interpretatio down to date, and styles adapted to the legis actiones (which, the Aebutian law notwithstanding, were still largely in use); it seems also to have borne the name of Tripertita, from its threefold contents. See Pomp. l.c. §§ 7, 38; Voigt, Ueber das Aelius- und Sabinus-System, Leipsic, 1875, [and, for criticism of Voigt's view, Cuq, p. 474, n. 5.]

¹³ It is remarkable that Cicero himself is not mentioned by Pomponius except for his oratory (l.c. § 43), which does not say much for the estimation in which he was held as a jurist by his successors of the empire. Yet Gellius (i. 22, § 7) says he was the author of a book on the scientific treatment of the law—De jure civili in artem redigendo (on which see Dirksen, Hinterlassene Schriften, Leipsic, 1871, vol. i. p. 1 sq.). [On Cicero's title to be ranked among the jurists, a topic frequently discussed, see Voigt, Röm. RG. i. p. 227, n. 22.]

¹⁴ Until about the middle of the seventh century the instruction a young man got in law after leaving school seems usually to have been acquired by attending the daily consultations of patrons of repute, by whom a great gathering of auditores as well as clients was regarded as an honourable distinction (Cic. Orator, 42, § 143). But after that some of the jurists seem to have been in the regular practice of devoting part of their time to more direct teaching,—either institutio in the general principles of the law, or instructio in its details. Pomponius (l.c. § 43) says of Servius Sulpicius that, while he heard (audiit) several lawyers of eminence—i.e. attended their consultations, he was instituted by Lucilius Balbus and instructed by Aquilius Gallus.

¹⁵ Tit. Dig. de regula Catoniana, xxxiv. 7. [See Roby, Introduction, p. xcv.]

tracts of sale are celebrated by Cicero, Varro, and Gellius; the three Scaevolae,¹⁶—Quintius Mucius, the augur, who in his old age gave Cicero and his friend Atticus their first lessons in law, Publius Mucius, his cousin,¹⁷ and, greatest of the three, Quintus Mucius, the son of Publius, who, Pomponius says, first wrote systematically on the jus civile, arranging it in eighteen books,¹⁸ from which a few extracts are incorporated in Justinian's Digest; P. Rutilius Rufus, the author of the bankruptcy procedure described by Gaius;¹⁹ C. Aquilius Gallus, who devised the actio and exceptio de dolo, and the Aquilian stipulation;²⁰ Servius Sulpicius Rufus, frequently mentioned by Gaius and Justinian, regarded by his contemporaries as the greatest jurist of his time, and after Cicero the greatest orator;²¹ Aulus Ofilius, a scholar of Servius's, and intimate friend of Caesar's, who wrote at some length on the praetor's edict;²² Alfenus Varus, also a scholar of Servius's, whose works are largely quoted and cited in Justinian's Digest;²³ and Aelius Gallus, author of a treatise De Verborum quae ad jus civile pertinent significatione, which must have been very welcome when the Roman law was penetrating into provinces in which the Latin language was strange.²⁴

¹⁶ See Schneider, Die drei Scaevola Ciceros, Munich, 1871.

¹⁷ [See Roby, Introduction, p. xcviii.]

¹⁸ Pomp. l.c. § 41. [The Florentine Index includes a book of definitions, δπων, of this Scaevola.]

¹⁹ Gai. iii. 77-79.

²⁰ Cic. De Off. iii. 14, § 60; De Nat. Deor. iii. 30, § 74; Just. Inst. iii. 29, 2. See Appendix, note H in fine.

²¹ See Cic. Brutus, 40-42. Pomponius (l.c. §§ 43, 44) says he was the author of nearly 180 books on different branches of the law, but only two very short ones on the Edict,—the first that were written on that subject.

²² Pomp. l.c. § 44. On his connection with Julius Caesar's contemplated digest of the law, see Sanio, Rechtshistorische Abhandl. u. Studien (Königsberg, 1845), pp. 68-126.

²³ Many of the quotations and citations are from an epitome of the Digesta of Alfenus by Julius Paulus.

²⁴ On the writings of the jurists of the republic generally, see Sanio, Zur Geschichte d. röm. Rechtswissenschaft, Königsberg, 1858; Roby, Introduction, chaps. vii. and viii.; Ferrini, Fonti, p. 20 sq.

CHAPTER III

SUBSTANTIVE CHANGES IN THE LAW DURING THE PERIOD

SECTION 51.—CITIZENS, LATINS, AND PEREGRINS

As may be gathered from what has been said in preceding sections, the extension of the benefits of the law to non-citizens was one of the most prominent features of its progress during the latter half of the republic. Before the end of it the number of the citizens had been vastly augmented by the admission to the franchise of almost all the inhabitants of Italy. There were no longer any non-citizens who, as a class, enjoyed conubium and commercium with Rome, as the Latins and some others of her allies had done at an earlier period (p. 107). But there was now between citizenship and peregrinity an intermediate condition known as latinitas or jus Latii, which gave those who enjoyed it commercium but not conubium. It seems to have originated in connection with some of the Latin colonies, which, for political reasons, were not favoured to the full extent with the rights, public and private, previously enjoyed by the nomen Latinum. Some communities in Transpadan Gaul got this new jus Latii in 665, and retained it until they acquired full citizenship; certain Italian, and particularly Etruscan, municipia had it substituted for citizenship in 673; and Caesar from time to time extended it to other communities in Transpadan Gaul, Spain, and Gallia Narbonensis. By the end of the republic it had ceased to exist in Italy, but was pretty widely spread in the western provinces. One of the advantages it conferred on the inhabitants of municipia enjoying it (who still continued to be called latini coloniarii) was, that there were many ways in which, by their own act, they could attain the full dignity of Roman citizens. Non-latin peregrins could not do so; and they were in an inferior position to the latini in that they could take no part in a transaction with the copper and the scales, no matter for what purpose employed, nor be parties to a stipulation conceived in the solemn form of sponsio, or a literal contract in its strictest form. But these disadvantages were every day becoming of less and less moment; for the ordinary transactions of trade and commerce were being rapidly denuded of any peculiarities they had derived from the old jus civile, and remodelled in such a way as to make them available alike to citizen and non-citizen.

SECTION 52.—THE LAW OF PROPERTY AND THE PUBLICIAN EDICT¹

There were necessarily many changes during the period in the law both of property and minor real rights. A variety of natural grounds of ownership were recognised by the judges to whom the question was referred whether or not a res nec Mancipi belonged to the party claiming it in a vindication.² The favour shown to peregrins cannot have stopped short of allowing them a right of property at all events in movables, even though it may not have been dominium ex jure Quiritium.³ Land in the provinces belonged to the state, its occupants having strictly no more than a right of usufruct or possession;⁴

¹ See Ribéreau, Théorie de l'in bonis habere ou de la propriété prétorienne, Paris, 1867; Voigt, Jus nat. etc. vol. iv. app. xxi. p. 470 sq.; Huschke, Das Recht der Publicianischen Klage, Stuttgart, 1874; Schulin (rev. Huschke), in Krit. VJSchr. vol. xviii. (1876), p. 526 sq.; Lenel, Beiträge, p. 1 sq.; Appleton, 'De la Publicienne et de l'utilis vindicatio,' Nouv. Rev. Hist. vol. ix. (1885), p. 481 sq., vol. x. (1886), p. 276 sq. [Appleton, Histoire de la propriété prétorienne, Paris, 1889; Audibert, Nouv. Rev. Hist. vol. xiv. (1890), pp. 269-297.]

² [These must have been recognised as de facto grounds of ownership in the earlier republic, though not recognised as a title for vindication by any legis actio.]

³ Arg. Frag. Dosithei, § 12 (in Coll. libror. Jur. Antejust. vol. ii. p. 154).

⁴ Gai. ii. 7, 21. Under the empire certain favoured districts had a concession of what was called jus Italicum, which, inter alia, rendered immovables within them susceptible of dominium ex jure Quiritium, and of being acquired and transmitted by Roman modes of conveyance. On this subject see Savigny, yet the tenure was popularly spoken of as dominium, and protected by what was called a vindication.⁵ Usucapion was no longer the result of prolonged possession pure and simple (p. 139), but now subject to the condition that the usucapient had acquired in good faith on a sufficient title, though he had either unwittingly derived his right from one who was not owner or not in a position to alienate, or else had neglected the proper form of conveyance.⁶ The list of praedial servitudes was greatly increased, as witness the enumeration in Cicero's list of the questions proper for the centumviral court;⁷ and it was probably in the provinces, where the civil forms of constituting such rights were inapplicable, that the governors in their edicts first sanctioned their creation by pacts and stipulations,—agreements fortified with stipulatory penalties in the event of the grantor or his heirs impeding the grantee or his successors in the exercise of the right conferred.⁸ In the matter of real securities the fiducia (p. 134) was still extensively employed; but alongside it had been introduced the pignus or pledge,—informal delivery of a movable by or for a debtor to his creditor, to be held by the latter until the debt was paid,⁹ and the hypothec or mortgage by simple Verm. Schr. vol. i. p. 29 sq.; Beaudouin, in the Nouv. Rev. Hist. vol. v. (1881), pp. 145 sq. 592 sq., vol. vi. (1882), p. 684 sq.; Heisterbergk, Name u. Begriff d. Jus Italicum, Tübingen, 1885.

⁵ Vat. Frag. 315, 316. [Under the empire acquirers of such lands were also probably protected by an actio Publiciana. In practice provincials were allowed to hold their lands subject to a sort of eminent domain by the state. See Lenel, Ed. perp. p. 148. Cf. Mitteis, Reichsrecht, p. 91.]

⁶ There is no direct proof that this change took place during the republic; but it may be inferred from the requirements of the Publician action.

⁷ Cic. De Orat. i. 38, § 173; [supra, p. 176, n. 14].

⁸ Dig. xlv. 1, fr. 85, § 3. This mode of constituting a servitude looks as if it were the creation of nothing more than a personal obligation; but the resulting right was really regarded as a jus in re. The recognition of usus et patientia as a sufficient ground on which to maintain a servitude dates only from the second century of the empire, when the possibility was admitted of the quasi-tradition and quasi-possession of an incorporeal. [Cf. Girard, p. 365.]

⁹ That for a long time impignoration was in practice confined to movables can hardly be doubted; for reasons, see Dernburg, Pfandrecht, vol. i. (Leipzig, 1860), p. 46. The language of Gaius (Dig. l. 16, 238, § 2) shows that even in his time some jurists were of opinion that the word pignus could not be appropriately applied to an immovable; but with the substantial assimilation of the pignus and hypotheca in the later law, the notion gradually lost ground, and is expressly disclaimed by Justinian (Inst. iv. 6, § 7).

agreement without possession,—imported from Greece and very alien to Roman legal principles, but so manifestly convenient that, though originally limited to the conventional right of a landlord over the slaves, beasts, and implements of his farm tenant in security of the rent, it was soon extended to creditors generally, whatever the nature of their claims.

But the most important change in the law of property during the period was that effected by the Publician edict,¹⁰ indirectly recognising the validity (1) of what Theophilus calls bonitary ownership as an actual though inferior ownership of res Mancipi, and (2) of what got the name of bonae fidei possessio as a fictitious ownership of either res Mancipi or res nec Mancipi, valid against all the world except the true dominus. The accounts we possess of this edict are somewhat inconsistent and even contradictory; the explanation may be that it went through a process of amendment and expansion at the hands of successive praetors, and that eventually it may have had more than one section, without our always being able to say to which of them the criticism of a particular commentator is directed. But there is no doubt of its general tendency,—of the defects it was meant to correct and the way in which the correction was accomplished.

One of the defects was this,—that if a man had taken a transfer of a res Mancipi from its rightful owner, but simply by tradition instead of mancipation or cession in court, he did not acquire dominium ex jure Quiritium, and the transferrer remained legally undivested. The result was that the latter was in law entitled to raise a rei vindicatio and oust the transferee, whose money he might have in his pocket; while if a third party had obtained possession of the thing, but in such a way as not to be amenable to an interdict, the transferee could have no effectual vindication against him, not being in a position to aver or prove dominium ex jure Quiritium. The first difficulty was overcome by the exceptio rei venditae et traditae, also a praetorian remedy, and probably older than the Publician;¹¹ to the transferrer's vindication on the strength of his unextinguished quiritary right, the transferee pleaded sale and delivery as an effectual praetorian defence.¹² But when a third party was in possession, and the transferee by simple delivery had to take the initiative, the position was more complicated. Such third party might be in perfect good faith; he might even have acquired from the original transferrer, and fortified his acquisition with a formal conveyance. But that was no sufficient reason in equity why he should be allowed to defeat the prior right of the original transferee, who, if he had possessed for the requisite period of usucapion before the third party came upon the scene, would have cured the defect of the informal delivery and acquired an unassailable quiritary right. So the praetor announced in his edict that if a man came to him and represented that he had bought a res Mancipi from its owner, and had had it delivered to him, but had lost possession within the period of usucapion, he (the praetor) would allow him a vindication embodying a fiction of usucapion, with which he might proceed either against the transferrer or any third party withholding the thing in question.

¹⁰ There was a M. Publicius Malleolus praetor about 519, and a Q. Publicius praetor about 687. The latter was praetor the year before Aquilius Gallus, who, Cicero says, invented the formulae de dolo. It is hardly credible that the Publician action should have preceded these by more than a century and a half. See Pernice, Labeo, ii. (2nd ed.) p. 340, n. 4. [The praetor mentioned by Cicero, Pro Cluent. 45, can hardly have been the author, as he was praetor peregrinus. Appleton, Histoire de la propriété prélorienne, vol. i. p. 34, holds that the action must have been a good deal older than Cicero, and probably introduced towards the end of the sixth century. Consult also upon the nature of the edict generally, Lenel, Palingenesia, ii. p. 511; Cuq, p. 507 sq.; Girard, pp. 341-345; Erman, in Z. d. Sav. Stift. xi. p. 212 sq.]

The instruction to the judge in such a case, instead of being in the simple and straightforward words—"If it appear that the thing in question belongs to the plaintiff in quiritarian right" (p. 245), ran thus: "Supposing the plaintiff to have possessed for the requisite period of usucapion the thing in question, which he says he bought and got delivery of,—if in that case it would appear to you that said thing belongs to the plaintiff in quiritary right," and so on.¹³ The publication of such an edict and the formula of the action based upon it—which, though of praetorian origin, was in many respects dealt with as an actio juris civilis and just a variety of the rei vindicatio—had the same effect as if the legislature had directly enacted that in future delivery of a res Mancipi in pursuance of a sale or other good cause¹⁴ should straightway confer a right of ownership in it, even before usucapion had been completed. Till then, however, the transferee was not quiritary owner; the thing in question was only in bonis, “of his belongings”; the legal title, though a very empty one,—nudum jus Quiritium,¹⁵—remained in the transferrer;¹⁶ it was only with the completion of the usucapion that it became the transferee’s pleno jure.¹⁷ The inevitable result of the recognition of this tenure in bonis was that mancipation came to be regarded in many cases as an unnecessary formality, and the marvel is that it continued to hold its ground at all. The explanation may be that it afforded a substratum for and gave force of law to the leges nuncupatae that accompanied the negotium per aes et libram (p. 133); and although many of these might quite well be thrown into the form of stipulations, yet there were others that it may have been thought safer to leave to take effect under the provisions of the earlier law.

¹¹ It must have been older than the general exceptio doli; for if this had been in existence the special one would have been unnecessary.

¹² [Or if the transferrer had re-acquired possession the transferee could sue him, and could paralyse his defence of justum dominium, if the praetor allowed it at all, by the reply of res vendita et tradita.]

¹³ This is a free rendering of the formula as given by Gaius (iv. 36), in order

The second case that was met by the Publician edict—whether as originally published or by an amendment of it cannot be determined¹⁸—was that of the bona fide transferee to distinguish the matter of fiction from that which had to be established by proof,—the sale and delivery, the ownership of the seller, etc. It is noteworthy that Gaius says nothing of bona fides on the part of the plaintiff, although in his time it was undoubtedly required; from which Pernice (Labeo, vol. ii. 2nd ed. p. 340 sq.) conjectures that it was not mentioned in the edict.

¹⁴ While sale alone was mentioned in the edict, all other titles of ownership were brought within it by interpretation. [See Cuq, p. 511; Girard, p. 341, n. 3.]

¹⁵ Gai. i. 54, iii. 166.

¹⁶ He ceased to have any beneficial interest in what he had transferred (Gai. ii. 83, iii. 166). But, under the rules of the early empire, it was only the quiritarian owner that could so effectually manumit a slave as to make him a citizen (Gai. i. 17; Ulp. i. 16); and it was he, and not the bonitarian manumitter, that became tutor of a non-citizen freedman who was a pupil, or a freedwoman of any age (Gai. i. 167; Ulp. xi. 19). [So it was he alone that could bequeath a legacy per vindicationem, Gai. ii. 196.]

¹⁷ Gai. ii. 41.

¹⁸ [Appleton, in the work above cited, i. p. 49, and Girard, p. 341, n. 3, affirm the unity of the action and edict, but opinions vary. Cf. Lenel, as in n. 1 supra.]

of a thing by purchase or other sufficient title, who, having lost possession of it before usucapion, found to his cost that the transferrer had not been its owner, that no ownership therefore had been transmitted to him (the transferee), and that consequently he was not in a position to raise a vindication with its averment of dominium ex jure Quiritium.¹⁹ As against the true owner, whose property had been disposed of by a stranger behind his back, there would have been no equity in giving him an action; but as against all the world except the true owner his "better right" was recognised by the praetor,²⁰ who accorded to him also a vindication proceeding on a fiction of completed usucapion; for usucapion cured the defect of his title, just as it did that of the bonitarian owner. In this way the praetors introduced that bonae fidei possessio which was worked out with much skill by the jurists of the early empire, and which assumed very large proportions in the Justinianian law when the term of prescription had been greatly prolonged, and the difficulty of proving property (as distinguished from bonae fidei possession) consequently very much increased.

SECTION 53.—DEVELOPMENT OF THE LAW OF CONTRACT¹

It is impossible within reasonable limits in such a sketch as this to indicate a tithe of the amendments that were effected on the law of obligations during the period whose distinguishing features were the rise of a jus gentium and the construction of the praetor's edict. In every branch of it there was an advance not by steps but by strides; in that of obligations arising from contract, of those arising from delict, and of those arising from facts and circumstances, such

¹⁹ This case is the only one alluded to by Justinian (Inst. iv. 6, 4). He had abolished the distinction between quiritarian and bonitarian property, and so it was unnecessary for him to mention the other. [See Digest, vi. 2, 1 pr., where the words "non a domino" inserted in the edict are probably a Tribonianism.]

²⁰ [It would not, however, prevail against another acquirer from the same author whose conveyance was prior in date, nor apparently against one who acquired from a different author, Dig. vi. 2, fr. 9, § 4; Girard, p. 344.]

¹ See Bekker, Akt. vol. i. chaps. 5-8, and app. D, E, F, and vol. ii. chaps. 15, 16; Voigt, Jus nat. etc. vol. iii. §§ 106-124, and vol. iv. app. xix. xxi. [add Buckler, Contract in Roman Law].

as unjustifiable enrichment at another person's cost.² The law of suretyship, in its three forms of sponsio, fidepromissio, and fidejussio, received considerable attention, and formed the subject of a series of legislative enactments for limiting a surety's liability;³ while that of agency, which was sparingly admitted in Rome, had a valuable contribution from the praetorian edict, in the recognition of a man's liability more or less qualified for the contractual debts of his filiifamilias and slaves, as also, and without qualification, for the debts properly contracted of persons, whether domestically subject to him or not, who were managing a business on his account, or whom he had placed in command of a ship belonging to him.⁴ The development of the law in the matter of obligations generally was greatly facilitated by the praetorian simplification of procedure and introduction of new forms of actions; the instruction to a judge—"Whatever in respect thereof the defendant ought to give to or do for the plaintiff, in that condemn him," preceded by a statement of the cause of action, giving wide scope for the recognition of new sources of liability.

The origin of the verbal contract of stipulation⁵ and its actionability under the Silian and Calpurnian laws have been treated of in previous sections (§§ 39-41). It was theoretically a formal contract, i.e. creative of obligation on the strength of the formal question and answer interchanged by the parties, even though no substantial ground of debt might underlie it.⁶ But in time it became the practice to introduce words—the single word recte was enough—excluding liability in case of malpractice (clausula doli); and finally even that became unnecessary when the praetors had introduced the general exceptio

² Such obligations—usually imposing the duty of restitution of unjustifiable gains—filled a considerable space in the practice and doctrine of the period, and early gave rise to a variety of brocards, e.g. "Nemo cum alterius damno lucrari debet," "Nemo damnum sentire debet per lucrum alterius," etc.

³ See Gai. iii. §§ 118-127.

⁴ See Gai. iv. §§ 69-74.

⁵ See the literature on Stipulation in § 39, note 1.

⁶ E.g. if A promised B (spondes? spondeo) a certain sum, B was entitled to action for it, although it might have been the price of a thing sold which B had not delivered. But as a stipulation might at all times be conditional or subject to a limitation of time, a purchaser in such a case as this could easily protect himself by making his promise conditional on delivery.

doli, pleadable as an equitable defence to any personal action. And it was essentially productive only of unilateral obligation, i.e. the respondent in the interrogatory alone incurred liability; if mutual obligations were intended, it was necessary that each should promise for his own part, with the result that two contracts were executed which were perfectly independent. Originally the only words that could be employed were spondes? on the one side, spondeo on the other; and in this form the contract was juris civilis and competent only to citizens (and non-citizens enjoying commercium?).⁷ In time the words promittis? promitto, came to be used alternatively. They were not new words in the law; for the expression dicta et promissa had long been familiar in reference to the assurances given by a party transferring a thing by mancipation.⁸ They seem, eventually at least, to have been competent to peregrins as well as citizens; although that may not have been until the stipulation had become of daily use amongst the former in the still simpler phraseology dabis? dabo, facies? faciam.

Originally competent only for the creation of an obligation to pay a definite sum of money, and afterwards one for delivery of a specific thing other than money, the contract came in time, by the simplification of the words of interrogatory and response, the substitution of the conditions of the formular system for the legis actiones of the Silian and Calpurnian laws, and the introduction of the actio ex stipulatu to meet cases of indefinite promise, to be adaptable to any sort of unilateral engagement, whether initiated by it or only confirmed. No better illustration of its capabilities could be desired than the general stipulation formulated by Aquilius Gallus as the precursor of an equally general formal release by acceptilation: "Whatever on any ground you are, or will be, or ought to be bound to give to or do for me, now or at a future date; whatever I am or shall be in a position to claim from you by any sort of process; whatever of mine you have, hold, or possess, or would be in possession of but for your fraud in parting with it,—of whatever may be the value of all these do you promise to pay me the amount in money?"⁹ It was of immense service too outside the ordinary range of contract in what were called necessary (in contradistinction to voluntary) stipulations. For example, if a man complained that the safety of his house was endangered by the ruinous condition of that of his neighbour, the latter was required under serious penalties to give his stipulatory undertaking that no damage should result; a tutor before entering on office had to give his cautio (as such a necessary stipulation was technically called) that his pupil's estate should not be diminished in his hands; an attorney appearing in a litigation could be required to give his cautio to the other side that his principal would ratify his procedure; a usufructuary before entering on the enjoyment of his life-interest had in the same way to give security to the reversioner against waste, and so forth (p. 349).¹⁰ In all directions advantage was taken of the stipulation to bind a man by formal contract either to do or refrain from doing what in many cases he might already be bound ipso jure to do or abstain from doing; and that because of the simplicity of the remedy—an action on his stipulation—that would lie against him in the event of his failure.

⁷ It is said that this restriction of the sponsio to citizens must in time have been given up, as, though mentioned by Gaius (iii. §§ 93, 119, 179), it is not noticed by any of the later jurists. But Caracalla's extension of citizenship to all the free inhabitants of the empire is probably sufficient to explain the omission. A further peculiarity of the word spondes was that when used by a surety it did not bind his heir (Gai. iii. 120, iv. 113).

⁸ See supra, p. 133. For the probable connection of the words with the dextrae promissio in an appeal to Fides, see supra, § 12, note 2.

A second form of contract that came into use to a considerable extent in the latter half of the republic is what is commonly called the literal contract or, as Gaius phrases it with greater accuracy, the nomen transscripticium.¹¹ Notwithstanding the prolific literature of which it has been the subject, it must be admitted that in many points our knowledge of it is incomplete and uncertain. The prevalent opinion, formed before the discovery of the Verona MS. had made known Gaius's description of it, and almost universally adhered to ever since, is that such contracts were created by entries in the account-books which the censors insisted that all citizens of any means should keep with scrupulous regularity. They are often alluded to by the lay-writers; but the text principally relied on is what remains of Cicero's speech for the player Roscius. The latter had been sued by Fannius in an actio certae creditae pecuniae for 50,000 sesterces, with the usual one-third more by way of penalty.¹² Cicero's argument was that as certa credita pecunia could arise only from loan, stipulation, or expensilation (a popular name for literal contract), and neither of the two first was averred, the ground of action must have been the last. "But where," he proceeded, "is the evidence of it? Fannius has produced his adversaria (journal, day-book, or memorandum-book), which are useless for such a purpose; but as for his codices accepti et expensi (records of receipt and expenditure), which might have been received as proof of debt due by Roscius, not a single entry relating to the matter has been posted in them during these three years." On this, supplemented by various incidental remarks elsewhere, the conclusion has been formed that a citizen who made an entry in his codex—whether of the nature of a cash-book or a ledger is much disputed—to the debit of another, thereby made the latter his debtor for a sum recoverable by an actio certae creditae pecuniae.

⁹ Just. Inst. iii. 29, 2.

¹⁰ See a variety of such stipulations, praetorian and judicial, in Just. Inst. iii. tit. 18. Also infra, p. 349 sq.

¹¹ Literature: Savigny, "Ueber den Literalcontract der Römer" (originally 1816, with additions in 1849), in his Verm. Schriften, vol. i. p. 205 sq.; Keller, in Sell's Jahrb. f. hist. u. dogm. Bearbeit. des röm. Rechts, vol. i. (1841), p. 93 sq.; Gneist, Die formellen Verträge d. röm. Rechts (Berlin, 1845), p. 321 sq.; Heimbach, Die Lehre vom Creditum (Leipzig, 1849), p. 309 sq.; Pagenstecher, De literar. obligatione, etc., Heidelberg, 1851; Danz, Gesch. d. röm. Rechts, vol. ii. p. 42 sq. (where there is a résumé of the earlier literature and principal theories); Gide, in Rev. de Législat. vol. iii. (1873), p. 121 sq.; Buonamici, in Arch. Giurid.

Gaius in his description of the contract¹³ does not mention the codices; but his account is not inconsistent with the notion that the entries (nomina) of which he speaks were made in them. He says that those entries were of two sorts, nomina arcaria and nomina transscripticia. The former were entries of advances in cash; and of them he observes that they did not create obligation, but only served as evidence of one already created by payment to and receipt of the money by the borrower. Of the latter he says there were two varieties,—the entry transcribed from thing to person, and that transcribed from one person to another; and that both of them were not probative merely but creative of obligation. The first was effected by a creditor (A) entering to the debit of his debtor (B) the liquidated amount of what the latter was already owing as the price of something purchased, the rent of a house leased, the value of work done, or the like. The second was effected by A transcribing B's debt to the debit of a third party (C), hitherto a debtor of B's, and who consented to the transaction; A at the same time crediting B with the sum thus booked against C, and B in his books both crediting C with it (acceptilatio) and debiting A (expensilatio).¹⁴

vol. xvi. (1876), p. 3 sq.; Gide, Études sur la Novation (Paris, 1879), p. 185 sq.; Baron, Die Conditionen (Berlin, 1881), §§ 11, 12. [See Appendix, p. 430.]

¹² Introduced by the Silian law with reference to the legis actio per conditionem (supra, § 40), and continued by the praetors in the formular actio certae creditae pecuniae which was substituted for it (Gai. iv. 13), [also iv. §§ 171, 180].

¹³ Gai. iii. 128-134.

All this at first sight seems just a series of bookkeeping operations. But it was much more than that for the Roman citizens who first had recourse to it. There was a time when sale, and lease, and the like, so long as they stood on their own merits, created no obligation enforceable at law, however much they might be binding as a duty to Fides or (as moderns would say) in the forum of conscience; to found an action they required to be clothed in some form approved by the jus civile. The nexum (§ 31) may have been one of those forms, the vendee or tenant being fictitiously dealt with as borrower of the price or rent due under his purchase or lease; the stipulation was another, the obligation to pay the price or rent being made legally binding by its embodiment in formal question and answer. But stipulation was competent only between persons who were face to face (inter praesentes), whereas expensilation was competent also as between persons located at a distance from each other (inter absentes).¹⁵ This of itself gave expensila-

¹⁴ [For a theory of Voigt's, see Appendix, Note d, p. 430.]

¹⁵ Gai. iii. 138. Many jurists are of opinion that the booking of a debt arising out of an antecedent formless transaction created a literal obligation whether the debtor authorised it or not. But this is inconsistent with the idea of contract. Gaius says nothing about the assent required from the debtor. • Theophilus, however, in his Paraphr. Inst. iii. 2, 21,—the only professional account we have of the literarum obligatio except that of Gaius,—speaks of express authority given

tion—which, originally at least, was as much a negotium juris civilis as the *sponsio*¹⁶—an advantage in some cases over stipulation. But it had also this further advantage, which was not affected by the subsequent recognition of the real and consensual contracts as productive of legal obligation on their own merits,—that it paved the way for subsequent transcription from one person to another. This latter must have been of infinite convenience in commerce, not only by enabling traders to dispense with a reserve of coin, but by obviating the risks attending the transit of money over long distances. It was this that led, as Theophilus says was the case, to the conversion even of stipulatory obligations into book-debts; it was not that thereby the creditor obtained a tighter hold over his debtor, but that an obligation was obtained from him which in a sense was negotiable and therefore more valuable.¹⁷

The evolution of the four purely consensual contracts—sale, location, partnership, and mandate—supplies matter for one of the most interesting chapters in the whole history of the law. They did not and could not all follow identically the same course; location ran most nearly parallel with sale; but partnership and mandate, from their nature, not only started at a different point from the other two, but reached the same goal with them—that of becoming productive of obligation simply on the strength of consent interchanged by the parties—by paths that were sometimes far by him. Indeed he makes the litterarum obligatio the act of the debtor himself; for he describes it as a writing at the request of the creditor, but under the hand of the debtor, whereby the latter bound himself afresh to pay a sum already due by him under a consensual, real, or verbal contract. It is quite possible that, under the empire and after the time of Gaius, such a document came to be spoken of as a litterarum obligatio; but it does not follow that it was that of the republic and early empire, as to which the account of Gaius must be preferred. We may take from Theophilus, however, that the debtor had to be a consenting party. And it is not unreasonable to suppose that in early days, before sale, etc., were actionable on their own merits, the thing sold would not be delivered, nor possession given of the house let, until authority to make the book-entry had been given.

¹⁶ See Appendix, Note H, p. 419.

¹⁷ Delegation, the substitution by a debtor of a debtor of his own in his stead, was not necessarily associated with literal obligation; for it was quite common during the empire, after the practice of keeping household account-books had died out. But there is good reason for believing that originally it was always followed by relative entries in the books of all the parties.

apart. Nevertheless a sketch of the history of the rise of the independent contract of sale may be sufficient to indicate generally some of the milestones that were successively passed by all four.¹⁸

Going back as far as history carries us, we meet with it under the names of emptio and venditio; but meaning no more than barter; for emere originally signified simply to take or acquire.¹⁹ Sheep and cattle (pecus, hence pecunia) may for a time have been a very usual article of exchange on one side; and then came raw metal weighed in the scales. But it was still exchange; instant delivery of goods on one side against simultaneous delivery of so many pounds' weight of copper on the other. With the reforms of Servius Tullius came the distinction between res Mancipi and res non Mancipi, and with it a regulated mancipation for sale and conveyance of the former (§ 13). It was still barter; but along with it arose an obligation on the part of the transferrer of the res Mancipi to warrant the transferee against eviction, —a warranty that was implied in the mancipation (p. 130). Whether this rule obtained from the first or was the growth of custom it is impossible to say; but it is in the highest degree probable that it was the XII Tables that fixed that the measure of the transferrer's liability to the transferee in the event of eviction should be double the amount of the price.²⁰ Equally impossible is it to say when the practice arose of embodying declarations, assurances, and so forth in the mancipation (leges Mancipii), which were held binding on the strength of the negotium juris civilis in which they were clothed. They received statutory sanction in the XII Tables, in the well-known words, "cum nexum faciet mancipiumque, uti lingua nuncupassit ita jus esto,"—substantially, "whatever shall by word of mouth be declared by the parties in the course of a transaction per aes et libram in definition of its terms shall be law as between them."

¹⁸ The literature on the history of the contract of sale is profuse, but mostly scattered in periodicals, and much of it very fragmentary. It may be enough to refer to Bechmann, Gesch. d. Kaufs im röm. Recht, Erlangen, 1876; three articles by Bréard, in the Nouv. Rev. Hist. vol. vi. (1882), p. 180 sq., vol. vii. (1883), p. 536 sq. and vol. viii. (1884), p. 395 sq.; and Mommsen, "Die röm. Anfänge von Kauf u. Miethe," in the Z. d. Sav. Stift. vol. vi. (1885), R.A. p. 260 sq. [Add Karlowa, Röm. RG. ii. 611-632. The reader may also be referred to Moyle, Contract of Sale in the Civil Law, Oxford, 1892, and Mackintosh, The Roman Law of Sale, Edinburgh, 1892, though these works only deal with the history of the contract incidentally.]

¹⁹ Festus, v. Redemptores (Bruns, p. 286); Paul. Diac. vv. Abemito and Emere (Bruns, pp. 262, 267).

²⁰ Paul. Sent. ii. 17, §§ 1, 3.

The substitution by the decemvirs of coined money that was to be counted for rough metal that had been weighed, converted the contribution on one side into price (pretium), as distinguished from article of purchase (merx) on the other; and sale thus became distinct from barter.²¹ In contemplation of the separation of the mancipation and the price-paying, and the degeneration of the former into a merely imaginary sale,²² they enacted that, mancipation notwithstanding, the property of what was sold should not pass to the purchaser until the price had been paid or security by sureties (vades)²³ given for it to the vendor; and it was probably by the interpretation of the pontiffs that this was added to the rule,—that until the price was paid no liability for eviction should attach to the transferrer (or auctor). The reason of the provision in the XII Tables was that a vendor who, before receiving the price, had mancipated or delivered a thing sold by him, had no action to enforce payment of the former; and in such circumstances it was thought but right to give him the opportunity of getting back the thing itself by a real action. It might be, however, that the price had been paid, and yet the vendor refused to mancipate. It was long, apparently, before the purchaser could in such a case compel him to do so. But with the introduction of the legis actio per condictionem (§ 41) he (the purchaser) had undoubtedly the power to recover the money on the ground of the vendor's unjustifiable enrichment,—that the latter had got it for a consideration which had failed (causa data causa non secuta); and it is possible that before that he had a similar remedy per judicis postulationem (§ 35).

²¹ Paul. in Dig. xviii. 1, fr. 1, pr. [Supra, p. 58.]

²² Imaginaria venditio (Gai. i. 119).

²³ Vadimonium, as the engagement of vades was called, was one of the formal contracts of the XII Tables, but went out of use at a comparatively early date. See supra, p. 144, and Gellius, xvi. 10, 8. [Consult also Cuq, Inst. Jurid. p. 382.]

Down to this point, say the beginning of the sixth century, there were three several obligations consequent on sale of a res Mancipi; but not one of them arose directly out of the sale itself, or could be enforced simply on the ground that it had taken place. The vendor was bound to support the purchaser in any action by a third party disputing his right, and to repay him the price twofold in the event of that third party's success; and he was bound, moreover, to make good to him any loss he had sustained through a deficiency of acreage he had guaranteed, non-existence of servitudes he had declared the lands enjoyed, existence of others from which he had stated they were free,²⁴ incapability of a slave for labour for which he was vouched fit, and so on. But these obligations were binding, not in virtue of the sale per se, but of the transaction per aes et libram superinduced upon it; and if the vendor had at any time to return the price on failure to mancipate what he had sold, it was not because he had committed a breach of contract, but because he had unjustly enriched himself at the purchaser's expense.²⁵

In sales of res nec Mancipi, just as in those of res Mancipi, a vendor who had been incautious enough to deliver his wares before he had been paid, or had got stipulatory security for the price, or had converted it into a book-debt, might recover them by a real action if payment was unduly delayed; while the purchaser who had paid in advance but failed to get delivery might also get back his money from the vendor on the plea of unwarrantable enrichment. But as mancipation was unnecessary for carrying the property, —as some think, incompetent [p. 137],—some other machinery had to be resorted to than that of the copper and the scales for imposing upon the vendor an obligation of warranty against eviction, defects, and so forth. It may be that, until trade began to assume considerable proportions, and when a transaction was between citizens, a purchaser was content to rely partly on the honesty of his vendor, partly on the latter's knowledge that he ran the risk of prosecution for theft if what he had sold belonged to another,²⁶ and partly on the maxim, common in all ages and climes, caveat emptor. When it was one between a citizen and a peregrin, a different set of rules may have come into play; for between them disputes were settled by recuperators (p. 210), whose decisions were arrived at very much on considerations of natural equity. It was the popularisation of the stipulation that facilitated a further advance, rendered all the more necessary by the expansion of intercourse with foreigners and the cessation of recuperation.

²⁴ Cicero says (De Off. iii. 16, § 65) that, though by the XII Tables it was enough if a vendor per aes et libram made good his positive assurances (uti lingua nuncupasset ita jus esto), the jurists held him responsible for reticence about burdens or defects he ought to have revealed, and liable in a poena dupli exactly as if he had guaranteed their non-existence.

²⁵ [Cf. Girard, p. 281.]

We read of a satisfactio secundum Mancipium, a stipulatio habere licere, and a stipulatio duplae. The nature of the first is obscure; it seems to have been connected with mancipatory sales, and probably to have been the guarantee of a sponsor for the liabilities imposed upon the vendor by the transaction per aes et libram and the verba nuncupata that were covered by it.²⁷ The stipulation habere licere occurs in Varro, in a collection of styles of sales of sheep, cattle, etc., some of which he says were abridgments of those of M. Manilius, who was consul in the year 605.²⁸ It was the guarantee of the vendor of a res nec Mancipi, or even of a res Mancipi sold without mancipation, that the purchaser should have peaceable enjoyment of what he had bought; it entitled him to reparation on eviction, measured not by any fixed standard but according to the loss he had sustained. It cannot have been introduced, therefore, until after the lex Aebutia and the formulation by the praetor of the actio ex stipulatu (p. 337). The idea of the stipulatio duplae may have been borrowed from the duplum incurred by a vendor on the eviction of a purchaser acquiring a thing by mancipation; for one of its earliest manifestations was in the edict of the curule aediles (p. 242), who insisted on it from persons selling slaves,²⁹ probably because the dealers were for the most part foreigners, and therefore unable to complete their sales per aes et libram. Judging from Varro, it was a form of stipulation against eviction that in his time was used only in sales of slaves;³⁰ although he adds that by agreement of parties it might be limited to a simplum.

²⁶ "In rebus mobilibus . . . qui alienam rem vendidit et tradidit furtum committit" (Gai. ii. 50).

²⁷ [Cf. Karlowa, Röm. RG. ii. 622.]

²⁸ Varro, De R. R. ii. 2, §§ 5, 6, ii. 5, § 11 (Bruns, p. 310). There are other styles in other parts of book ii. applicable to sales of swine, goats, donkeys, etc., which Bruns has not extracted; the two noted above refer to sales of sheep and oxen.

We learn from the same writer—what is also indicated in various passages of Plautus—that the vendor at the same time and in the body of the same stipulation guaranteed that the sheep or cattle he was selling were healthy and of a healthy stock and free from faults, and that the animals had not done any mischief for which their owner could be held liable in a noxal action; and similarly that a slave sold was healthy and not chargeable for any theft or other offence for which the purchaser might have to answer. If any of those guarantees turned out fallacious, the purchaser had an actio ex stipulatu against the vendor: “Whereas the plaintiff got from the defendant a stipulation that certain sheep he bought from him were healthy, etc. [repeating the words of guarantee], and that he, the plaintiff, should be free to hold them (habere licere), whatever it shall appear that the defendant ought in respect thereof to give to or do for the plaintiff, in the value thereof, Judge, condemn him; otherwise, acquit him.” It is an observation of Bekker’s³¹ that the actio empti in its original shape was just a simplification of the actio ex stipulatu on a vendor’s guarantees; the stipulations to which allusion has been made had become such unfailing accompaniments of a sale as to be matters of legal presumption; the result being that the words “whereas the plaintiff bought from the defendant the sheep about which this action has arisen,” were substituted in the demonstratio (as the introductory clause of the formula was called) for the detailed recital of what had been stipulated. Bekker justifies this by reference to the language of Varro,³² who seems to include under the words ²⁹ Ulp. in Dig. xxi. 2, fr. 37, § 1.

³⁰ De R. R. ii. 10, 5 (Bruns, p. 311), compared with his styles for sales of sheep and other animals.

³¹ Bekker, Aktionen, vol. i. p. 158.

³² See Bekker, l.c. p. 157, note 72.

emptio venditio not merely the agreement to buy and sell but also the stipulations that usually went with it.

The introduction of an actio empti in this shape, however, was far from the recognition of sale as a purely consensual contract. If the price was not paid at once, the purchaser gave his promissio for it, or got some one on whom the vendor placed more reliance to do so for him,⁸³ or else the vendor made a book-debt of it; and if it had to be sued for, it was in all those cases by a condictio certi, and not by an action on the sale. If the price was paid but the thing purchased not delivered, the only remedy open to the purchaser was to get back his money by the same condictio; unless, indeed, the guarantee habere licere was held to cover delivery, in which case the purchaser might obtain damages in an actio ex stipulatu under the name of actio empti. But this actio empti, whether insisted in on the ground of non-delivery, eviction, or breach of some other warranty, was really an action on the verbal contracts that had accompanied the sale,—a stricti juris action, in which the judge could not travel beyond the letter of the engagements of the purchaser. In the latter years of the republic, and probably from the time of Q. Mucius Scaevola,⁸⁴ it was a bonae fidei action. How had the change come about? A single case of hardship may have been sufficient to induce it, such as the defeat of a claim for damages for eviction on the ground that the stipulatory guarantee had been accidentally overlooked. Says Ulpian,—“As the stipulatio duplae is a thing of universal observance, action on the ground of eviction will lie ex empto if perchance the vendor of a slave have failed to give his stipulatory guarantee; for everything that is of general custom and practice ought to be in view of the judge in a bonae fidei iudicium.”⁸⁵

Very little was required to convert the stricti juris actio empti, really nothing more than an actio ex stipulatu, into a bonae fidei one,—simply the addition by the praetor of the words “on considerations of good faith” (ex fide bona) to the ⁸³ Varro, ii. 2, § 5.

⁸⁴ Cic. De Off. iii. 17, § 70; [iii. 16, § 66. Some writers hold that it was so recognised by the end of the sixth century. See Bechmann, Kauf, i. p. 505; Buckler, Contract in Roman Law, p. 144.]

⁸⁵ Ulp. lib. 1 ad ed. aedil. in Dig. xxi. 1, fr. 31, § 20.

"whatever the defendant ought to give to or do for the plaintiff."³⁶ The effect, however, was immeasurable. Not that it did away with the practice of stipulatory guarantees; for Varro wrote after the time of Q. Mucius (who speaks of the action on sale as a bonae fidei one),³⁷ and references to them are abundant in the pages of the classical jurists.³⁸ But it rendered them in law unnecessary. It made sale a purely consensual contract, in which, in virtue of the simple agreement to buy and sell, all the obligations on either side that usually attended it were held embodied without express formulation or, still less, stipulatory or literal engagement. And in instructing the judges to decide in every case between buyer and seller suing ex empto or ex vendito on principles of good faith, it really empowered them to go far beyond "general custom and practice," and to take cognisance of everything that in fairness and equity and common sense ought to influence their judgment, so as to enable them freely to do justice between the parties in any and every question that might directly or indirectly arise out of their relation as seller and buyer.³⁹

The history of the four real contracts—mutuum (i.e. loan of money or other things returnable generically), commodate (i.e. loan of things that had to be returned specifically), deposit, and pledge—is more obscure than that of the consensual ones.⁴⁰ Down to the time of the Poetilian law, loan of money, corn, etc., was usually contracted per aes et libram (§ 31); and it is probable that after the abolition of the *nexum*⁴¹ the obligation

³⁶ Gai. iv. 47.

³⁷ See supra, note 33.

³⁸ Indeed one of the purposes for which a bonae fidei actio empti was sometimes employed was to compel a vendor to give a stipulatio duplae or simplae when it had by oversight been omitted, and the purchaser conceived it might be of service to him.

³⁹ [The foregoing view of the origin of sale as a consensual contract is supported in the main by Girard, Droit Romain, p. 524, who sees in the doctrine of the periculum a distinct survival of the double stipulations. For other views, see Pernice, Labeo, i. p. 456; Cuq, p. 595 sq. As to the period when the contract first became enforceable as a bonae fidei one, see Girard, p. 525; supra, n. 34.]

⁴⁰ See Heimbach (as in note 11), pp. 498 sq., 633 sq.; Bekker, Loci Plautini de rebus creditis, Greifswald, 1861; Demelius, in the Z. f. RG. vol. ii. (1863), p. 217 sq.; Bekker, Aktionen, vol. i. p. 306 sq.; Ubbelohde, Zur Gesch. d. benannten Realcontracte, Marburg, 1870; Huschke, Die Lehre vom Darlehn, Leipzig, 1882. [Add Cuq, pp. 630-641.]

⁴¹ [See supra, p. 154.]

on a borrower to repay the money or corn advanced to him was made actionable, under the Silian and Calpurnian laws respectively, by a stipulation contemporaneous with the loan (§§ 39, 40). With the rise of the jus gentium, loan became actionable on its own merits,—that is to say, the advance and receipt of money as a loan of itself laid the borrower under obligation to repay it, even though no stipulatory engagement had intervened; the res—in this case the giving and receiving mutui causa—completed the contract. The obligation that arose from it was purely unilateral, and enforceable, where the loan was of money, by the same action as stipulation and literal contract; and so strictly was it construed, that interest on the loan was not claimable along with it, the res given and received being the full measure of the obligation of repayment.⁴² The other three—commodate, deposit, and pledge—became independent real contracts very much later than mutuum, possibly not all at the same time, and none of them apparently until very late in the republic. All of them, of course, had been long known as transactions of daily life; the difficulty is to say when they first became actionable, and under what guise.⁴³

It is impossible here to criticise the various theories entertained of their vicissitudes, and which necessarily vary to some extent in regard to each. All that can be said is that eventually, and within the period now under consideration, they came to be recognised as independent real contracts, the res by which they were completed being the delivery of a thing by one person to another for a particular purpose, on the understanding that it was to be returned when that purpose was served. And this is to be noted,—that while mutuum transferred the property of the money lent, the borrower being bound to return not the identical coins but only an equal amount, in pledge it was only the possession that passed, while in commodate and deposit the lender or depositor retained both property and (legal) possession, the borrower or depositary having nothing more than the natural detention. In all but mutuum, therefore, there was trust; the holder was bound, to an extent varying according to circumstances, to care for what he held as a bonus paterfamilias, and entitled to be reimbursed for outlay on its maintenance; bound to return it, yet excused if his failure to do so was due to a cause for which in fairness he could not be held responsible. Consequently the actions on those three contracts, differing from that on mutuum, were all bonae fidei, the judge being vested with full discretion to determine what was fair and equitable in each individual case.

⁴² If interest was bargained for, the agreement had to be clothed in a stipulation, which was really an independent contract separately enforceable.

⁴³ [As to deposit by way of mancipation, see supra, p. 136, n. 39.]

SECTION 54.—AMENDMENTS ON THE LAW OF SUCCESSION

The most important change in the law of succession during the latter half of the republic was due to the praetors. Not that either legislation, the interpretation of the jurists, or the practice of the centumviral court left it untouched. Of examples of the action of the first we have the Voconian law of 585, really the work of M. Cato,¹ imposing disabilities upon women in the matter of succession, and limiting the amount which legatees could take under a testament;² the Furian testamentary law of 571, also restricting legacies to a certain maximum;³ and the Falcidian law of 714, securing heirs in at least one-fourth of the inheritance, however much might be bequeathed to legatees.⁴ Of the action of the jurists we have an example in the denial of the right of intestate succession as agnates to all women except sisters; a restriction which Paul says was put upon the words of the XII Tables from the same motive that induced the Voconian law (Voconiana ratione),⁵ and probably about the same time. Of the influence of the centumviral court we have an example in

¹ Cic. De Sen. 5, § 14.

² Gai. ii. 226. See Giraud, Du vrai caractère de la loi Voconia, Paris, 1841; Bachofen, Die L. Voconia, Basle, 1843; Mommsen (rev. Bachofen) in Richter's Krit. Jahrb. vol. ix. (1845), p. 1 sq.; Vangerow, De lege Voconia, Heidelberg, 1863.

³ Gai. ii. 225, iv. §§ 23, 24.

⁴ Gai. ii. 227; Just. Inst. ii. tit. 22.

⁵ Paul. Sent. iv. 8, § 20; see also Gai. iii. 14. [The use of the expression Voconiana ratione in the texts does not prove that the restriction was subsequent to the lex Voconia. Puchta, Inst. iii. § 304; cf. Karlowa, Röm. RG. ii. p. 883.]

the challenge it allowed to children of the testament of a parent who had causelessly disinherited them or left them only a mere trifle in his testament (p. 234); a challenge, however, which, as it took the form of a reflection on the parent's sanity, was not allowed if any other remedy, civil or praetorian, was available.

But these changes were insignificant compared with those effected by the edicts of the praetors. They introduced, under the technical name of bonorum possessio,⁶ what was really beneficial enjoyment of the estate of a deceased person without the legal title of inheritance. There is much to lead to the conclusion that the series of provisions in regard to it which we find in the Julian consolidation of the Edict were not devised by any single brain, but were the work of a succession of praetors, some of them probably not under the republic but under the empire; and we have proof that some amendments of considerable value were engrafted upon the institution by imperial enactments after the Edict was finally closed.⁷ It will be convenient, however, to give here a general view of the subject as a whole, disregarding the consideration that some of its features may not have been given to it within the period that is now more particularly under review.

Justinian, speaking of the origin of bonorum possessio, observes that, in promising it to a petitioner, the praetors were not always actuated by the same motives; in some cases their object was to facilitate the application of the rules of the jus civile, in some to amend their application according to what they believed to be the spirit of the XII Tables, in others, again, to set these aside as inequitable.⁸ Although there is a lack of positive evidence, it is not unreasonable to assume that it was with the purpose of aiding the jus civile that the first step was taken in what gradually became a momentous reform; and it is extremely probable that this first step was the announcement by some praetor that, where there was dispute as to an inheritance, and a testament was presented to him bearing not fewer seals than were required by law, he would give possession of the goods of the defunct to the heir named in it.⁹ In this as it stands there is nothing but a regulation of possession of the bona of the inheritance pending the question of legal right. Just as between two parties contending about the ownership of a specific thing in a rei vindicatio the praetor first settled the question of interim possession, so did he promise to do here when a question was about to be raised about the right to an inheritance (si de hereditate ambigitur). It was a provisional arrangement merely, and very necessary in view of the state of the law which permitted a third party, apart from any pretence of title, to step in and complete a usucapio pro herede by a year's possession of the effects of the inheritance (p. 170). Even at the time when the Edict was closed it was not necessarily more than a provisional grant; for if heirs-at-law of the deceased appeared and proved that, although the testament bore on the outside the requisite number of seals, yet in fact some solemnity of execution, such as the familiae venditio or testamenti nuncupatio (p. 161), had been omitted, the grantee had to yield up to them the possession that had been given him pending inquiry.¹⁰ It was only by a rescript of Marcus Aurelius's that it was declared that a plea by the heir-at-law of the invalidity of a testament on the ground of defect of formalities of execution might be defeated by an exceptio doli;¹¹ on the principle that it was contrary to good faith to set aside the wishes of a testator on a technical objection that was purely formal. Thus was the bonorum possessio secundum tabulas, i.e. in accordance with a testament, from being originally one in aid of the jus civile, in course of time converted into one in contradiction of it.

⁶ For a résumé of the principal theories (down to 1870) about the origin of bonorum possessio, see Danz, Gesch. d. r. R. vol. ii. § 176. Of the later literature it is enough to mention Leist, in Leist-Gluck, vols. i.-iv. Erlangen, 1870-79, and Sohm, in his Inst. d. r. R. p. 330 sq. [Eng. trans. p. 425 sq.] (where a novel and ingenious explanation of the institution is suggested). [Cuq classes the various conjectures about the origin of B. Po. under two main groups, viz.: (1) those which trace in it a stage of procedure in the petitio hereditatis—interim possession being given to one of the litigants by the praetor, and (2) those which trace in it a means for preventing conflicts resulting from seizure of the goods of an inheritance by a person without title. See Cuq, Inst. Jurid. p. 533, n. 4, and authorities there cited.]

⁷ See instances in Gai. ii. §§ 120, 126; Dig. xxviii. 3, 12, pr.

⁸ Inst. iii. 9, pr. and § 1 (confirmandi, emendandi, impugnandi veteris juris gratia).

⁹ Cic. In Verr. II. i. 45, § 117. He says (writing in 684) that an edict to that effect was already tralatitium (supra, § 49), i.e. had been adopted year after year by a series of praetors. Gaius (ii. 119) speaks of seven at least as the requisite number of seals; i.e. those of the libripens and the five citizen witnesses (supra, p. 161), and of the antestatus, whose functions are not well understood, but whose official designation appended to his seal recurs so regularly as to leave no doubt that his was the seventh. [On the antestatus see Cuq, Inst. Jurid. p. 254, n. 3. His presence at mancipation is referred to in Gaius, Epitome, i. tit. 6, and in various inscriptions: C. I. L. vi. 10,239, 10,241, 10,247. Some writers (e.g. Sohm, Inst. d. r. R. § 99) regard the familiae emptor as the seventh witness, but the familiae emptor as a party to the conveyance could not properly append his seal as a witness, Gaius, ii. 106, 107. Others regard the antestatus as another name for the libripens, while according to others it would seem to be the name given to the first of the five witnesses. See also Karlowa, Röm. RG. ii. p. 856; Schulin, Lehrbuch, p. 363.]

That the motives and purposes of the series of praetors who built up the law of bonorum possessio must have varied in progress of years is obvious; and once the machinery had been invented, nothing was easier than to apply it to new ideas. The praetor could not make a man heir,—that he always disclaimed;¹² but he could give a man, whether heir or not, the substantial advantages of inheritance, and protect him in their enjoyment by praetorian remedies. He gave him possession of the goods of the deceased, with summary remedies for ingathering them, so that, once in his hands, they would become his in quiritarian right on the expiry of the period of usucapion;¹³ and, by interpolation into the formula of a fiction of heirship, he gave him effectual personal actions against debtors of the deceased, rendering him liable in the same way to the deceased's creditors.¹⁴

Another variety of the bonorum possessio was that contra tabulas,—in opposition to the terms of a testament. If a testator had neither instituted nor expressly disinherited a son who was one of his sui heredes, then his testament was a nullity, and the child passed over had no need of a praetorian remedy. Where sui heredes other than sons were passed over, the jus civile allowed them to participate with the instituted heirs by a sort of accrual.¹⁵ But the Edict went further; for if the institute was a stranger, i.e. not brother or sister of the child passed over,¹⁶ then, on the petition of the latter, the ¹⁰ Gai. ii. 119.

¹¹ Gai. ii. 120. [This rescript is perhaps attributable to A. Pius.]

¹² Gai. iii. 32; Inst. iii. 9, 2.

¹³ Gai. iii. §§ 34, 80, iv. 144.

¹⁴ Gai. iii. 81, iv. 34; Ulp. xxviii. 12.

¹⁵ Gai. ii. 124.

¹⁶ [Or rather, was a person not in the immediate potestas of the testator.]

praetor gave him and the other sui concurring with him possession of the whole estate of the deceased, the institute being left with nothing more than the empty name of heir.¹⁷ Another application of the bonorum possessio contra tabulas was to the case of emancipated children of the testator's. By the jus civile he was not required to institute or disinherit them; for by their emancipation they had ceased to be sui heredes, and had lost that interest in the family estate which was put forward as the reason why they had to be mentioned in the testament of their paterfamilias (p. 162). The praetors—although probably not until the empire, and when the doctrines of the jus naturale were being more freely recognised (§ 55)—put them on the same footing as unemancipated children, requiring that they also should be either instituted or disinherited, and giving them bonorum possessio if they were not.¹⁸ It was bonorum possessio contra tabulas in this sense,—that it displaced the instituted heirs either wholly or partially; wholly when the institutes were not children of the deceased, partially when they were. In the latter case, at least when sui were affected by it, the grant of bonorum possessio was under this very equitable condition,—that the grantees should collate or bring into partition all their own acquisitions since their emancipation.¹⁹ But for it those acquisitions would have belonged to the testator, and would have been included in his succession; it was but right that, if they claimed to share in it as if they had not been emancipated, they should throw into it what in that case would have formed part of it.

The third variety of bonorum possessio was that granted ab intestato. As has been shown in a previous section (§ 32), the rules of the jus civile in reference to succession on intestacy were extremely strict and artificial. They admitted neither emancipated children nor agnates who had undergone capitis deminutio; they admitted no female agnate except a sister: if the nearest agnate or agnates declined, the right did not pass to those of the next degree; mere cognates,—kinsmen of the deceased who were not agnates, e.g. grandchildren or others related to him through females, and agnates capite minuti, were not admitted at all; while a widow had no share unless she had been in manu of the deceased and therefore filiae loco. All these matters the praetors amended, and so far paved the way for the revolution in the law of intestate succession which was accomplished by Justinian.

¹⁷ Gai. ii. 125.¹⁸ Ulp. xxviii. 2.¹⁹ Ulp. xxviii. 4.

The classes they established were these: (1) Displacing the sui heredes of the jus civile, they gave the first place to descendants (liberi), including in the term all those whom the deceased would have been bound either by the jus civile or the Edict to institute or disinherit had he made a will, namely, his widow, if she had been in manu at his death, sons and daughters of his body, whether in potestate at his death or emancipated, the representatives of sons that had predeceased him,²⁰ and adopted children in his potestas when he died.²¹ (2) On failure of liberi the right to petition for bonorum possessio opened to the nearest collateral agnates of the intestate, under their old name of legitimi heredes.²² (3) Under the jus civile, on failure of agnates (and of the gens where there was one), the succession was vacant and fell to the fisc, unless perchance it was usucapted by a stranger possessing pro herede. The frequency of such vacancies was much diminished by the recognition by the praetors of the right of cognates to claim bonorum possessio in the third place. Whom they had primarily in view under the name of "cognates" it is impossible to say. The epithet is most frequently applied by modern writers to kinsmen related through females; but in its widest sense it included all kinsmen without exception, and in a more limited sense all kinsmen not entitled to claim as agnates. There were included amongst them therefore—although it is very probable that the list was not made up at once, but from time to time by the action of a series of praetors—not merely kinsmen related through females (who were not agnates), but also agnates of a remoter degree who were excluded as such because the nearest agnates in existence had declined, persons who had been agnates but by reason of capitis minutio had lost that character, female agnates more distantly related than sisters, and children of the intestate's who at the time of his death were in an adoptive family.²³ All these took according to proximity.²⁴ (4) Finally, the claim passed to the survivor of husband and wife,²⁵ assuming always that their marriage had not involved manus.²⁶ This list constituted the praetorian order of succession on intestacy.

²⁰ Children of daughters were not admitted in this class until the later empire, being regarded as members of the family of their paternal, not of their maternal, grandfather.

²¹ Gai. iii. §§ 26, 63; Ulp. xxviii. §§ 7, 8.

²² Ulp. xxviii. 7. [Failing agnates the gentiles had right; see also n. 24.]

All those bonorum possessiones had to be formally petitioned for. In that ab intestato descendants²⁷ were allowed a year for doing so, while other persons were limited to a hundred days; the period for those entitled in the second place beginning when that of those entitled in the first had expired, and so forth. The grant was always made at the risk of the petitioner; nothing was assured him by it; it might turn out real and substantial (cum re) or merely nominal (sine re), according as the grantee could or could not maintain it against the heir of the jus civile. For the latter was entitled to stand on his statutory or testamentary right, without applying for bonorum possessio; although in fact he often did so for the sake of the summary remedies it afforded him for ingathering the effects of the deceased.

²³ See Gai. iii. §§ 27-31; Ulp. xxviii. §§ 7, 9.

²⁴ [But no more remote cognates than the children of a second cousin—sobrino sobrinave natus natave—could claim. What the author has said about the praetorian classes in this paragraph does not fully explain the successio ordinum. Where a person entitled to claim in one class failed to do so, it might still be open to him to claim in a postponed class. Thus where there were sui heredes who delayed to claim in the class unde liberi, they might still do so as legitimi, and as such would be preferred to collateral agnates, or they might even claim as cognates. So agnates who failed to claim as legitimi might get b. p. as cognates, according to their proximity; see Girard, p. 863.]

²⁵ Ulp. xxviii. 7.

²⁶ The provisions of the edict, as of the jus civile, in reference to the succession of a patron to his freedman necessarily differed in many respects from those explained above and in § 32. They were very complicated, but need not here be entered on.

²⁷ [And ascendants; Ulp. xxviii. § 10.]

PART IV

THE JUS NATURALE AND MATURITY OF ROMAN JURISPRUDENCE

The Empire until the Time of Diocletian

PART IV

THE JUS NATURALE AND MATURITY OF ROMAN JURISPRUDENCE

The Empire until the Time of Diocletian

CHAPTER I

CHARACTERISTICS AND FORMATIVE AGENCIES OF THE LAW DURING THE PERIOD

SECTION 55.—CHARACTERISTICS GENERALLY AND RECOGNITION OF A "JUS NATURALE" IN PARTICULAR

THE first three centuries of the Empire witnessed the perfection of Roman jurisprudence and the commencement of its decline. During that time the history of the law presents no such great landmarks as the enactment of the XII Tables, the commencement of a praetor's edict, the recognition of simple consent as creative of a contractual bond, or the introduction of a new form of judicial procedure; the establishment of a class of patented jurists speaking as the mouthpieces of the prince, and the admission of all the free subjects of the empire to the privileges of citizenship, are almost the only isolated events to which one can point as productive of great and lasting results. There were, indeed, some radical changes in particular institutions, such as the caducuary legislation of Augustus, intended to raise the tone of domestic morality and increase fruitful marriages, and the legislation of the same emperor and his immediate successor for regulation of the status of enfranchised slaves; but these, although of vast importance in themselves, and the first of them influencing the current of the law for centuries, yet left upon it no permanent impression. It was by much less imposing efforts that it attained the perfection to which it reached under the sovereigns of the Severan house,—a steady advance on the lines already marked out in the latter years of the republic. The sphere of the jus Quiritium became more and more circumscribed, and one after another of the formalities of the jus civile was abandoned. The manus of the husband practically disappeared: the patria potestas of the father lost much of its significance, by the recognition notwithstanding it of the possibility of a separate and independent estate in the child; slaves might be enfranchised by informal manumission; res mancipi constantly passed by simple tradition, the right of the transferee being secured by the Publician action; servitudes and other real rights informally constituted were maintained as effectual tutitione praetoris; an heir's acceptance of a succession could be accomplished by any indication of his intention, without observance of the formal cretio of the earlier law; and many of the bargains incident to consensual contracts, but varying their natural import, that used to be embodied in words of stipulation, came to be enforceable on the strength of formless contemporaneous agreements.

The preference accorded by jurists and judges to the jus gentium over the jus civile is insufficient to account for these and many other changes in the same direction, as well as for the ever-increasing tendency evinced to subordinate word and deed to the voluntas from which they arose. They are rather to be attributed to the striving on the part of many after a higher ideal, to which they gave the name of jus naturale.¹ It is sometimes said that the notion of a jus naturale as distinct from the jus gentium was peculiar to Ulpian, and that it found no acceptance with the Roman jurists generally. But this is inaccurate. Justinian, indeed, has excerpted in the Digest, and put in the forefront of his Institutes,² a passage from an elementary work of Ulpian's, in which he speaks of a jus naturae that is common to man and the lower animals, and which is substantially instinct. This is a law of nature of which it is quite true that we find no other jurist taking account. But many of them refer again and again to the jus naturale; and Gaius is the only one (Justinian following him) that occasionally makes it synonymous with the jus gentium.³ There can be no question that the latter was much more largely imbued with precepts of natural law than was the jus civile, but it is impossible to say they were identical; it is enough to cite but one illustration, pointed out again and again in the texts,—that while the one justified slavery the other condemned it. While the jus civile studied the interests only of citizens, and the jus gentium those of freemen irrespective of nationality, the law of nature had theoretically a wider range and took all mankind within its purview. We are assured that the doctrine of the jus gentium agreed with that of the jus civile in holding that a slave was nothing but a chattel; yet we find the latter, when tintured with the jus naturale, recognising many rights as competent to a slave, and even conceding that he might be debtor or creditor in a contract,⁴ although his obligation or claim could be given effect to only indirectly, since he could neither sue nor be sued.

¹ See Voigt, Das Jus naturale . . . der Römer, particularly vol. i. §§ 52-64, 89-96; Maine, Ancient Law, chap. iii. ² Dig. i. 1, fr. 1, § 3; Inst. i. 2, pr.

Voigt thus summarises the characteristics of this speculative Roman jus naturale:—(1) its potential universal applicability to all men, (2) among all peoples, and (3) in all ages; and (4) its correspondence with the innate conviction of right (innere Rechtsüberzeugung).⁵ Its propositions, as gathered from the pages of the jurists of the period, he formulates

³ A passage of Paul's (Dig. l. 17, 84, § 1) and two of Marcian's (Dig. i. 8, fr. 2, fr. 4) have been referred to as indicating an identification in their minds of jus naturale and jus gentium. I am unable so to read them. Paul and Marcian merely allude to certain rules or doctrines of the jus gentium as natural rules or doctrines, just as many of the jurists speak of natural rules and doctrines of the jus civile. [See Cic. De Off. iii. 5, 23. But, quaere, does any jurist make a clear distinction between j. n. and j. g. as regards legal effects?]

⁴ Ulp. in Dig. xlv. 7, fr. 14: "Servi . . . ex contractibus civiliter non obligantur; sed naturaliter et obligantur et obligant." [But cf. a text from Paul in Dig. xviii. 1, fr. 34, pr. § 1, where speaking of things extra commercium either natura or jure gentium, or jure civili, he does not include slaves in the category.]

⁵ Voigt, l.c. p. 304.

thus:—(1) recognition of the claims of blood (sanguinis vel cognationis ratio); (2) duty of faithfulness to engagements,—is natura debet . . . cujus fidem secuti sumus; ⁶ (3) apportionment of advantage and disadvantage, gain and loss, according to the standard of equity; (4) supremacy of the voluntatis ratio over the words or form in which the will is manifested.⁷ It was regard for the first that, probably pretty early in the principate, led the praetors to place emancipated children on a footing of equality with unemancipated in the matter of succession, and to admit collateral kindred through females alongside those related through males; and that, in the reigns of Hadrian and Marcus Aurelius respectively, induced the senate to give a mother a preferred right of succession to her children, and vice versa. It was respect for the second that led to the recognition of the validity of what was called a natural obligation,—one that, because of some defect of form or something peculiar in the position of the parties, was ignored by the jus civile and yet, though incapable of being made the ground of an action for enforcement, was given effect to indirectly by other equitable remedies. Regard for the third was nothing new in the jurisprudence of the period; the republic had already admitted it as a principle that a man was not to be unjustifiably enriched at another's cost; the jurists of the empire, however, gave it a wider application than before, and used it as a key to the solution of many a difficult question in the domain of the law of contract. As for the fourth, it was one that had to be applied with delicacy; for the voluntas could not in equity be preferred to its manifestation to the prejudice of other parties who in good faith had acted upon the latter. We have many evidences of the skilful way in which the matter was handled; speculative opinion being held in check by considerations of individual interest and general utility.

A remark of Voigt's on the subject is well worthy of being kept in view,—that the risks which arose from the setting up of the precepts of a speculative jus naturale, as derogating from the rules of the jus civile, were greatly diminished through the position held by the jurists of the early empire. Their jus respondendi (§ 59) made them legislative organs of the state; so that, in introducing principles of the jus naturale or of aequum et bonum, they at the same moment positivised them and gave them the force of law. They were, he says, "philosophers in the sphere of law, searchers after the ultimate truth; but while they—usually in reference to a concrete case—sought out the truth and applied what they had found, they combined with the freedom of speculation the life-freshness of practice and the power of assuring the operativeness of their abstract propositions."⁸

⁶ Paul, in Dig. l. 17, fr. 84, § 1.

⁷ Voigt, loc. cit. pp. 321-323.

There is another phrase of frequent occurrence in the writings of some of the jurists of the period, to which Voigt devotes special attention. According to Gaius and Paul, everything has a nature of its own,—the aggregate of what characterise its essential destination and its special properties and peculiarities. There is a nature of man, a nature of animals, a nature of every individual thing, a nature of every sort of contract, action, and so on. In each and all of those "natures" an ordinative energy and determinative rule are observable. These are its naturalis ratio. The product of such rationes is the lex naturae; and the substance of the lex naturae constitutes a jus naturale. "The philosophy of law of Gaius and Paul begins with the naturalis ratio."⁹

SECTION 56.—INFLUENCE OF CONSTITUTIONAL CHANGES

The changes in the constitution aided not a little the current of the law. Men of foreign descent reached the throne and peopled the senate; proud indeed of the history and traditions of Rome, yet in most cases free from prejudice in favour of institutions that had nothing to recommend them but their antiquity. Military life had not the same attractions as during the republic; there was no longer a tribunate to which men of ambition might aspire; the comitia soon ceased to afford an outlet for public eloquence; so that men of education and position had all the more inducement to devote themselves to the conscientious study and regular practice of the law. This was greatly encouraged by the action of Augustus in creating a class of licensed or patented jurists, privileged to give answers to questions submitted to them by the judges, and that ex auctoritate principis (§ 59); and still more so, perhaps, by Hadrian's reorganisation of the imperial privy council, wherein a large proportion of the seats were assigned to jurists of distinction. With several of the emperors lawyers were amongst their most intimate and trusted friends. Again and again the office of praetorian prefect, the highest next the throne, was filled by them; Papinian, Ulpian, and Paul all held it in the reigns of Septimius Severus and Alexander. Jurisprudence, therefore, was not merely an honourable and lucrative profession under the new arrangements, but a passport to places of eminence in the state; and till the death of Alexander the ranks of the jurists never failed to be recruited by men of position and accomplishment.

⁸ Voigt, l.c. p. 341.

⁹ Voigt, l.c. pp. 270-274. [The post-mediaeval writers on international law, such as Gentili, Grotius, etc., speak much of the distinction between jus naturale and jus gentium, with reference to the Roman law, but their conclusions are vague and unsatisfactory. Puffendorf in his De Jure Naturali et Gentium seems to hold that there was no real distinction (ii. 3, 23). The Roman jus gentium, he says, is either part of the civil law or part of the jus naturae, and he cites Hobbes to this effect. Cf. Selden in the preface to his De Jure Naturali et Gentium; Westlake, Chapters on International Law (Cambridge, 1894), chap. i.]

SECTION 57.—LEGISLATION OF COMITIA AND SENATE

Augustus, clinging as much as possible to the form of republican institutions, thought it expedient not to break with the old practice of submitting his legislative proposals to the vote of the comitia of the tribes. Some of them were far from insignificant. Besides various measures for the amendment of the criminal law, three sets of enactments of great importance owe their authorship to him, the first to improve domestic morality and encourage fruitful marriage, the second to abate the evils that had arisen from the too lavish admission of liberated slaves to the privileges of citizenship, and the third to regulate procedure in public prosecutions and private litigations.

The first set included the L. Julia de adulteriis coercendis of 736 (urgently demanded by reason of the prevailing licentiousness, and whose title explains its tendency),¹ and the Lex Julia et Pappia Poppaea.² This enactment—a voluminous matrimonial code—for two or three centuries exercised such an influence as to be regarded as one of the sources of Roman law almost quite as much as the XII Tables or Julian's consolidated Edict.³ It originated in the Lex Julia de maritandis ordinibus, which was approved by the senate in the year 726, but met with such violent opposition that it was not until 736 that it passed the comitia. Finding by experience that its provisions were insufficient to attain its purpose, Augustus in the year 757 (4 A.D.) introduced an amended edition of it, which he only succeeded in carrying by allowing a three years' grace, afterwards extended to five, before it should come into operation.⁴ That postponed it till 762 (9 A.D.), in which year a supplement to it was carried through by the consuls M. Papius and Q. Poppaeus. The composite enactment got the name of Lex Julia et Papia Poppaea, but was often spoken of under other and simpler names, most frequently lex Julia or lex caducaria. Its leading provisions were intended to prevent misalliances,—marriages between men of rank and women of low degree or immoral character,⁵ concubinage, however, being expressly sanctioned;⁶ to force men and women of a

¹ For an account of its provisions, see Rudorff, Röm. RG. vol. i. p. 88 sq. It was the subject of numerous commentaries by the Antoninian and Severan jurists.

² [See a facetious contrast between this lex Julia and the preceding one in Ausonius, Epigram, lxxxix. 2.]

³ Restitutions have been attempted amongst others by Jac. Gothofredus, in his Fontes IV jur. civ. Geneva, 1638; Heineccius, Ad l. Jul. et Pap. Popp. comm. Amsterdam, 1731; Den Tex and Van Hall, Font. III jur. civ. Amsterdam, 1840. For a view of its provisions, see Rudorff, Röm. RG. vol. i. p. 64 sq.; and for an account of the writings of the jurists upon it, Karlowa, Röm. RG. vol. i. p. 618 sq.

⁴ [The exact relation of the law of 757 to that of 736 is disputed. See Girard, p. 852, n. 3.]

⁵ This part of the statute was repealed by the Emperor Justin, at the instance of his nephew Justinian, who found it a bar to his marriage with Theodora. [Cod. v. 4, l. 23, cf. also l. 29 and Nov. 117 c. 6.]

⁶ [The statute (1) sanctioned marriage between ordinary ingenui and libertinae, but (2) forbade it between ingenui and certain famosae, and also (3) between senators or their children and freed persons or certain famosae, though concubinage was here partially sanctioned. Ulp. xiii. and xvi. § 2; Dig. xxiii. 2, fr. 23, and fr. 44 pr. See Meyer, Der römische Concubinatus (Leipsic, 1895), pp. 27 sq.]

certain age to marry and have children, by declaring unmarried persons incapable (under certain qualifications) of taking anything of what they were entitled to under a testament, and married but childless persons incapable of taking more than a half, the lapsed provisions (caduca) falling to those other persons named in the testament who had fulfilled the requirements of the statute, and, failing them, to the fisc; to reward fruitful marriages by relieving women who had borne a certain number of children from the tutory of their agnates or patrons, and conceding various other privileges alike to fathers and mothers of children born in wedlock; and to regulate divorce by requiring express and formal repudiation, and fixing statutorily the consequences of it so far as the interests of the parties in the nuptial provisions were concerned. However well intended, the language of Juvenal and others raises doubts whether the law did not really do more harm than good. By the Christian emperors many of its provisions were repealed, while others fell into disuse; and in the Justinianian books hardly a trace is left of its distinctive features.

The second set of enactments referred to above included the Aelia-Sentian law of the year 4 A.D., the Fufia-Caninian one of the year 8, and the Junia-Norban one of the year 19,⁷ —the latter really passed in the reign of Tiberius, but probably planned by Augustus; they will be alluded to in a subsequent section (§ 66). The third set included the two Leges Juliae judicariae, of which we know but little. That regulating procedure in private litigations is the same that is mentioned by Gaius as having completed the work of the Aebutian law (p. 230), in substituting the formular system for that per legis actiones.⁸ It must have been a somewhat comprehensive statute, as a passage in the Vatican Fragments refers to a provision of its 27th section.⁹ Our ignorance of its contents, therefore, beyond one or two trifling details, is the more to be regretted.

⁷ There has recently been considerable controversy as to the date of the Junia-Norban law and its relation to the Aelia-Sentian. See Romanet du Caillaud, De la date de la loi Junia Norbana, Paris, 1882; Cantarelli, "I latini Juniani," in Arch. Giurid. vol. xxix. (1882), p. 3 sq., vol. xxx. (1883), p. 41 sq.; Schneider, "Die lex Junia Norbana," in Z. d. Sav. Stift. vol. v. R.A. (1884), p. 225 sq.; Labbé, in app. to the 12th ed. of Ortolan, Histoire de la législation romaine (Paris, 1884), p. 791 sq.; Cantarelli, "La data della legge Jun. Norbana," in Arch. Giurid. vol. xxxiv. (1885), p. 38 sq.; Hölder, "Zum gegenseitigen Verhältnisse d. lex Ael. Sent. und Jun. Norb." in Z. d. Sav. Stift. vol. vi. R.A. (1885), p. 205 sq. [Infra, p. 317, n. 6.]

⁸ Gai. iv. 30. [Two leges Juliae judicariae are said to have been passed

The Junia-Norban law was about the last effort of comitial legislation; for although there are frequent references to a Lex Claudia, abolishing the tutory-at-law of women, there is some reason for thinking that it was really a senatusconsult.¹⁰ It is true likewise that there exist in the Capitoline Museum the remains of a Lex de imperio Vespasiani of the year 70 A.D.;¹¹ but its language shows that it too must have been a senatusconsult, although it may subsequently have received the formal assent of the lictors, as representatives of the old comitia of the curies, whose prerogative it was to bestow the imperium. There are also the Lex Malacitana and the Lex Salpensana, charters granted by Domitian to the municipalities of Malaga and Salpesa;¹² monuments of great interest historically, but no more comitial enactments than the by Augustus; the first of which dealt with judicia publica, while the second regulated procedure in private actions. But Wlassak, Röm. Processgesetze, i. p. 173 sq., has adduced arguments to show that the second of these embraced really two enactments, the first of which dealt only with procedure before the urban praetor and within the city of Rome; the other being intended for citizens dwelling outside the primum miliarium urbis Romae. It is to these leges Juliae on private procedure alone that Gaius refers, and their operation was to make procedure per formulam compulsory. Contra Voigt, Röm. RG. § 13, n. 2.

⁹ Vat. Frag. 197.

¹⁰ In the index to Haenel's Corpus legum ab imperatorib. Roman. ante Justinianum latarum (Leipsic, 1857), no fewer than fourteen senatusconsults of Claudius's are mentioned; and the reason is not obvious why in this particular instance a lex should have been resorted to. It is noticeable that Gaius, speaking in i. § 84, of one of those enactments of Claudius's as a senatusconsult, refers to it again in § 86 as eadem lex.

¹¹ Printed in Bruns, p. 128 sq. It seems probable that it was the application to Vespasian of the Lex regia, from which Gaius (i. 5) and Justinian (Inst. i. 2, 6) say that the emperors derived their legislative authority. [Gaius, however, does not use the expression Lex regia in this sense. As to whether the enactment in question was a lex or senatusconsult see Mommsen, SR. ii. 840.]

¹² Considerable portions of them were discovered in the year 1851 near Malaga. They are printed in Bruns, pp. 130-141. They have been commented by Berlanga, Mommsen, Laboulaye, Arndts, Giraud, Van Lier, Van Swinderen, etc. See note of literature in Bruns, p. 130. The most important contribution is that of Mommsen, Die Stadtrechte d. latin. Gemeinden Salpensa u. Malaca, Leipsic, 1855.

Lex metalli Vipascensis,¹³—a concession of the right to work certain lead mines in Portugal. Laws of this sort were leges datae,—not leges latae.

From the time of Tiberius onwards it was the senate that did the work of legislation, for the simple reason that the comitia were no longer fit for it.¹⁴ And very active it seems to have been. This may have been due to some extent to the fact that so many professional jurists, aware from their practice of the points in which the law required amendment, possessed seats in the imperial council, where the drafts of the senatusconsults were prepared. It was the senatusconsults that were the principal statutory factors of what was called by both emperors and jurists the jus novum,—law that departed often very widely from the principles of the old jus civile, that was much more in accordance with those of the Edict, and that to a great extent might have been introduced through its means had not the authority of the praetors been overshadowed by that of the prince. In the end of the second and the beginning of the third century the latter's supremacy in the senate became rather too pronounced, men quoting the oratio in which he had submitted to it a project of law, instead of the resolution which gave it legislative sanction. No doubt it must have been carefully considered beforehand in the imperial council, and rarely stood in need of further discussion; but the ignoring of the formal act that followed it tended unduly to emphasise the share borne in it by the sovereign, and made it all the easier for the emperors after Alexander Severus to dispense altogether with the time-honoured practice.¹⁵

¹³ Found near Aljustrel, the ancient Vipascum, in 1876. Probably of the second half of the first century after Christ. Printed in Bruns, pp. 141-145. Literature on p. 142; to which may be added Berlanga, Los Bronces de Lascuta, de Bonanza, y de Aljustrel, Malaga, 1881-84.

¹⁴ Pomponius, in fr. 2, § 9, Dig. de origine juris (i. 1).

¹⁵ In form a senatusconsult had nothing of the imperative of a lex about it. The presiding consuls or emperor submitted their proposal in simple language (senatum consuluerunt, verba fecerunt), and the senate approved (censuerunt). See examples in Bruns, pp. 145-164.

SECTION 58.—THE CONSOLIDATED EDICTUM PERPETUUM¹

The edicts of the praetors, which had attained very considerable proportions before the fall of the republic, certainly received some additions in the early empire. But those magistrates did not long enjoy the same independence as of old; there was a greater imperium than theirs in the state, before which they hesitated to lay hands on the law with the boldness of their predecessors. They continued as before to publish annually at entry on office the edicts that had been handed down to them through generations; but their own additions were soon limited to mere amendments rendered necessary by the provisions of some senatusconsult that affected the jus honorarium. They ceased to be that viva vox juris civilis which they had been in the time of Cicero; the emperor, if any one, was now entitled to the epithet; the annual edict had lost its raison d'être. Hadrian was of opinion that the time had come for writing its "explicit," and giving it another and a more enduring and authoritative shape,—for so fashioning and so sanctioning it that it might be received as law, and not merely as edict, throughout the length and breadth of the empire. He accordingly commissioned Salvius Julianus, urban praetor at the time (p. 299), to revise it, with a view to its approval by the senate as part of the statute law.

The revised version, like the XII Tables, is unfortunately no longer extant. It is only a very slight account we have of the revision,—a line or two in Eutropius and Aurelius Victor, and a few lines in two of Justinian's prefaces to the Digest.² We may assume, from what is said there, that there were both abridgment and rearrangement of the edicts of the urban praetor; but the question remains how far Julian consolidated with them those of the peregrin praetor and other magistrates who had contributed to the jus honorarium. Those of the curule aediles, we are told, were included; Justinian says that they formed the last part of Julian's work,³ and may have been a sort of appendix. There is reason to believe that so much of the edicts of the provincial governors as differed from those of the praetors were also incorporated in it; for Gaius wrote a commentary on the provincial edict:⁴ and this can hardly have been anything else than the Julian version, seeing that before it there was no general provincial edict, but only a number of particular ones.⁵ That the edicts of the peregrin praetors, in so far as they contained available matter not embodied in those of their urban colleagues or the provincial governors, were dealt with in the same way, seems more than likely.⁶ The consolidation got the name of Edictum Perpetuum in a sense somewhat different from that formerly imputed to edicta perpetua as distinguished from edicta repentina (p. 238); and, after approval by Hadrian, seems to have been formally sanctioned by senatusconsult. It was thus a closed chapter so far as the praetors were concerned; for, though it may have continued for a time to hold its place on their album, with its formularies of actions, they had no longer any power to alter or make additions to it. It had ceased to be a mere efflux of their imperium and had become matter of statute; and its interpretation and amendment were no longer in their hands but in those of the emperor.⁷

¹ See Karlowa, Röm. RG. vol. i. § 82. [Krüger, Quellen, § 18.]

² Const. Δέδωκεν (in front of the Digest), § 18, and Const. "Tanta" (Cod. i. 17, 2, § 18).

The Julian Edict does not seem to have been divided into books, but only into rubricated titles;⁸ and the general impression is that the formularies of actions were split up and distributed in their appropriate places. The arrangement is not difficult to discover by comparison of the various commentaries upon it, particularly those of Ulpian and Paul, which each contained over eighty books. First came a series of titles dealing with the foundations and first steps of all legal procedure, — jurisdiction, summons, intervention of

³ Const. Ad δωκεν, § 5.

⁴ See the Florentine index, in Mommsen's greater edition of the Digest, vol. i. p. liii*.

⁵ Mommsen, in Z. f. RG. vol. ix. (1870), p. 96.

⁶ [See Girard, pp. 52-54, who makes some valuable suggestions on these points.]

⁷ Julian, in Dig. i. 3, fr. 11.

⁸ Several of them are mentioned in the excerpts from commentaries on the Edict preserved in the Digest.

attorneys or procurators, etc.; secondly, ordinary process in virtue of the magistrate's jurisdictio; thirdly, extraordinary process, originally in virtue of his imperium; fourthly, execution against judgment-debtors, bankrupts, etc.; fifthly, interdicts, exceptions, and praetorian stipulations; and lastly, the aedilian remedies.⁹ From the quotations from the Julian Edict embodied in the fragments of the writings of the commentators preserved by Justinian,¹⁰ repeated attempts have been made to reproduce it. Most of them are nothing more than literal transcripts or attempted reconstructions of passages in the Digest that are supposed to have been borrowed from it, and are of comparatively little value. The only really scientific and worthily critical efforts are those of Rudorff in 1869 and Lenel in 1883.¹¹

SECTION 59.—RESPONSES OF PATENTED COUNSEL¹

The account given by Pomponius of the origin of the jus respondendi ex auctoritate principis (the right of giving opinions in law under imperial authority) seems on the first view a little contradictory, and to leave it in doubt whether Augustus or Tiberius is entitled to the credit of its introduction. Giving advice to clients in public was no new thing; for Pomponius himself attributes the commencement of the practice to Tiberius Coruncanius in the beginning of the sixth century of the City, and speaks of Scipio Nasica having a house in the via sacra presented to him at the public cost for greater convenience in ⁹ See Lenel (as in note 11), pp. 23-38. This generally is the order of the Digest and the Code, which Justinian (Cod. i. 17, 1, § 5) instructed his commissioners to model after the Edict.

¹⁰ It is possible that we have the greater part of Ulpian's commentary; for nearly one-fifth of the Digest is taken from it.

¹¹ Rudorff, De jurisdictione edictum: edicti perpetui quae reliqua sunt, Leipsic, 1869, and rev. by Brinz in the Krit. VJS. vol. xi. (1870), p. 471 sq.; Lenel, Das Edictum Perpetuum: ein Versuch zu dessen Wiederherstellung, Leipsic, 1883. The last gained the "Savigny Foundation Prize" offered by the Munich Academy in 1882 for the best restitution of the formulae of Julian's Edict, but goes far beyond the limited subject prescribed; see Brinz's full report upon it to the Academy in the Z. d. Sav. Stift. vol. iv. R.A. (1883), p. 164 sq.

¹ See Pompon. in Dig. i. 2, fr. 2, § 47; Gai. i. 7; Just. Inst. i. 2, § 8; Machélaud, Observations sur les responsa prudentium, Paris, 1871.

counselling. During the last two centuries of the republic it was a matter of ambition to a patron to have daily a great levée of clients; they increased his importance and augmented his influence. When, therefore, Pomponius says that Sabinus was the first that enjoyed the privilege of responding in public, having had it conceded to him by Tiberius, he may possibly mean that he was the first that had permission to open one of those stationes jus publice respondentium of which mention is made by Gellius, and where, from his account, both practical and speculative questions of law were freely discussed.²

The right of responding under imperial authority, first granted by Augustus and continued by his successors down to the time of Alexander Severus, was something quite different, and did not imply publicity. Neither did it imply any curtailment of the right of unpatented jurists to give advice to any one who chose to consult them. What it did was to give an authoritative character to a response, so that the judge who had asked for it and to whom it was presented—for the judges were but private citizens, most of them unlearned in the law—was bound to adopt it as if it had emanated from the emperor himself. It may be that Augustus was actuated by a political motive,—that he was desirous by this concession to attach lawyers of eminence to the new régime, and prevent the recurrence of the evils experienced during the republic from the too great influence of patrons. But whatever may have prompted his action in the matter, its beneficial consequences for the law can hardly be overrated. For the quasi-legislative powers with which they were invested enabled the patented counsel to influence current doctrine not speculatively merely but positively (jura condere),³ and to so leaven their interpretations of the jus civile and jus honorarium with suggestions of natural law as to give a new complexion to the system (§ 55).

Instead of giving his opinion, like the unlicensed jurist, by word of mouth, either at the request of the judge or at the instance of one of the parties, the patented counsel, who did not require to give his reasons,⁴ reduced it to writing and sent it to the court under seal. Augustus does not seem to have contemplated the possibility of conflicting responses being tendered from two or more jurists equally privileged. It was an awkward predicament for a judge to be placed in. Hadrian solved the difficulty by declaring that in such a case a judge should be entitled to use his own discretion. That on receiving a response with which he was dissatisfied he could go on calling for others until he got one to his mind, and then pronounce judgment in accordance with it on the ground that there was difference of opinion, is extremely unlikely. The more probable explanation of Hadrian's rescript is this,—that the number of patented responding counsel was very limited; that a judge, if he desired their assistance, was required by this rescript to consult them all (quorum omnium, etc.); that if they were unanimous, but only then, their opinion had force of statute (legis vicem optinet); and that when they differed the judge must decide for himself.⁵

² Gell. xiii. 13, 1. See Bremer, Rechtslehrer u. Rechtsschulen im röm. Kaiserreich (Berlin, 1868), pp. 8-15. [What Pomponius apparently means is that Augustus introduced the jus respondendi, but Sabinus was the first to receive a formal grant of it.]

³ Gaius and Justinian, as in note 1. [Krüger, Geschichte der Quellen, p. 113.]

SECTION 60.—CONSTITUTIONS OF THE EMPERORS¹

Gaius and Ulpian concur in holding that every imperial constitution, whether in the shape of rescript, decree, or edict, had the force of statute. It may be that by the time of Ulpian that was the prevailing opinion; but modern criticism is disposed to regard the dictum of Gaius, written in the time of Antoninus Pius, as coloured by his Asiatic notions, and not quite accurate so far as the edicts were concerned. As supreme magistrate the emperor had the same jus edicendi that kings, consuls, and praetors had had before him, and used it as they did to indicate some course of action he meant to adopt and follow, or some relief he proposed to grant. His range, of course, was much greater than that of the praetors had been; for his authority endured for life, and extended over the whole empire and every department of government. But originally, and in principle, his successor on the throne was no more bound to adopt any of his edicts than a praetor was to adopt those of his predecessors. That it was not unusual for an edict to be renewed, and that it occasionally happened that the renewal was not by the immediate successor of its original author, is manifest from various passages in the texts.² Very frequently, when its utility had stood the test of years, it was transmuted into a senatusconsult;³ this fact proves of itself that an edict per se had not the effect of statute. But just as, according to Cicero, a praetorian edict that had held its place on the album through a long series of years came to be regarded as consuetudinary law, so it may have been with the imperial edicts; their adoption by a succession of two or three sovereigns, whose reigns were of average duration, may have been held sufficient to give them the same character; and, by a not unnatural process, unreflecting public opinion may have come to impute force of statute to the edict itself rather than to the longa consuetudo that followed on it, thus paving the way for the assertion by the sovereigns of the later empire of an absolute right of legislation, and for the recognition of the lex edictalis (§ 74) as the only form of statute.

⁴ Seneca, Epist. xliv. 27.

⁵ [This view receives some support from the terms of the Valentinian Law of Citations, infra, p. 363. For other views, cf. Girard, p. 67; Moyle, Institutes, pp. 57 sq.]

¹ Gai. i. 5; Ulp. in Dig. i. 4, fr. 1, § 1; Mommsen, Röm. Staatsrecht, vol. ii. p. 848 sq.; Wlassak, Krit. Studien zur Theorie der Rechtsquellen im Zeitalter d. klass. Juristen, Graz, 1884; A. Pernice (crit. Wlassak), in Z. d. Sav. Stift., vol. vi. R.A. (1885), p. 293 sq.; Karlowa, Röm. RG. vol. i. § 85.

The imperial rescripts and decrees (rescripta, decreta) had force of law (legis vicem habent) from the earliest days of the empire, and their operation was never limited to the lifetime of the prince from whom they had proceeded. But they were not directly acts of legislation. In both the emperor theoretically did no more than authoritatively interpret existing law, although the boundary between interpretation and new law, sometimes difficult to define, was not always strictly adhered to.⁴ The rescript was an answer by the emperor to a petition, either by an official or a private party, for an instruction as to how the law was to be applied to the facts set forth; it usually came from the provinces, where the services of the patented counsel were not readily obtained; and, when from a private party, was often only in anticipation of litigation, and for his guidance as to whether or not he should embark on it. When the answer was in a separate writing it was usually spoken of as an epistula; when noted at the foot of the application its technical name was subscriptio or adnotatio. The decree was the emperor's ruling in a case submitted to him judicially; it might be when it had been brought before him in the first instance extra ordinem (p. 344), or when it had been removed by supplicatio from an inferior court in its earliest stage, or when it came before him by appeal. It was as a judge that the emperor pronounced his decree; but, proceeding as it did from the fountain of authoritative interpretation, it had a value far beyond that of the judgment of an inferior court (which was law only as between the parties), and formed a precedent which governed all future cases involving the same question. Those decrees and rescripts constituted one of the most important sources of the law during the first three centuries and more of the empire, and were elaborated with the assistance of the most eminent jurists of the day, the rescripts being the special charge of the magister libellorum. From the time of the Gordians to that of the abdication of Diocletian they were almost the only direct channel of the law that remained (§ 64).

² E.g. Dig. xvi. 1, fr. 2: "Et primo quidem temporibus divi Augusti, mox deinde Claudii, edictis eorum erat interdictum, ne feminae pro viris suis intercederent;" which indicates that the edict of Augustus on the subject had not been adopted by Tiberius or Caligula, but first renewed by Claudius. From Dig. xxxviii. 6, 26, it appears that an edict of Augustus's, forbidding a man to disinherit a son who was a soldier, dropped on his death and was not renewed by his successors. See another illustration in Inst. ii. 12, pr.

³ As happened to the edicts referred to in the first part of last note; they formed the substance of the Velleian senatusconsult, at the instance of the emperor Claudius. According to Tacitus (Ann. iv. 16), the senatusconsult of Tiberius's declaring that confarreation should no longer place a wife in subjection to her husband (infra, p. 324) was the renewal of an edict of Augustus's.

⁴ As instances may be mentioned Hadrian's rescript (epistula) introducing the "benefit of division" amongst co-sureties (Just. Inst. iii. 20, 4), and the decree of Marcus Aurelius (known ever after as the decretum divi Marci) repressing and punishing self-help (Dig. xlviii. 7, fr. 7).

CHAPTER II

JURISPRUDENCE

SECTION 61.—LABEO AND CAPITO, AND THE SCHOOLS OF THE PROCULIANS AND SABINIANS¹

THE names of M. Antistius Labeo and Ateius Capito occur very frequently in conjunction. They were for a time rivals in political life, Capito attaching himself to the court party, while Labeo inclined to range himself in opposition to the régime of the nascent monarchy. Submission, if not subservience, to authority, and unquestioning acceptance of the new order of things, was the characteristic of the one; a stout but sometimes quixotic independence the characteristic of the other. The attempt has often been made to trace a parallel between their respective modes of thought in politics and jurisprudence. But we do not know enough of Capito as a jurist to enable us to speak with any certainty as to his opinions. He is rarely referred to in the texts; whereas Labeo's was the name of greatest authority from the time of Augustus down to that of Hadrian. From the remains of his writings preserved in the Digest, it is easy to see,—as, in fact, we are told by Pomponius and Aulus Gellius—that he was a man of great general culture, well versed in the history and antiquities of the law, an acute dialectician, and in philosophy imbued to some extent with the teaching of the Stoics. In his exposition of the law he was as independent as in his political opinions, criticising with freedom the doctrines even of those who had been his instructors in jurisprudence, and guided in his own judgments by constant reference to the origin of an institution or a rule, and the object it was intended to effect. One of the most celebrated of his writings was his Libri πιθανῶν (Probabilium), a theoretical treatise, which was epitomised and annotated by Paulus two centuries later. Another work, his Libri Posteriorum, a more practical treatise on various branches of the jus civile, was abridged by Javolenus, and seems to have been of considerable authority. Besides these, Labeo was the author of commentaries on the pontifical law, the XII Tables, and the Edicts of the urban and peregrin praetors, as well as of a collection of responses. The estimation in which he was held by the jurists of the classical period, i.e., from Hadrian to Alexander Severus, is to be measured, not so much by the comparatively small bulk of the excerpts from his writings preserved in the Digest (and which are almost exclusively from his Libri πιθανῶν and Posteriorum), as by the frequency of the mention of him by other authors. It is nothing uncommon to find his opinions, and particularly his definitions of terms of law, referred to ten, fifteen, or even twenty times in the course of the same title.

¹ Mascovius, De sectis Sabinianor. et Proculianor. Leips. 1728; Van Eck, "De vita, moribus et studiis Labeonis et Capitonis," in Oelrichs' Novus Thesaurus dissert. jurid. vol. i. tom. 2 (Bremen, 1771), p. 821 sq.; Dirksen, "Ueber d. Schulen d. röm. Juristen," in his Beiträge zur Kunde d. röm. Rechts (Leipsic, 1825), p. 1 sq.; Bremer, as in § 59, note 2; Pernice, M. Antistius Labeo, vol. i 1878, and ii 1878; Kuntze, Excursus über röm. Recht (2nd ed. Leipsic, 1880), pp. 318-331; Schanz, "Die Analogisten und Anomalisten im röm. Recht," in Philologus for 1883, p. 309 sq.; Roby, Introduction, chap. ix.; Karlowa, Röm. RG. i. pp. 662 sq., 677 sq. [Krüger, Quellen, §§ 18-21; Sohm, Inst. § 15.]

Labeo and Capito are said to have been the founders of the two schools or sects—both phrases are used in the texts—of the Proculians and Sabinians;² but it is Nerva and Proculus that Gaius always speaks of as the early representatives of the one, Sabinus and Cassius as the representatives of the other.³ Bremer's view, that the schools were two rival teaching halls ⁴—stationes jus publice docentium,⁵ admits of a good deal of argument in its support; for we are expressly told that Nerva and Proculus were pupils of Labeo's, and Masurius Sabinus, Javolenus Priscus, and Julian are all mentioned as professors as well as practitioners. Bremer suggests that the schools may have taken their names from Proculus and Sabinus, because they were the first to found permanent halls in which they began to teach the doctrines they had respectively received from their masters, and which became a sort of tradition with their disciples. To the question, what were the essential doctrinal differences between them? there is no satisfactory reply. Karlowa propounds the opinion, and backs it with many quotations that seem fairly to support it, that the Proculians preferred to abide by the jus civile, while the Sabinians had a greater predilection for the jus gentium and the speculative doctrines of natural law. But it would be easy to glean from the records of their controversies in the pages of Gaius⁶ (who professed himself a Sabinian) quite as many texts that would support the very reverse. Karlowa's view is not very consistent either with the estimation in which Labeo was held by the jurists of two hundred years later as an independent thinker who had thrown new light upon many branches of the law, or with the fact that the Libri III de jure civili of Sabinus were regarded by those same jurists as the most authoritative repertory of it in existence,—brief,

² Pompon. in Dig. i. 2, fr. 2, §§ 47-52.

³ The following, according to Pomponius, was the succession :—PROCULIANS —1. M. Antistius Labeo (temp. Aug. and Tib.); 2. M. Cocceius Nerva (consul 22 A.D.); 3. Sempron. Proculus (temp. Claudius, etc.); 4. Nerva the younger (praetor 65 A.D., father of the emperor Nerva); 5. Longinus (of whom nothing more is known than that he filled a praetorship); 6. Pegasus (temp. Vespasian);

7. Juventius Celsus (temp. Vespasian and Domitian); 8. Neratius Priscus (temp. Domitian, Nerva, Trajan); 9. Juventius Celsus the younger (Domitian to Hadrian). SABINIANS—1. M. Ateius Capito (consul 5 A.D., died 21 A.D.); 2. Masurius Sabinus (temp. Tiberius and Nero); 3. C. Cassius Longinus (Tiberius to Vespasian); 4. Caelius Sabinus (temp. Vespasian); 5. Javolenus Priscus (Domitian to Hadrian); 6. Aburnius Valens (temp. Hadrian?); 7. Tuscianus (temp. Hadrian?); 8. Salvius Julianus (Hadrian and Antoninus Pius). These were the successive heads of the two schools, according to the narrative of Pomponius. To judge by their reputation in later years, they must have been of very unequal merit, for of some there is no further mention.

⁴ Bremer, Rechtslehrer und Rechtsschulen, p. 68 sq.

⁵ Gell. xiii. 18, 1. [Cf. Krüger, Quellen, pp. 138, 148.]

⁶ Most of them will be found collected in Elvers's Promptuarium Gaiianum (Göttingen, 1824), under the heads "Auctores diversae scholae" and "Nostri praeceptores." Many more, gleaned from other quarters, will be found in Mascovius, and a considerable selection of them in Roby, p. cxxxi. sq. [See also Krüger, Quellen, § 20, n. 8.]

no doubt, but nevertheless the basis of several voluminous commentarii ad Sabinum.⁷

SECTION 62.—JULIAN, GAIUS, AND THE ANTONINIAN JURISTS

It is impossible in a work of the dimensions of the present to mention more than a few of the men who built up the law of Rome in the period under consideration.¹ Labeo and Sabinus were the most eminent of the Julian period; the Flavian produced none to equal them. Under Hadrian and the Antonines the most distinguished names are those of Salvius Julianus, Pomponius, Africanus, Gaius, and Q. Cervidius Scaevola. The first, who, according to Pomponius,² was in his time at the head of the Sabinian school, was by birth an African, and maternal grandfather of the emperor Didius Julianus. Under Hadrian and Antoninus Pius he filled the offices of praetor, consul, and praefectus urbi, and for a long time was the leading spirit in the imperial council. It was to him that Hadrian entrusted the task of consolidating the Edict. That, however, was a small matter compared with the work to which he devoted the best part of his life,—his Digesta.³ Labeo had been a pioneer, but in this great body of law Julian shows himself well advanced towards the citadel. In ninety books, following so far much the same order in which he arranged the Edict, he deals with both civil and praetorian law, illustrating his doctrines with hypothetical cases and fresh and lively questions and answers. There is probably none in the whole catalogue of Roman jurists whose dicta are so frequently quoted by his successors and even by his contemporaries.

⁷ [It is also contrary to the express statement of Pomponius in Dig. i. 2, fr. 2, § 47. For the reference to Karlowa, see n. 1 supra.]

¹ Accounts of the jurists of the so-called classical period are abundant. See Rudorff, Röm. RG. vol. i. §§ 66-78; Roby, Introduction, chaps. x.-xv.; Karlowa, Röm. RG. vol. i. §§ 89-91; Ferrini, Fonti, pp. 55 sq. On their sequence, see Fitting, Ueber das Alter d. Schriften d. röm. Juristen von Hadrian bis Alexander, Basle, 1860.

² See § 61, note 2. Buhl, Salvius Julianus, vol. i. (Heidelb. 1886), pp. 11-134.

³ See Mommsen, "Ueber Julians Digesta," in the Z. f. RG. vol. ix. (1870) p. 82 sq.; Buhl, l.c. p. 86 sq.

Sextus Pomponius was a contemporary of Julian's, but survived him. His literary career, like Julian's and Gaius's, was prolonged, beginning in the reign of Hadrian and continuing through the twenty-three years of that of Antoninus Pius, and well on into that of Marcus Aurelius and Verus. His work was diversified,—archaeological, historical, doctrinal, critical. His readings on Quintus Mucius Scaevola (p. 248) were utilised by the jurists of the Severan period, and drawn on to some extent by Justinian's commissioners. So were his Epistulae, which seem for the most part to have been opinions given to consulting clients in a fuller and more argumentative and critical fashion than was usual in the responsa of patented counsel. Still more largely drawn upon in the compilation of the Digest were his writings on Sabinus. Singularly enough, his voluminous commentary on the Edict is not excerpted directly, although numerous references to it are preserved in extracts from the commentaries of Ulpian and Paul. He is most familiar to moderns in connection with his Enchiridion, from which a long passage is preserved in the Digest, sketching the external history of the law from the foundation of the City to the time of Hadrian, and which has been often referred to in the preceding pages.⁴

Likewise of the same period as Julian, and one of his friends, though probably younger, was Sextus Caecilius Africanus, whom Gellius introduces in a colloquy with Favorinus about some of the antiquities of the XII Tables, but without his cognomen. His principal works were several books of Questions (quaestiones) and a still greater number of Epistulae. The former were liberally made use of by Justinian's commissioners, but the latter very sparingly. About the Questions there is this peculiarity,—that the case stated interrogatively and the answer to it, are very frequently connected by a verb in the third person, ait, respondit, etc., from which many jurists conclude that Africanus is giving not his own opinion but that of some other counsel, probably

⁴ Many critics entertain the opinion that it is to some extent corrupt; see in particular Osann, Pomp. de origine juris frag. Giessen, 1848. Sanio has attempted to make out its indebtedness to Varro, in his Varroniana in d. Schriften d. röm. Juristen, Leipzig, 1867.

Julian.⁵ His writings are acute and exact, but sometimes obscure; the saying was common long ago—"Lex Africani, ergo difficilis."

Gaius must be placed somewhat later than Julian, Pomponius, and Africanus; for although he speaks of an event in the reign of Hadrian as occurring in his "own time," yet his literary activity only commenced under Antoninus Pius, continuing until after the death of Marcus Aurelius. Although of such repute in the fifth century as to be one of the five jurists put before all others in the Valentinian Law of Citations (§ 78), yet of his personal history we know nothing. He is but once (if at all) mentioned by a contemporary,⁶ and never by any of his successors. Some eminent authorities are of opinion, from the internal evidence of his writings, that he must have been a provincial, and probably an Asiatic,⁷ while others maintain as decidedly that Rome must have been his headquarters.⁸ It cannot be disputed that he devoted a considerable amount of attention in his Institutiones to peculiarities of the law that affected peregrins; and Karlowa suggests what so far conciliates the discordant views,—that he may have taught in Rome, but addressed his teaching especially to provincials residing there.⁹ It was as a teacher and theoretical jurist that he excelled; indeed it is very doubtful whether he was a practitioner at all, and all but certain that he had not the jus respondendi. His famous work was his Institutionum commentarii quattuor; not a work of erudition or indicative of juridical powers of the

⁵ [That the references are to Julian seems to be established, see Krüger, Gesch. d. Quellen, § 23, n. 26.]

⁶ By Pomponius, in Dig. xlv. 3, 39: "quod Caius noster dixit." It is by no means certain that Pomponius was not referring to Caius Cassius Longinus, one of the heads of the Sabinian school,—“our master Cassius.” No doubt Gaius was a Sabinian as well as Pomponius, and the “noster” may mean no more than fraternity; but the “dixit” suggests allusion to a predecessor rather than to a young contemporary. [Cf. G. M. Asher, in Z. f. RG. vol. v. p. 83 sq., who negatives the reference of the passage to Gaius, and G. Padelletti, Del nome di Gaio, Roma, 1874, who affirms it. See Appendix, p. 432.]

⁷ E.g. Mommsen, "Gaius ein Provincialjurist," in Bekker und Muther's Jahrb. vol. iii. (1859), p. 1 sq.; Bluhme, in the Z. f. RG. vol. iii. (1864), p. 452 sq.; Kuntze, Der Provincialjurist Gaius wissenschaftlich abgeschätzt, Leipsic, 1883.

⁸ E.g. Huschke, in the Z. f. RG. vol. vii. (1868), p. 161 sq., and in the introduction to his 4th [and 5th] editions of Gaius. [See Appendix, p. 432.]

⁹ Karlowa, Röm. RG. vol. i. p. 722. See Roby, Introduction, p. clxxv. sq.

highest order; but of great value as a compendium of the fundamental doctrines of the law, alike from the simplicity of its method, the interest of its historical illustration, and the precision and accuracy of its language. The excitement that followed the happy discovery of the manuscript of it in the year 1816 (p. 309), at the moment when the founders of the historical school of jurisprudence were coming to the front, and the enthusiastic gratitude men felt towards its author for the store of new material which it laid open to them, have led to his elevation to a higher pinnacle than his actual merits altogether warrant.

As a jurist Gaius cannot be put on the same level with Labeo or Julian, Ulpian or Papinian. It may be owing to his having been only in the second rank that his name never occurs in the pages of his contemporaries and successors; men who sat in the imperial council and responded ex auctoritate principis were unlikely to quote one who, however skilful and successful as a teacher, yet had neither experience as a practitioner nor great reputation as a speculative jurist. All his writings seem to have had an educational aim,—his commentaries on the XII Tables, on the aedilian edict, the provincial edict, and the Lex Julia et Papia Poppaea, his selected titles from the urban edict, his monographs on testamentary trusts, dowries, verbal obligations, and the Tertullian and Orphitian senatusconsults, his libri aureorum, etc. The last mentioned,—Rerum quotidianarum sive aureorum libri VII,—a repertory of the law on matters of everyday occurrence, seem to have borne a certain relation to his Institutions, travelling over the same ground but in greater detail, and taking up many of the matters which were not deemed suitable for the elementary treatise. The passages preserved in the Digest are models of exposition. But they display little constructive talent. In this respect Gaius compares unfavourably with Julian. His tread is firm where his ground is sure, but he manifests timidity and hesitation as he approaches controversy. Notwithstanding these defects, however, his Institutes cannot be too highly valued. Criticism may detect in them a few historical¹⁰ and even some doctrinal errors; but these shrink into insignificance in view of the wealth of instruction about branches of the law of the republic and early empire which their pages afford.¹¹

¹⁰ See Lotmar, Krit. Studien in Sachen der Contravindication (Munich, 1878), pp. 10-22, 53-57; Kuntze, as in note 7.

Q. Cervidius Scaevola was later than Gaius. He seems to have commenced his career in the reign of Antoninus Pius, to have been in his prime in that of Marcus Aurelius, in whose council he sat,¹² and to have been still engaged in his profession in the early years of Septimius Severus. He was that emperor's instructor in law, and at the same time had Papinian as a pupil. With his successors he had great reputation as a consulting counsel; and many of his clients, to judge from his Digesta and Quaestiones, seem to have been in the Greek-speaking provinces. His Questions, otherwise responses, are very brief and pointed, and the answers sometimes without reasons. The same species facti—one may say the same case—that is recorded in them frequently reappears in his Digesta, but treated more fully and argumentatively. The latter work, however, is not exclusively devoted to case law, but contains a considerable amount of doctrinal exposition of a high order, that justifies the compliment paid to Scaevola by Arcadius and Honorius as prudentissimus jurisconsultorum.¹³

SECTION 63.—PAPINIAN, ULPIAN, AND PAUL

Aemilius Papinianus¹ is supposed to have been a native of Phoenicia. Trained under Scaevola, he was already advocatus fisci under Marcus Aurelius, and became master of requests (magister libellorum, § 60) and afterwards praetorian prefect under Septimius Severus. He is said to have been connected with the latter emperor by marriage, and was certainly one of his most intimate and trusted friends. He accompanied

¹¹ The literature on the subject of Gaius is overwhelming; the latest treatise is that of Glasson, Étude sur Gaius, etc., 2nd ed. Paris, 1885. [See Krüger, Gesch. d. Quellen, § 24.]

¹² From what Capitolinus says (Marc. 11), it is probable that Scaevola was one of the emperor's praetorian prefects.

¹³ Cod. Theod. iv. 4, 3, § 3.

¹ See Ael. Spart. Carac. 8; Ev. Otto, Papinianus, sive de vita, etc. Leyden, 1718; Roby, Introduction, p. cxc. sq. [See also an interesting article in Juridical Review, vol. v. p. 289, by N. J. D. Kennedy.]

Severus to Britain; and an enactment in the Code, dated from York in the year 210, may not unreasonably be imputed to his pen.² The emperor before his death committed to him the charge of his two sons; but he was unable to prevent the murder of the younger, and his refusal to defend the act led to his own assassination by order and in the presence of the elder. The words put into his mouth in his answer to Caracalla—that to defend the murder of the innocent was to slay him afresh³—were characteristic of Papinian, whose integrity and high moral principle were as remarkable as his eminence in law. It may be that the one helped the other; and the criticism has been passed upon him that, if he was the prince of jurists, it was because he knew better than any of his contemporaries how to subordinate law to morals. His principal works were his collections of Quaestiones (thirty-seven books) and Responsa (nineteen books). His younger contemporaries Ulpian and Paul seem to have been somewhat envious of his reputation, and to have annotated many of his opinions with considerable freedom. But posterity judged between them; and first Constantine in 321, and afterwards Theodosius and Valentinian in 426, refused to allow the “notes” to be cited in the tribunals in derogation of Papinian. Justinian is even more lavish in his encomiums on his genius than any of his predecessors on the throne; splendidissimus, acutissimus, disertissimus, sublimissimus, σοφώτατος, merito ante alios excellens, being amongst the epithets in which he indulges. Modern criticism, so fond of applying new standards to a man’s measurements, endorses the verdict of antiquity in so far as it places him far above his fellows in respect of the liveliness of his conceptions of right and wrong. He has no equal in the precision with which he states a case, eliminating all irrelevancies of fact, yet finding relevancies of humanity that would have escaped the vision of most; and without parade, and as it were by instinct, applying the rule of the law as if it lay on the surface and was patent to the world. No man was ever more worthy of the privilege of responding ex auctoritate principis, and no man ever displayed a higher sense at once of the power it conferred and the responsibility it imposed.

² Cod. iii. 32, 1.

³ [Aliud est parricidium accusare innocentem occisum. Another account is that Papinian answered—parricide was not so easy to defend as to commit. See Dio Cass. lxxvii. 4; Spart. Carac. 4.]

Domitius Ulpianus and Julius Paulus made their first appearance in public life as assessors in the auditorium of Papinian and members of the council of Septimius Severus; and in the reign of Caracalla were the heads of two ministerial offices—the records and the requests. Ulpian was of Tyrian origin; which may account for the intimate relations that arose between him and Alexander Severus, whose mother, Julia Mamaea, was from Phoenician Syria. Heliogabalus had deprived him of his dignities and expelled him from Rome; but on the accession of Alexander, then only about sixteen years of age, he was at once reinstated, became the emperor's guardian, was appointed praetorian prefect, and virtually acted as regent.⁴ His curtailment of the privileges conferred on the praetorian guard by Heliogabalus provoked their enmity; again and again he narrowly escaped their vengeance; till at last in the year 228, in the course of a riot between the soldiery and the populace, the former one night found their way into the palace whither Ulpian had fled for shelter, and slew him almost in the arms of the emperor. It is not surprising to find that the cares of government interfered with his literary work; for, great as it was, it seems almost entirely to have been executed before the accession of Alexander. There was a commentary on the ius civile ("ad Sabinum") in over fifty books; one on the Edict in more than eighty books; collections of Opinions, Responses, and Disputations; books of Rules and Institutions; treatises on the functions of the different magistrates, one of them (de officio proconsulis libri X) being a comprehensive exposition of the criminal law; besides monographs on various statutes, on testamentary trusts, and so forth. The characteristic of the greater treatises is doctrinal exposition of a high order, flavoured with judicious criticism, and marked by great lucidity of arrangement, style, and language; throughout they bear evidence of the extent of his indebtedness to his predecessors. The quasi-philosophical observations in which he indulges in his Institutions are superficial; but otherwise his compendia are models of conciseness, while free from inelegance. His works altogether have supplied to Justinian's Digest about a third of its contents, and his commentary on the Edict of itself nearly a fifth.

⁴ [Alexander in a rescript refers to Ulpian as "praefectum praetorio et parentem meum," Cod. iv. 65, l. 4.]

Paul, who seems to have been in youth a pupil and in riper years an admirer of Scaevola's, had a literary career very much like that of Ulpian; it was extremely prolific until, as the latter's successor, he became Alexander's praetorian prefect, but happily was not altogether interrupted by the cares of government. The range of both jurists was much the same; Paul, however, contenting himself with a shorter commentary on Sabinus than Ulpian, though going far beyond the latter in the number of his monographs, some of which were devoted to the exposition of points of procedure. He had wider interests than Ulpian, was quite as acute, and perhaps more subtle. Modestine, who was a pupil of Ulpian's, speaks of the two as κορυφαῖοι τῶν νομικῶν; and some of the later emperors, oblivious of Labeo and Julian, bestow on Paul epithets that seem to give him rank only second to Papinian. But he failed in two qualities in which Ulpian excelled,—precision of statement and clearness of diction;⁵ and it is not surprising, therefore, to find that his writings contributed to the Digest only about a fifth of its bulk as against Ulpian's third.

SECTION 64.—MODESTINE AND THE POST-SEVERAN JURISTS

Herennius Modestinus, a native of or closely connected with one of the Greek-speaking provinces, and a pupil of Ulpian's, merits special attention for no other reason than that he is put by the Valentinian Law of Citations (§ 78) on the same distinguished platform as Gaius, Papinian, Ulpian, and Paul. There are numerous extracts from his writings,

⁵ [Hence the complaint of the glossators, "maledictus Paulus ita obscure loquitur ut vix intelligi potest."]

some of them in Greek, preserved in the Digest; but they leave the impression of their author's incapacity to take broad views and inclination towards hair-splitting. His career began in the reign of Caracalla, and continued through that of Alexander and into the turmoils that followed the extinction of the Severan dynasty. He is mentioned with esteem in a rescript of Gordian's of the year 239; and in an inscription of the year 244 (the year of the accession of Philip the Arabian), preserved in the Capitoline Museum, his name occurs as one of the arbiters in a question raised by a guild of fullers.¹ There are only four jurists of later date quoted in the Digest, and two of them (Hermogenian and Arcadius Charisius) are supposed to have flourished as late as the middle of the fourth century. With Modestine jural literature in the proper sense seems to have come to an end, and general opinion goes the length of affirming a complete eclipse of jural talent. This, however, is going too far. There are in Justinian's Code and elsewhere about 300 rescripts of Gordian's six years' reign; the constitutions of the reign of Diocletian, half a century later, if the list of them in Haenel's Index² be correct, number about 1200 or 1300, more than nine-tenths of them rescripts; and even in some of the intermediate reigns, e.g. those of Philip the Arabian and Valerianus and Gallienus, the number is not inconsiderable. Many of those rescripts are of great merit, and not inferior to the ordinary run of the Responses of an earlier period. This could not have been the case had jurisprudence passed on the death of Alexander Severus into such utter darkness as is commonly supposed. That there was a serious change for the worse is unquestionable; otherwise there would hardly have been such a cessation of literary activity, contemporaneously with the discontinuance of the practice of responding. The latter is to be accounted for by the growth of absolutism. It was no longer patented counsel that responded under imperial authority; the emperor himself was now more than ever resorted to as the fountainhead of authoritative interpretation; and the imperial consistory drew within it, to aid him in his labours, all that remained of the skilled representatives of jurisprudence.³

¹ Printed in Bruns, p. 259.

² The Index Legum appended to Haenel's Corpus leg. ab imp. rom. ante Justinianum latarum, Leipsic, 1857.

SECTION 65.—REMAINS OF THE JURISPRUDENCE OF THE PERIOD

The principal repository of what remains of the jurisprudence of the first three centuries of the empire is the Digest of Justinian (§ 84), the imperial rescripts being largely embodied in various collections of the later empire, as well as in Justinian's Code. A considerable number of passages from the writings of Gaius, Papinian, Ulpian, and Paul are to be found also in the Collatio, the Vatican Fragments, and the Consultatio (§ 81). In addition to them we have from other quarters three texts of great importance,—the Institutes of Gaius, part of a work of Ulpian's, and Paul's Sentences, together with some lesser ones and a few isolated fragments.¹

An abridgment of the Institutes of Gaius in two books is contained in the Lex Romana Visigothorum (§ 82).² It was well known to be an abridgment because of the existence of passages from the original text in the Collatio and in Justinian's Digest. It was also well known that the original had not only been compiled and employed by its author for educational purposes (although opinions differed very widely as to its date), but that it had been in use as the elementary text-book in law from the time of the establishment of the Constantinople school in 425 down to that of Justinian's reforms of 533. Great, therefore, was the regret that had often been expressed that so valuable a monument had been lost; and great consequently the rejoicing over the happy chance that unearthed a copy of it in the chapter library at Verona. Scipio Maffei, in the middle of last century, in describing some of its manuscript treasures, referred to and printed a stray leaf that dealt with the subject of interdicts; but it was not much

³ See on this subject Hofmann, "Der Verfall der röm. Rechtswissenschaft," in his Krit. Studien im röm. Rechte (Vienna, 1885), p. 3 sq.

¹ See a connected account of the remains of the jurisprudence of the classical period in Karlowa, Röm. RG. vol. i. § 92.

² First edited apart from the Lex Romana in 1525; the last edition is that of Böcking (Bonn, 1831), in the Corp. jur. Rom. Antejustiniani.

noticed by lawyers, and was for the first time discovered (by Haubold) to be a passage from the long-lost Gaius in the year 1816. Almost at the same time, by a curious coincidence, Niebuhr, passing through Verona, and devoting a day or two to the library, came upon a palimpsest of the Epistles of St. Jerome, underneath which he detected what he conjectured to be a treatise of Ulpian's, but which Savigny, to whom Niebuhr communicated his discovery, along with the leaf de interdictis and a leaf from the palimpsest, at once pronounced to be the work of Gaius.³ Further investigation revealed it to be the very copy of his Institutes from which the stray leaf referred to had been extracted,—a large quarto of 127 leaves, written apparently in the fifth century. Commissioners were at once deputed by the Berlin Academy to make a transcript, and in 1820 the work was printed under the editorship of Göschen. It was very incomplete; for some thirty pages of the MS. were entirely or to a great extent illegible, owing partially to the action of the chemicals on the parchment where the monks had destroyed the surface with pumice-stone. A revision of it was made two years later by Blume; unfortunately his reckless use of more powerful agents than Göschen had ventured to employ obscured far more than it revealed. Edition after edition of the text followed in tolerably rapid succession; each new editor offering his own contribution of conjectural readings towards amendment of errors and filling up of gaps. The wildness of some of their suggestions convinced the more reflecting of the necessity of bringing the critics back to the MS. itself. Böcking set to work to prepare a facsimile; but it was only of the transcripts made years before by Göschen and Blume.⁴ This was insufficient; so the Berlin Academy again took the matter in hand, and commissioned Studemund to proceed to Verona and prepare a fresh transcript of the MS. itself. He spent there several months of 1866, 1867, and 1868; and when his transcript was completed a fount of type was cast for him at the expense of the Academy, representing as closely as possible the letters and other marks in the original, wherewith he was enabled in 1874 to produce his Apographum.⁵ It is of the same size as the original, and represents line by line and letter by letter all that Studemund was able to decipher; doubtful words and letters being in fainter type, what Göschen had read (before Blume's chemicals had made passages undecipherable) being also in faint type but enclosed in square brackets, and those that no one had ever been able to make out being left blank. This magnificent and conscientious reproduction will probably remain the basis of every reliable edition of Gaius for many years to come.⁶ But it has already received its first supplement,—the result of a fresh inspection and chemical treatment of the MS. by Studemund and Krüger in the years 1878 and 1883, which has enabled them (1) to add considerably to the deciphered matter, and (2) to negative with certainty the accuracy of some of the restitutions of undeciphered passages previously proposed.⁷

³ Savigny's account of the discovery, embodying Niebuhr's letter to him, is in the Z. f. gesch. RW. vol. iii. (1817), p. 129 sq.

⁴ Gai Inst. Cod. Veron. Apographum ad Goescheni Hollwegi Bluhmii schedas compositum . . . publicavit Ed. Böcking, Leipsic, 1866.

In 1549 there were first published in Paris by Bishop Jean Dutillet, from a manuscript in his possession, what bore to be a portion of a work of Ulpian's. The MS. soon afterwards disappeared; but its identity with one presently in the Vatican Library is now generally admitted.⁸ It opens with the words "Incipiunt tituli ex corpore Ulpiani." Modern criticism has satisfactorily established that the titles which ⁵ Gaii Institutionum Cod. Veron. Apographum . . . edid. Guilelmus Studemund, Leipsic, 1874.

⁶ There have been published since 1874, and based upon it, editions by Polenaar (Leyden, 1876), Krüger and Studemund jointly (Berlin, 1877 [3rd ed. 1891]), Huschke (his 4th, Leipsic, 1879 [5th ed. 1886]), Muirhead (Edinburgh, 1880), Gneist (Leipsic, 1880), Dubois (Paris, 1881), Abdy and Walker (their 3rd, Cambridge, 1885, which, however, contains no mention of the new readings published by Studemund in 1884). Dubois reproduced the Apographum more literally than the others. He offered no conjectural restitutions of his own, but appended in footnotes and frequently criticised those suggested by previous editors. [Translation and commentary by E. Poste, 3rd ed. Oxford, 1890.]

⁷ Supplementa ad Codicis Veron. Apographum Studemundianum composuit Guil. Studemund. They are printed in facsimile in the introduction to, and embodied in the text of, Krüger and Studemund's second students' edition of Gaius (Leipsic, 1884). This edition forms the first volume of Krüger, Mommsen, and Studemund's Collectio librorum Juris Antejustiniani in usum scholarum.

⁸ Savigny, "Ueber d. Vatikanische MS. des Ulpian," in his Verm. Schrift. vol. iii. p. 28 sq.

follow are from an abridgment of Ulpian's Liber sing. Regularum, executed soon after the year 320, by simple excision of matter no longer applicable to the then state of the law, but without further corruption of the text.⁹ It is a sort of vade-mecum for practitioners, rather than an institutional book; every line almost embodying a doctrine, in language of unparalleled perspicuity. It follows pretty much the order of Gaius; incorporating, however, various matters which he had purposely omitted, such as the law about dowries, the provisions of the Julian and Papia-Poppæan law, and so forth. Unfortunately a large part of it is lost, for the manuscript ends abruptly with the law of succession; so that we are deprived of the rules about obligations and actions, of which a few sentences are preserved elsewhere. All the modern editions are based upon a facsimile of the Vatican MS. made in 1855.¹⁰

The collection which passes by the name of Paul's Sentences (Julii Pauli libri V Sententiarum ad filium) is in this sense a compilation,—that, while the whole of it is from the treatise so designated, yet its parts are collected from a variety of intermediate sources. The original, which was also a vade-mecum for practice, more detailed and more complete than Ulpian's, and arranged in the order of Julian's Edict, was held in the very highest estimation in the third and fourth centuries; and alike by an enactment of Constantine's of the year 327 and by the Valentinian Law of Citations of 426 was declared as authoritative as any imperial constitution.¹¹

⁹ Mommsen, "De Ulpiani Regularum libro singulari," in Böcking's 4th edition (Bonn, 1855); Krüger in the preface to his edition of Ulpian (as in note 10), p. 1 sq.

¹⁰ Ulpiani liber sing. Regularum Cod. Vat. exempl. cur. Ed. Böcking, Leipsic, 1855. Of the subsequent editions may be mentioned Vahlen's (Bonn, 1856), Krüger's (in vol. ii. of the Collectio, etc. mentioned in note 7, Leipsic, 1878), Huschke's (in the 4th ed. of his Jurisprudentia Antejustiniana, Leipsic, 1879, p. 547 sq. [5th ed. 1886, p. 568 sq.]), Muirhead's (appended to his Gaius, Edinburgh, 1880), Gneist's (in the 2nd ed. of his Syntagma Institutionum, Leipsic, 1880), and Abdy and Walker's (appended to their Gaius, 3rd ed. Cambridge, 1885).

¹¹ Says the Consultatio (infra, § 81), vii. 3—" . . . secundum sententiam Pauli juridici, cujus sententias sacratissimorum principum scita semper valituras, ac divalis constitutio, declarant." [See note by Huschke, op. cit. 5th ed. p. 852.] It was probably in consequence of the authority thus accorded to them that in one or two MSS. they are called Pauli Receptae Sententiae.

The pre-eminence thus conferred upon the Sentences explains how it was they found a place in the Lex Romana Visigothorum (§ 82), but greatly abridged by the omission of all that the compilers judged to be no longer of practical value. Some of the later MSS. of the Visigothic collection contain passages which are not in the earlier ones; but the chief sources of the augment of the text are Justinian's Digest and the Collatio, the Vatican Fragments and one or two other collections also aiding to some extent. The result is a reconstruction of the five books, each divided into rubricated titles, altogether of about three times the bulk of the remains of Ulpian's Rules. This is so at least in Krüger's edition, where the additions from the Digest, etc. are printed as part of the text; some editors, however, as, for example, Huschke, content themselves with a simple reference to these in what they consider their appropriate places, and print in extenso no more than is found in the manuscripts of the Visigothic collection.¹²

Of less importance than the three treatises described above, though still of considerable value to the jurist, are the four following:—(1) Some remains of the Notae juris of Valerius Probus, who was of the time of Nero, Vespasian, and Domitian,—explanations of the meanings of single letters occurring in laws and plebiscits, in the practice of the jus civile, in the legis actiones, and in the perpetual Edict. A.T.M.D.O., for example, is interpreted—"aio te mihi dare oportere;" B.E.E.P.P.V.Q.I.—"bona ex edicto possideri proscribi venireque jubebo," and so on to the number of over 150 notae. The most authoritative edition is that of Mommsen, in Keil's collection of the Grammatici Latini.¹³ (2) Volusii Maeciani assis distributio, a tractate on money, weights, measures, and the usual modes of dividing an inheritance, written in the time of Antoninus Pius or of Marcus Aurelius. Here also the authoritative edition is by Mommsen, in the

¹² The editions are numerous; but it is enough to refer to the two mentioned in the text. Krüger's (of 1878) is in vol. ii. of the Collectio librorum, etc. cited in note 7; and Huschke's in the Jurisprudentia Antejustiniana, cited in note 10 [5th ed. p. 457 sq.].

¹³ Also printed in the Collectio, etc. vol. ii. p. 141 sq. and Huschke, l.c. p. 129 sq. [p. 135 sq. of 5th ed.].

Transactions of the Saxon Academy.¹⁴ (3) What is known as the Fragmentum Dositheanum de manumissionibus,—a passage from a school-book, dating from the year 207, which the master (Dositheus) was in the habit of setting to his pupils for translation. Its original is attributed by some to Pomponius, by others to Cervidius Scaevola, by others again to Gaius, Ulpian, or Paul.¹⁵ (4) The so-called Fragmentum de jure fisci. This was found by Niebuhr in the chapter library at Verona at the same time that he discovered the MS. of Gaius. There is difference of opinion as to its date and authorship; most critics attribute it to Paul; but Huschke thinks it Ulpian's, while some jurists regard it as not earlier than the time of Diocletian. It was first edited by Göschen in 1820, along with Gaius. Krüger made a new transcript of the MS. in 1868; his facsimile forms the basis of all the later editions.¹⁶

In addition to the above there exist a line or two from Pomponius about the indivisibility of servitudes, first published in 1536, from a MS. that had belonged to one of the Scaligers;¹⁷ a sentence from the first book of Papinian's Responsa on the subject of agreements between husband and wife, which forms the conclusion of the Lex Romana Visigothorum;¹⁸ a couple of parchment sheets much decayed, brought from Upper Egypt in the year 1878, and now in the Berlin Museum, which contain extracts from the fifth book of Papinian's Responsa, with some notes by Ulpian and Paul;¹⁹ other four tattered parchments from the ninth book of Papinian's Responsa, obtained from Egypt about the same

¹⁴ Printed in Huschke, l.c. p. 409 sq. [p. 411 sq. of 5th ed.].

¹⁵ Printed in vol. ii. of the Collectio, etc. p. 149 sq. and in Huschke, l.c. p. 422 sq. [p. 424 sq. of 5th ed.]. On the different opinions about it see Karlowa, Röm. RG. i. p. 764 sq.

¹⁶ Fragmentum de jure fisci edidit Paulus Krueger, Leipsic, 1868. See Collectio, etc. vol. ii. p. 162 sq.; Huschke, l.c. p. 615 sq. [p. 633 sq. of 5th ed.].

¹⁷ Collectio, etc. vol. ii. p. 148; Huschke, l.c. p. 146 sq.

¹⁸ Collectio, etc. vol. ii. p. 157; Huschke, l.c. p. 433 [p. 435 of 5th ed. Cf. Collectio, etc. vol. iii. p. 296.]

¹⁹ First communicated to the Berlin Academy by Krüger in 1879 and 1880; and since then, along with the parchment referred to in note 24, the subject of several papers, for the principal of which see references in Karlowa, Röm. RG. i. pp. 765, 766, notes. It is remarkable that in the parchments the red letters of the rubrics are perfectly preserved, while the black letters of the text are to a great extent eaten out. [Huschke, l.c. 5th ed. p. 436; Collectio, etc. iii. p. 285 sq.]

time, and now in the museum of the Louvre;²⁰ some passages from Ulpian's Institutions, discovered by Endlicher in 1835 in the imperial library at Vienna, on a parchment which formed the cover of a papyrus manuscript De Trinitate;²¹ a passage from the second book of Paul's Institutions in Boethius on Cicero's Topics;²² a couple of sentences of Modestine's, the one (from the first book of his Rules) published in 1573 by Pierre Pithou from a MS. of his father's, and the other taken from Isidore's Differentiae;²³ finally, a fragment of uncertain authorship dealing, inter alia, with the condition of dediticians, now in the Berlin Museum, having been obtained from Egypt along with the Papinianian parchments above mentioned.²⁴

²⁰ First published by Dareste in 1888 in the Nouv. Rev. Hist. p. 361 sq. and since commented by Alibrandi, Huschke, Krüger, Esmein, etc.; see Karlowa, l.c. p. 768, and Nouv. Rev. Hist. vol. x. (1886), p. 219. [Collectio, etc. vol. iii. p. 291 sq.; Esmein, Mélanges, p. 389 sq.; Zocco-Rosa, Una nuova lettura, etc. 1887.]

²¹ Collectio, etc. vol. ii. p. 157 sq.; Huschke, l.c. p. 601 sq. [p. 617 sq. of 5th ed.] See also note of critical papers on them in Karlowa, l.c. p. 772.

²² Collectio, etc. vol. ii. p. 160; Huschke, l.c. p. 546 [p. 562 of 5th ed.]

²³ Collectio, etc. vol. ii. p. 161; Huschke, l.c. p. 626 [p. 644 of 5th ed. The first extract is from book ix. of Modestine's Rules.]

²⁴ Communicated to the Berlin Academy by Mommsen in 1879. See supra, note 19, and infra, § 66, note 2. [See Collectio, etc. vol. iii. p. 298, where it is cited as Incerti auctoris de judiciis fragmenta Berolinensia. Since 1886 a few additional manuscript fragments of this period have been discovered. A fragment on parchment, which was found in Egypt and is now in the collection of the Archduke Rayner at Vienna, deals with the Formula Fabiana by which alienations by liberti in fraud of patrons were rescinded. It was first published by Pfaff and Hofmann in 1888 with an elaborate commentary and photographic reproduction of the MS. It is also printed in Collectio, etc. vol. iii. pp. 299-301. Its authorship is unknown, but it has been supposed to be from a treatise either of Pomponius or Paul. In 1896 a piece of tattered parchment was found in Egypt containing extracts from Paulus, lib. 22 ad Edictum, which corresponds almost exactly with excerpts in the title of the Digest, Pro Socio (Dig. xvii. 2 fr. 65 and 67) except that the former contains apparently references to the opinion of Labeo which have been omitted by the Digest compilers. A notice of this fragment by Krüger is contained in Z. d. Sav. Stift. (R.A.) vol. xviii. p. 224. For information about the MS. fragments, consult also Girard, Textes de Droit romain, 2nd ed. 1895.]

CHAPTER III

SUBSTANTIVE CHANGES

SECTION 66.—CITIZENSHIP, JUNIAN LATINITY, AND PEREGRINITY

ONE of the achievements of the legislation of Augustus was the recognition of a class of freemen intermediate between citizens and peregrins, who got the name of Junian latins.¹ It came about in this way. Augustus was of opinion, and doubtless rightly, that one of the causes that had contributed to the social and political corruption of the later republic was the degradation of the burgess-class by the admission into their ranks of enormous numbers of enfranchised slaves. Prior to his legislation every freedman regularly manumitted became a citizen as a matter of course, although not qualified for enrolment in any but one of the four urban tribes. The Aelia-Sentian law of 4 A.D. was passed in order to render the attainment of citizenship by manumission a matter of greater difficulty. Before its enactment there were three regular modes of enfranchisement (legitimae manumissiones) known to the law, viz. (1) entry of the slave's name in the census-list as a freeman, (2) formal act in presence of the praetor (man. vindicta), and (3) testamentary grant of freedom; but there were also various irregular modes, such as a written declaration addressed to the slave by his owner, an invitation from the latter to the slave to take a place at table, informal grant in presence of friends, etc. Only the legitimae manumissiones could make the freedman a citizen, and that only if the manumitter was his quiritarian owner; irregular manumissions, and even a regular one proceeding from a mere bonitarian owner (p. 254), were de jure ineffectual, although de facto enforced by praetorian intervention.

¹ Fragm. Dosit. (supra, p. 313), §§ 6-8; Vangerow, Ueber die Latini Juniani, Marburg, 1833; Cantarelli, "I Latini Juniani," in the Archiv. Giurid. vol. xxix. (1882), p. 3 sq., vol. xxx. (1883), p. 41 sq.; and the works cited supra, § 57, note 7.

The leading provisions of the amending enactment were these:—(1) that all manumissions in fraud of creditors should be null, with this qualification,—that an insolvent might institute one of his slaves as his testamentary heir, for the purpose of avoiding the disgrace of post-mortem bankruptcy; (2) that manumission by an owner under the age of twenty should not have any effect unless it was accomplished vindicta, and for reasons that had been held sufficient by a court of inquiry established for the purpose;² (3) that manumission of slaves under thirty years of age, in order to make them citizens, required to be under the same two conditions; (4) that slaves who had suffered criminal punishment or been otherwise disgraced should not under any circumstances become citizens on manumission, but should rank only as dediticians, incapable of ever in any way attaining citizenship, and subject to other serious disabilities both in public and private life.³ In aid, however, of a freedman under thirty, whose want of citizenship was due to nothing but the neglect of official approval of his manumission or its performance otherwise than vindicta, it was provided that if he married a woman who was either a citizen, or a colonial latin, or of his own class, declaring at the time, in presence of a certain number of witnesses, that he was doing so in terms of and in order to have the benefit of the statute, then, on a child of the marriage attaining the age of twelve months, he was entitled to go to the praetor or a provincial governor, and, on proof of the facts, obtain from him a declaration of citizenship, which applied to wife and child as well, if the former was not a citizen already.⁴

² See Dositheus, Fragmentum, § 13.

³ See Zubli, De L. Aelia Sentia, Leyden, 1861; Brinz, Die Freigelassenen d. L. Aelia Sentia u. das Berliner Fragment von d. Dediticiern, Freiburg, 1884. (The fragment alluded to is that mentioned in the end of last section.)

⁴ This was technically causae probatio ex lege Aelia Sentia (Gai. i. 29); and to acquire citizenship in this way was ex l. Aelia Sentia ad civitatem pervenire (Gai. iii. 73).

But a question not unnaturally presented itself as to what was the real condition of the manumittee before he had thus acquired citizenship. Was he slave or free? It is usually said that he was de jure the former, but de facto the latter;⁵ (although de jure slavery is hardly consistent with the recognition of the possibility of marriage between him and a woman who might even be a citizen). The Junia-Norban law of 19 A.D. was passed to settle the question.⁶ It did so by declaring that the condition of those freedmen under thirty whose manumission had not been both sanctioned by the council and accomplished vindictâ was to be similar to that of the colonial latins (§ 51); and, partly by the Junian law itself and partly by subsequent legislation, the same status seems to have been conferred on all freedmen, except those falling under the class of dediticians, who failed to become citizens because of the irregularity of their enfranchisement. Hence arose that Junian latinity which figures so largely in the pages of Gaius and Ulpian. It had this advantage,—that it was convertible into citizenship in a variety of ways, e.g., the exercise for a certain length of time of some trade, craft, or calling from which the community derived benefit, renewal of the enfranchisement in such a way as to overcome its defects, imperial grant, and so forth.⁷ While a man remained a latin he had commercium, and therefore might be a party to a mancipation and hold property on a quiritarian title.⁸ But he could not make a testament;⁹ and, though he might lawfully be instituted heir or appointed a legatee under one,¹⁰ yet the statute did not allow him to take the inheritance to which he had been instituted or the legacy bequeathed to him unless he converted his latinity into citizenship within a certain ⁵ “Ex jure Quiritium servi, sed auxilio praetoris in libertatis forma servati” (Gai. iii. 56).

⁶ There is controversy as to the date of the Junian law and its relation to the Aelia-Sentian one. See § 57, note 7. [Justinian, Inst. i. 5, § 3, seems to be the only authority for ascribing the creation of Junian latinity to the lex Junia Norbana; other texts speak simply of a lex Junia. Girard, p. 120, is to be classed with those writers who think that this lex Junia must have been earlier than the lex Aelia Sentia.]

⁷ Gai. i. §§ 32-34; Ulp. iii. §§ 1-6.

⁸ Ulp. xix. 4.

¹⁰ Ulp. xxii. 3.

⁹ Gai. i. 23; Ulp. xx. 14.

limited period.¹¹ Having no potestas over his children, they could not succeed him on his death either as sui heredes of the jus civile or liberi of the praetor's edict. But for the Junian law, conferring de jure freedom on the manumittee, there would have been no difficulty in determining what was to be done with his estate after his decease. Before its enactment he was still de jure a slave, and all that belonged to him in law no more than peculium, the property of his manumitter, to whom it reverted on the freedman's death. The Junian law expressly reserved the manumitter's right to it as a quasi peculium; he took his latin's estate on his death, not, however, as his heir, but as his owner, whose right in it had only been suspended during the freedman's lifetime.¹² This is the explanation of the memorable dictum of Justinian (who abolished Junian latinity), that, though a latin went through life as a freeman, yet with his last breath he gave up both life and liberty.¹³

It must have been between the year 212 and 217 that Caracalla published his constitution conferring citizenship on all the free inhabitants of the empire.¹⁴ Far-reaching as were its consequences, the primary purpose was purely fiscal. Augustus had imposed a tax of five per cent on inheritances and bequests, except where the whole succession was worth less than 100,000 sesterces, or the heir or legatee was a near kinsman of the deceased.¹⁵ It was continued by his successors, and was very profitable, thanks to the propensity of the well-to-do classes for single blessedness, followed by testamentary distribution of their fortunes amongst their ¹¹ Gai. ii. §§ 110, 275; Ulp. xvii. 1, xxii. 3, xxv. 7. But he might, as a latin, take an inheritance or a legacy under a soldier's testament, or a testamentary trust gift even from a civilian.

¹² Gai. iii. 56.

¹³ Just. Inst. iii. 7, § 4. So fully recognised was the old owner's reversionary right, and so completely a vested interest, that he might transfer it inter vivos or bequeath it to a legatee (Gai. ii. 195). This is what is meant by legatum latini in the passage referred to.

¹⁴ Dio Cass. lxxvii. 9; Ulp. in Dig. i. 5, fr. 17. Justinian (Nov. 78, cap. 5) attributes it erroneously to Antoninus Pius.

¹⁵ The lex Julia de vicesima hereditatum of 6 A.D. See a paper on it by Bachofen, in his Ausgewählte Lehren des röm. Civilrechts (Bonn, 1848), p. 322 sq. [The statute did not apply to successions ab intestato. See Puchta, Cursus, § 313; Paul, Sent. iv. 6; Girard, p. 818.]

friends. But it affected only the successions of Roman citizens;¹⁶ so that the great mass of the provincial population escaped it. Caracalla, being needy, not only increased it temporarily to ten per cent, but widened the area of its operation by elevating all his free subjects to the rank of citizens. The words of Ulpian are very inclusive,—“In urbe Romano qui sunt . . . cives Romani effecti sunt;” but there is considerable diversity of opinion as to their meaning, caused by the fact that peregrins are still mentioned by some of Caracalla’s successors. The reasonable interpretation is that the enactment conferred citizenship on the Junian latins and on all the emperor’s peregrin subjects except Aelia-Sentian dediticians; and the boon, as a matter of course, enured to their descendants. But it did not exclude the possibility of peregrins in the future, when persons who were not citizens became subject to Rome, as happened to some extent in the course of the third century. And although all the Junian latins living at the date of the enactment in virtue of it became citizens, the class must at once have begun to form again in consequence of manumissions that were not in all points in accordance with the requirements of the Aelia-Sentian law. Limit Caracalla’s constitution, however, as we may, there can be no question of its immense importance. By conferring citizenship on the provincial peregrins it subjected them in all their relations to the law of Rome, and qualified them for taking part in many transactions, both inter vivos and mortis causa, which previously had been incompetent for them. It did away with the necessity for the jus gentium as a separate positive system. Its principles and its doctrines, it is true, survived, and were expanded and elaborated as freely and successfully as ever; but they were so dealt with as part and parcel of the civil law of Rome, which had ceased to be Italian and become imperial.

SECTION 67.—CONCESSION OF PECULIAR PRIVILEGES TO SOLDIERS

While the period with which we are dealing saw the substantial disappearance of the distinction between citizen and peregrin, it witnessed the rise of another,—that between soldiers and civilians (milites, pagani).¹ The peculiar position of a soldier, spending the best years of his life in camp, far away from home and kindred, with little or nothing in common with the private citizen who was occupied with the cares of his family, his possessions, and his merchandise, on the one hand subjected him to various disqualifications, and on the other entitled him to important indulgences. He could not, for example, acquire lands in the province in which he was serving; he could not fill any municipal office; neither could he become a surety for another, nor act for him as his attorney in a litigation. His service exempted him from undertaking a tutory; he was relieved from the consequences of mistake in law, while a private citizen, with opportunities of obtaining advice, was relieved only against mistake of fact; if unsuccessful in a litigation, his adversary was not allowed to deprive him of his last penny; and on his discharge, and as a reward for his service, he often had a grant of conubium with any wife he chose to marry, even a latin or a peregrin.

¹⁶ Plin. Panegy. §§ 37-39.

But the most remarkable effluxes of the jus militare were the military testament and the castrense peculium. The first set at naught all the rules of the jus civile and the praetors' Edict alike as to the form and the substance of a testament. Julius Caesar is said to have been the first to confer on soldiers the right to test without observing the requirements of the common law. His example was followed by Titus, Domitian, and Nerva, and from the time of Trajan the military testament became a recognised institution. "I will give effect," he says, "to the last wills of my faithful companions in arms, no matter how they have tested. Let them, therefore, make their testaments how they like, let them make them how they can; the bare will (nuda voluntas) of a testator shall suffice to regulate the distribution of his goods."² It might be in writing, by word of mouth, by the unspoken signs perhaps of a dying man; all that was required was the will so manifested as not to be mistaken.³ And as a man could thus make his testament free from all fetters of form, so might he also rescind it, add to it, alter it, and renew it. More extraordinary still,—it was sustained even though its provisions ran counter to the most cherished rules of the common law. Contrary to the maxim that no man could die partly testate and partly intestate, a soldier might dispose of part of his estate by testament and leave the rest to descend to his heirs ab intestato.⁴ Contrary to this other maxim—semel heres semper heres, he might give his estate to A for life, or for a term of years, or until the occurrence of some event, with remainder to B.⁵ Contrary to the general rule, a latin or peregrin, or an unmarried or married but childless person, might take an inheritance or a bequest from him as freely as a citizen with children.⁶ His testament, in so far as it disposed only of bona castrensia, was not affected by capitis deminutio minima.⁷ It was not invalidated by praeterition of sui heredes,⁸ nor could they challenge it because they had got less under it than their “legitim” (p. 235);⁹ and it was not in the mouth of the instituted heir to claim his Falcidian fourth, even though nine-tenths of the succession had been bequeathed to legatees.¹⁰ Finally, a later testament did not nullify an earlier one, if it appeared to be the intention of the soldier-testator that they should be read together.¹¹

¹ Kuntze (Cursus, p. 648 sq.) devotes two or three chapters to the jus militare.

² Ulp. in Dig. xxix. 1, fr. 1, pr. [The words are cited from a mandatum of Trajan.]

All this is remarkable, manifesting a spirit very different from that which animated the common law of testaments. True, it was a principle with the jurists of the classical period that the voluntatis ratio was to be given effect to in the interpretation of testamentary writings; but that was on the condition that the requirements of law as to form and substance had been scrupulously observed. But in the

³ Gai. ii. 109; Ulp. xxiii. 10; Just. Inst. ii. 11, pr.

⁴ Inst. ii. 14, 5; Dig. xxix. 1, 6.

⁵ Dig. xxix. 1, 15, § 4.

⁶ Gai. ii. §§ 110, 111.

⁷ Dig. xxviii. 3, 6, § 13; Inst. ii. 11, 5. [It was not always nullified even by the greater capitis deminutiones, Dig. xxviii. 3, 6, § 6.]

⁸ Inst. ii. 13, 6.

⁹ Dig. v. ii. 27, § 1.

¹⁰ Dig. xxix. 1, 17, § 4.

¹¹ Dig. xxix. 1, 19, pr.

military testament positive rules were made to yield to the voluntas in all respects; the will was almost absolutely unfettered. Roman law in this matter gave place to natural law. One would have expected the influence of so great a change to have manifested itself by degrees in the ordinary law of testaments. Yet it is barely visible. In a few points the legislation of Constantine, Theodosius II., and Justinian relaxed the strictness of the old rules; but there was never any approach to the recognition of the complete supremacy of the voluntas. In the Corpus Juris the contrast between the testamentum paganum and the testamentum militare was almost as marked as in the days of Trajan. The latter was still a privileged deed, whose use was confined to a soldier actually on service, and which had to be replaced by a testament executed according to the usual forms of law within twelve months after his retirement.¹²

The peculium castrense had a wider influence, for it was the first of a series of amendments that vastly diminished the importance of the patria potestas on its patrimonial side. In its origin it was nothing more than a concession by Augustus to a filiusfamilias on service of the right to dispose by testament of what he had acquired in the active exercise of his profession (quod in castris adquisierat).¹³ But it soon went much further. Confined at first to filiifamilias on actual service, the privilege was extended by Hadrian to those who had obtained honourable discharge. The same emperor allowed them not merely to bequeath their peculium castrense, but to manumit slaves that formed part of it; and a little step further recognised their right to dispose of it gratuitously inter vivos. By and by the range of it was extended so as to include not only the soldier's pay and prize, but all that had come to him, directly or indirectly, in connection with his profession,—his outfit, gifts made to him during his service, legacies from comrades, and so on. All this was in a high degree subversive of the doctrines of the common law; it may almost be called revolutionary. For it involved in the first place the recognition of the right of a person alieni juris to make a testament as if he were sui juris; and in the second place the recognition of a separate estate in a filiusfamilias which he might deal with independently of his paterfamilias, which could not be touched by the latter's creditors, and which he was not bound to collate (or bring into hotch-pot) on claiming a share of his father's succession. The radical right of the parent, however, like that of a manumitter over his Junian freedman, was rather suspended than extinguished; for, if the soldier-son died intestate, the right of the paterfamilias revived; he took his son's belongings, not as his heir appropriating an inheritance, but as his paterfamilias reasserting his ownership of a peculium.¹⁴ Thus did the law attempt to reconcile the privilege of the soldier while he lived with the prerogative of the family-head after his death.¹⁵

¹² Inst. ii. 11, pr.

¹³ Inst. ii. 12, pr.

SECTION 68.—THE FAMILY

All branches of the law of the family underwent modification during the period, but radical changes beyond those already mentioned were comparatively few. The legislative efforts of Augustus to encourage marriage, to which persons of position showed a remarkable distaste, have already been alluded to (p. 285). The relation of husband and wife still in law required no more for its creation than deliberate interchange of nuptial consent; although for one or two purposes the bride's home-coming to her husband's house was regarded as the criterion of completed marriage.¹ But it was rarely accompanied with manus. So repugnant was such subjection to patrician ladies that they declined to submit to confarreate nuptials; and so great consequently became the difficulty of finding persons qualified by confarreate birth to fill the higher priesthoods, that early in the empire it had to be decreed that confarreation should in future be productive of manus only quoad sacra, and should not make the wife a member of her husband's family.² Manus by a year's uninterrupted cohabitation was already out of date in the time of Gaius; and although that by coemption was still in use in his time, it probably was quite unknown by the end of the period. Husband and wife therefore had their separate estates; the common establishment being maintained by the husband, with the assistance of the revenue of the wife's dowry (dos),—an institution which received much attention at the hands of the jurists, and was to some extent regulated by statute. Divorce was unfortunately very common; it was lawful even without any assignable cause; when blame attached to either side, he or she suffered deprivation to some extent of the nuptial provisions, but there were no other penal consequences.

¹⁴ This, however, was altered by Justinian's 118th Novel, under which a father taking any part of a deceased son's estate did so in the character of his heir; see infra, p. 390, n. 17.

¹⁵ The same principles were afterwards partially extended to the peculium quasi-castrense,—the earnings of a filiusfamilias in the civil or ecclesiastical service of the state: see Inst. ii. 11, § 6; ii. 12 pr.

¹ The references [in the texts] to the necessity in certain cases of ductio uxoris in domum mariti have led some French writers to maintain that marriage was regarded by the jurists of the empire as a real rather than a consensual contract. But it was only when one of the parties had died or deserted before they had lived together, and the ordinary evidence of completed interchange of consent failed, that this proof was called in aid as a decisive fact. [Cf. Girard, p. 148, n. 1.]

The relaxation of the bond between parent and child in the case of a filiusfamilias who had adopted a military career has already been alluded to. But it was not in his case alone that it was manifest; for in all directions there was a tendency to place restrictions on the exercise of the patria potestas. This was due to a great degree to the hold that the doctrines of natural law were gaining within the Roman system; partly also to the fact that the emperors, having succeeded to the censorial regimen morum, allowed it freely to influence their edicts and rescripts. Exposure of an infant was still allowed;³ but a parent was no longer permitted, even in the character of household judge, to put his son to death; in fact his prerogative was limited to moderate chastisement, the law requiring, in case of a grave offence that merited severe punishment, that he should hand his child over to the ordinary tribunals.⁴ His right of sale, in like manner, was restricted to young children, and permitted only when he was in great poverty and unable to maintain them;⁵ while their impignoration by him was prohibited under pain of banishment.⁶

² Gai. i. 136. [See Tacitus, Ann. iv. 16, who speaks, however, only of marriages by Flamines. Cf. Schulin, Lehrbuch, p. 213, n. 2. Ulpian, Frag. ix., speaks of confarreatio as if still existing in his time.]

³ The earliest absolute prohibition of it was by Valentinian and his colleagues in 374, Cod. viii. 51, 2.

⁴ Alex. Sev. in Cod. viii. 46, 3.

Except in the solitary case of a son who was a soldier, a paterfamilias was still recognised as in law the owner of all the earnings and other acquisitions of his children in potestate; but the old rule still remained that for their civil debts he was not liable beyond the amount of the fund he had advanced them to deal with as de facto their own (peculium profecticium), except when he had derived advantage from their contract, or had expressly or by implication authorised them to enter into it as his agents.⁷ To the party with whom he had contracted a filiusfamilias was himself liable as fully as if he had been a paterfamilias,⁸ with one exception, namely, when his debt was for borrowed money; in that case, with some very reasonable qualifications, it was declared by the notorious Macedonian senatusconsult (of the time of Vespasian) that the lender should not be entitled to recover payment, even after his borrower had become sui juris by his father's death.⁹ Between a father and his emancipated son there was, and always had been, perfect freedom of contract; but so was there now between a father and his soldier-son in any matter relating to the peculium castrense, even though the son was in potestate. What is still more remarkable is that the new sentiment which was operating on the jus civile admitted the possibility of natural obligation between paterfamilias and filiusfamilias even in reference to the peculium profecticium; which, though incapable of direct enforcement by action, was yet to some extent recognised and given effect to indirectly.¹⁰

In the matter of guardianship, while the tutory of pupils was carefully tended and the law in regard to it materially amended during the period under review (particularly by a senatusconsult generally referred to as the Oratio divi Severi, prohibiting alienation of the ward's property without judicial authority),¹¹ that of women above the age of pupillarity

⁵ Paul. Sent. v. 1, § 1.

⁶ Ibid.

⁷ Gai. iv. §§ 69-74.

⁸ Dig. xlv. 7, 39.

⁹ Dig. xiv. 6, 1.

¹⁰ See Savigny, Das Obligationenrecht, vol. i. (Berlin, 1851), pp. 49, 59.

¹¹ It is reproduced by Ulpian in Dig. xxvii. 9, fr. 1, § 2. As Severus was in Asia at the time (195 A.D.), it must have been communicated to the senate in gradually disappeared. This change, which was in harmony with the disappearance of the husband's manus, was aided by the Julian and Papia-Poppæan law (which made release from tutelage one of the rewards it offered to fruitful wives), and by a Lex Claudia abolishing the tutory-at-law of agnates; but really was an inevitable result of the recognition of the right of a woman to substitute for her tutor-at-law, for her testamentary tutor, or for him who had been appointed to the office by a magistrate, another of her own selection, who was expected to comply with her wishes, and whose co-operation was therefore a mere matter of form, and practically a farce.

The guardianship or curatory (cura) of minors above pupilarity owed its institution to Marcus Aurelius.¹² The Plaetorian law of the middle of the sixth century of Rome had indeed imposed penalties on those taking undue advantage of the inexperience of minors, i.e. persons sui juris under the age of twenty-five; and from that time the praetors were in the habit of appointing curators to act with such persons for the protection of their interests in particular affairs. But it was Marcus Aurelius that first made curatory a general permanent office, to endure in the ordinary case until the ward attained majority (twenty-five). The appointment was made on the application of the minor himself; but in practice there was this compulsitor upon him to petition for it,—that his tutor refused to proceed to account for his administration unless the ex-pupil had a curator conjoined with him in the investigation, and who might concur in granting the tutor his discharge, thus minimising the chance of its future challenge. The powers, duties, and responsibilities of such curators became a matter for careful and elaborate definition and regulation by the jurists, whose exposition of the law of guardianship, whether by tutors or curators, has found wide acceptance in modern systems of jurisprudence.

writing, which may account for the constant reference to the oration itself instead of the confirmatory senatusconsult.

¹² Capitolin. in Marc. 10. See Savigny, Verm. Schr. vol. ii. p. 321 sq.; Huschke, in Z. f. g. RW. vol. xiii. p. 311 sq.

SECTION 69.—POSSESSION, PROPERTY, REAL RIGHTS, AND OBLIGATIONS

In all those branches of the law there was much more of organic development than radical change. Much was written about possession, but all incidentally, and chiefly in connection with the possessory interdicts and the law of usucapion or prescriptive acquisition of property. In all the long list of the writings of the jurists we find no reference to a single monograph on the subject; and as the principles of possession quoad interdicta and possession quoad usucapionem were by no means identical, and we have no absolute certainty that the compilers of Justinian's Digest were always careful to remember the distinction between them in arranging their excerpts, modern jurisprudence is anything but sure of what the general rules of possession per se really were.¹

In the law of property (dominium) nothing new of any very great importance was introduced, with exception of the caducum of the Papia-Poppaeian law as a mode of acquisition;² but many branches of the subject underwent careful elucidation, as, for example, the requisites of various natural modes of acquisition, and the relations between an owner and a party withholding from him his property, according as the detention was in good faith or in bad. Among real rights, considerable attention was given to the nature of usufruct, the modes of its constitution, and the relative positions of usufructuary and owner; and legislation devised a means of giving effect to a bequest of a usufruct of money, which, as it could not be used without being parted with, was theoretically incapable of being usufructed.³ The modes of constitution alike of personal and praedial servitudes were much simplified, formal conveyance by mancipation or cession in court being dispensed with, and their creation by nothing more than pacts and stipulations, or even formless agreements followed by exercise of the right without objection from the owner of the servient estate,⁴ held to make them valid and effectual not only against the latter's heirs but even against a third party acquiring from him. Hypothec, a security over either real or personal estate, completed by simple agreement without any conveyance or change of possession, to a great extent supplanted the old and more formal fiducia; and the jurists in time succeeded in making it a most effectual real security, with every facility for reduction into possession and eventual sale of what had been hypothecated, no matter into whose hands it might have passed.

¹ Savigny's great work on Possession (das Recht des Besitzes), first published in 1803, underwent great modification at his own hand in subsequent editions. Since then the books on the subject are innumerable. Bruns, Jhering, Bekker, Dernburg [Kindel, von Stintzing, Kuntze, Alibrandi], and a host of other eminent jurists have written upon it; and it is not too much to say that there is hardly one of Savigny's positions that has not been assailed, while many have been completely overthrown. [The gist of Savigny's theory is that there were three kinds or degrees of possession recognised by the Roman jurists, viz. simple detentio, possessio ad interdicta, and possessio ad usucapionem, but only the two latter had jural consequences. The theory of von Jhering is that possession was based on the notion of property on its defence. See also Klein, Sachbesitz und Ersitzung, Berlin, 1891; and an elaborate review of that work by Oertmann in Ztschrft. f. d. privat und öffentliche Recht der Gegenwart, vol. xx. p. 189.]

² Ulp. Frag. tit. xvii. ; xix. § 17.

The law of obligations made immense strides during the period; but except in the expansion of the so-called obligationes quasi ex contractu, and the determination of the true ground of actionability of the so-called innominate contracts, the results were mostly in the direction of definition and qualification of already existing doctrine, classification of already recognised grounds of liability, and simplification of current forms of engagement.

SECTION 70.—THE LAW OF SUCCESSION, AND PARTICULARLY TESTAMENTARY TRUSTS

There were far more positive changes in the law of succession than either in that of property or in that of obligation. The rise and progress of the military testament has already been explained (p. 320). The testament of the common law was still ostensibly that per aes et libram (p. 158); but the practice of granting bonorum possessio secundum tabulas to the persons named as heirs in any testamentary instrument that bore outside the requisite number of seals, led, from the time of Marcus Aurelius, to the frequent neglect of the time-honoured formalities of the familiae mancipatio and nuncupatio testamenti. It was his enactment,¹ declaring that an heir-at-law should no longer be entitled to dispute the last wishes of a testator on the technical ground of non-compliance with the purely formal requirements of the law, that practically introduced what Justinian calls the praetorian testament.² That testamentary deeds were often very voluminous is manifest from the fragmentary remains of one or two of the first and second century. In the testament of one Dasumius, of the year 108,³ for example, we have the usual institutions and substitutions of heirs, and a series of legacies (which he desires shall be paid free of duty), annuities, trust-gifts, and enfranchisements of slaves; together with instructions about his funeral arrangements and the erection of a sepulchral monument to his memory, and a reservation of power to make alterations and additions by codicil.

³ For usufruct was the right to use and to appropriate the fruits or profits of a thing, preserving always its substance. [Inst. ii. 4, pr., § 2.]

⁴ [Usus et patientia.]

About fifty years before the date of this testament an important change had been made in the law of legacies. There had been, and still continued to be, four different forms in which a legacy (legatum) could be bequeathed,⁴ and which was attended with very different consequences so far as concerned the rights they conferred on legatees. To a great extent it was in the power of a testator to employ which he pleased; but his discretion was not altogether unlimited; for some peculiarity in the subject-matter of the bequest might make one or other of them inappropriate. For instance, while it was quite lawful for a testator to bequeath what belonged to a third party, yet

¹ Gai. ii. 120. [See ante, p. 273, n. 11.]

² Inst. ii. 10, 2. Justinian makes it the outcome of the praetorian Edict. This is not quite accurate; for under the edict a grant of bonorum possessio secundum tabulas might be defeated by a hereditatis petitio at the instance of a near agnate of the testator's, on the ground of defective execution (Gai. ii. 119).

³ Bruns, Fontes, p. 228 sq. [6th ed. p. 270, and Mommsen's note].

⁴ They are described in Gaius, ii. §§ 192-223. [As to legacies in the ancient law, see Cuq, pp. 300-307, who thinks they could be given independently of a testament.]

he could do so validly only by imposing upon his heir the obligation of procuring it or else paying its value to the legatee (legatum per damnationem),—not by a direct gift to the latter (legatum per vindicationem). There were various other subtleties of this sort, whose disregard frequently caused the failure of a bequest. To remedy this, and in the same spirit that was animating the law in many other directions, namely, that a man's voluntas should if possible be respected notwithstanding technical defect in its manifestation, it was enacted by a senatusconsult of the time of Nero that, whenever a legacy other than one per damnationem was ineffectual in the particular form in which it had been bequeathed, it should be given effect to as if it had in fact been one per damnationem, which was in most respects the most favourable for a legatee.⁵ The result, though not immediate, was the simplification of legacies, paving the way for their final equiparation with trust-gifts (fideicommissa).

These had been introduced in the time of Augustus;⁶ not by statute, but by some innovator who desired to circumvent the rule of law which prevented him leaving either inheritance or bequest to an individual who had no testamenti factio with him.⁷ It was a harsh rule when applied to the case of a citizen who had married a foreigner with whom he had no conubium; for, as the issue of the marriage were not citizens like their father but peregrins like their mother,⁸ they could neither succeed him ab intestato as his sui heredes or his agnates,⁹ nor could he by testament either institute them as his heirs or make them his legatees. According to Theophilus,¹⁰ amplifying an observation of Gaius's,¹¹ it was to meet this very case that the fideicommissum was first devised; a testator instituted as his heir a qualified friend on whom he could rely, and requested him, as soon as he had entered on the

⁵ Gai. ii. §§ 197, 218; Ulp. xxiv. 11a.

⁶ Inst. ii. 23, 1; ii. 25, pr.

⁷ Ulp. xxii. 1.

⁸ Gai. i. 67.

⁹ They could not even have a claim as cognates under the praetorian rules; for the praetors followed the rule of the jus civile to this extent,—that they did not grant bonorum possessio to a person who had not testamenti factio with him whose succession was in question.

¹⁰ Theoph. Par. Inst. ii. 23, 1.

¹¹ Gai. ii. 285.

succession, to transfer the benefits of it to his peregrin children. He soon found imitators; and their number must rapidly have multiplied after the emperor, shocked at the perfidy of a trustee who had failed to comply with the request of his testator, remitted the matter to the consuls of the day, with instructions to do in it what they thought just. So quickly did the new institution establish itself in public favour, and so numerous did the questions become as to the construction and fulfilment of testamentary trusts, that before long it was found necessary to institute a court specially charged with their determination,—that of the praetor fideicommissarius.¹²

The employment of a trust as a means of benefiting those who were under disqualifications as heirs or legatees, as, for example, persons who had no testamenti factio, women incapacitated by the Voconian law (pp. 238, 270), unmarried and married but childless persons incapacitated by the Julian and Papia-Poppaeian law (p. 285), and so on, was in course of time prohibited by statute;¹³ but that did not affect its general popularity. For, whether what was contemplated was a transfer of the universal hereditas or a part of it to the beneficiary (fideicommissum hereditatis), or only of some particular thing (fideicommissum rei singularis), a testamentary trust had various advantages over either a direct institution or a direct bequest (legatum). In theory the imposition upon the heir of a trust in favour of a beneficiary, whether it required him to denude of the whole or only a part of the inheritance, did not deprive him of his character of heir or relieve him of the responsibilities of the position; and at common law therefore he was entitled to decline the succession, often to the great prejudice of the beneficiary. In order to avoid such a mischance, and at the same time to regulate their relations inter se and towards debtors and creditors of ¹² Just. Inst. ii. 23, 1. A special court was necessary for this reason,—that, because of the peculiar relation between the trustee and the beneficiaries, it would have been difficult to adjust an issue for remit to an ordinary judex formulating precisely the question between them; consequently there was no such remit, the case being heard from first to last and finally disposed of by the praetor fideicommissarius himself, in what was called an extraordinaria cognitio. See infra, § 72.

¹³ Gai. ii. §§ 285-287.

the testator's, it became the practice for the parties to enter into stipulatory arrangements about the matter; but these were to some extent rendered superfluous by two senatusconsults, the Trebellian in the time of Nero, and the Pegasian in that of Vespasian,¹⁴ which at once secured the beneficiary against the trustee's (i.e. the heir's) repudiation of the inheritance, protected the latter from all risk of loss where he was trustee and nothing more, and enabled the former to treat directly with debtors and creditors of the testator's and himself ingather the corporeal items of the inheritance.

It was one of the advantages of a trust-bequest, whether universal or singular, that it might be conferred in a codicil, even though unconfirmed by any relative testament.¹⁵ The codicil (codicilli), also an invention of the time of Augustus, was a deed of a very simple nature. It was inappropriate either for disherison of sui or institution of an heir; but if confirmed by testament might contain direct bequests, manumissions, nominations of tutors, and the like; and whether confirmed or unconfirmed might, as stated, be utilised as a vehicle for trust-gifts. Latterly it was held operative even in the absence of a testament, the trusts contained in it being regarded as burdens on the heir-at-law (p. 395).

The most important changes in the law of intestate succession during the period were those accomplished by the Tertullian and Orphitian senatusconsults, fruits of that recognition of the precepts of natural law which in so many directions was modifying the doctrines of the jus civile. The first was passed in the reign of Hadrian,¹⁶ the second in the year 178, under Marcus Aurelius. Down to the time of the Tertullian senatusconsult a mother and her child by a marriage that was unaccompanied with manus stood related to each other only as cognates, being in law members of different families; consequently their chance of succession to each other was remote, being postponed to that of their respective agnates to the sixth or seventh degree.¹⁷ The purpose of the *senatusconsult*¹⁸ was to prefer a mother to all agnates of her deceased child except father and brother and sister; father and brother excluded her; but with a sister of the deceased, and in the absence of father or brother, she shared equally. While there can be little doubt that it was natural considerations that dictated this amendment, yet its authors were too timid to justify it on the abstract principle of common humanity, lest thereby they should seem to impugn the wisdom of the jus civile; and so they confined its application to women who had the jus liberorum, i.e. to women of free birth who were mothers of three children and freedwomen who were mothers of four, thus making it ostensibly a reward of fertility.¹⁹ The Orphitian *senatusconsult*²⁰ was the counterpart of the Tertullian. It gave children, whether legitimate or illegitimate, a right of succession to their mother in preference to all her agnates; and subsequent constitutions extended the principle, admitting them to the inheritance not only of their maternal grandparents but also of their paternal grandmother.

¹⁴ For their provisions see Gai. ii. 252-259. They were amalgamated and simplified by Justinian, as described in Inst. ii. 23, 7.

¹⁵ Ulp. xxv. 12.

¹⁶ [This is stated in the Inst. iii. 3, § 2, but Zonaras, 12, 1, says it was passed in the reign of Antoninus Pius, A.D. 158, who, if this be right, must be held to be described in the Institutes by his adoptive name Hadrianus. A text in the Digest, however (xxxiv. 5, fr. 9, § 1), seems to prove its existence in the reign of Hadrian.]

¹⁷ [The succession of agnates in the classical law was not restricted to the sixth or seventh degree. Ulpian says they succeeded in infinitum, Dig. 38, 16, 2, 1; see also Inst. iii. 2, 3, and iii. 6, § 12; and for early law, cf. supra, p. 164.]

¹⁸ Inst. iii. 3.

¹⁹ This limitation to mothers of three or four children held its place till repealed by Justinian (see tit. cit. § 4). [By constitutions, however, of Constantine and of Valentinian and Valens, preserved in the Theodosian Code (v. 1, c. 1, § 2), a mother who had not jus liberorum took one-third of the child's inheritance in competition with certain collaterals, e.g. a paternal uncle, while on the other hand the rights of a mother with jus liberorum were curtailed in competition with these collaterals.]

²⁰ Inst. iii. 4.

CHAPTER IV

JUDICIAL PROCEDURE

SECTION 71.—THE FORMULAR SYSTEM¹

THE ordinary procedure of the first three centuries of the empire was still two-staged; it commenced before the praetor (in jure), and was concluded before a judex (in judicio). But the legis actiones (§§ 33-37, 41) had given place to praetorian formulae. Under the sacramental system parties, and particularly the plaintiff, had themselves to formulate in statutory or traditional words of style the matter in controversy between them; and as they formulated, so did it go for trial to centumviral court or judex or arbiters, with the not infrequent result that it was then all too late discovered that the real point in the case had been missed. Under the formular system parties were free to represent their plaint and defence to the praetor in any words they pleased; the plaintiff asking for a formula and usually indicating the style on the album that he thought would suit his purpose, and the defendant demanding when necessary an exception, i.e. a plea in defence, either praetorian or statutory, that without traversing the facts or law of the plaintiff's case, yet avoided his demand on grounds of equity or public policy. It was for the praetor to consider and determine whether the action or exception should or should not be granted (dare, denegare actionem, exceptionem), and if granted, whether it should be according to the style exhibited on the album (p. 238) or a modification of it. The result he embodied in a written and signed nomination of a judge, whom he instructed what he had to try and empowered to pronounce a finding either condemning or acquitting the defendant. This writing was the formula.²

¹ See Keller, Röm. CP. §§ 23-43; Bethmann-Hollweg, Gesch. d. CP. vol. ii. §§ 81-87; Bekker, Aktionen, vol. i. chaps. 4-7, vol. ii. chaps. 15, 19, 20; Baron, Gesch. d. r. R. vol. i. §§ 202-215; Buonamici, Procedura, vol. i. pp. 86-122; [Wlassak, Röm. Prozessgesetze, Abtheil. i.]

Although it was not until the early empire that this system of procedure attained its full development, yet it had its commencement two centuries before the fall of the republic. Gaius³ ascribes its introduction and definite establishment to the Lex Aebutia, probably of the second decade of the sixth century of the city, and two judiciary laws of the time of Augustus, all three referred to in a previous section (§ 44). The Aebutian law, of which unfortunately we know very little, is generally supposed to have empowered the praetors (1) to devise a simpler form of procedure for causes already cognisable per legis actionem, (2) to devise forms of action to meet cases not cognisable under the older system, and (3) themselves to formulate the issue and reduce it to writing. It was by no means so radical a change as is sometimes supposed. There were formulae employed by the praetor both in the procedure per judicis postulationem (§ 35) and in that per condictionem (§ 41). The difference between them and the formulae of the Aebutian system was this,—that the former were in part mere echoes of the statutory words of style uttered by the plaintiff, and that they were not written but spoken in the hearing of witnesses.⁴

A large proportion of the personal actions of the formular system were evolved out of the legis actio per condictionem. The sequence of operations may have been something like this. Taking the simplest form of it, the action for certa

² [This culmination of proceedings in jure formed the litis contestatio of the formulary system, though modern writers are not agreed upon the exact significance of the term. According to Lenel, Z. d. Sav. Stift. xv. p. 374 sq., criticising a theory of Wlassak's, litis contestatio in the classical law was strictly applicable to the dictation of the adjusted formula by the plaintiff to the defendant, and its acceptance by the latter, implying consent of parties to proceed. Cf. Sohm, Inst. § 34, n. 2; Trampedach, Z. d. Sav. Stift. xviii. p. 114 sq.]

³ Gai. iv. 30. [See supra, p. 230.]

⁴ [Consult on this point Wlassak, op. cit. chap. ii.]

pecunia under the Silian law, the first step was to drop the formal *condictio*⁵ from which it derived its character of legis actio, thus avoiding a delay of thirty days; the plaintiff stated his demand in informal words, and, if the defendant denied indebtedness, the praetor straightway formulated a written appointment of and instruction to a judge, embodying in it the issue in terms substantially the same as those he would have employed under the earlier procedure:—"Titius be judge. Should it appear that N. N. ought to pay (dare oportere) 50,000 sesterces to A. A., in that sum, Judge, condemn N. N. to A. A.;⁶ should it not so appear, acquit him." This was no longer the legis actio per conductionem but the certi condictio of the formular system.⁷ The condictio triticaria of the same system ran on the same lines: "Titius be judge. Should it appear that N. N. ought to give A. A. the slave Stichus, then, whatever be the value of the slave, in that condemn N. N. to A. A.," and so on. In both of these examples the formula included only two of the four clauses that might find place in it,⁸—an "intention" and a "condemnation." The matter of claim in both cases was certain,—so much money in one case, a slave in the other; but while in the first the condemnation also was certain, in the second it was uncertain. What if the claim also was uncertain,—say a share of the profits of a joint adventure assured by stipulation? It was quite competent for the plaintiff to specify a definite sum, and claim that as due to him; but it was very hazardous; for unless he was able to prove the debt to the last sesterce he got nothing. To obviate the risk of such failure, the praetors devised the incerti condictio, whose formula commenced with

⁵ Gai. iv. 18. [Jobbé-Duval, as in n. 7, pp. 82 sq.]

⁶ In the typical Roman styles of actions the plaintiff was usually called Aulus Agerius, and the defendant Numerius Negidius.

⁷ [It was strictly called by the classical jurists actio certae creditae pecuniae. The name condictio certi in one or two texts (e.g. Dig. xii. 1, fr. 9, § 3) is held by some jurists to be due to interpolation. See Jobbé-Duval, La procédure civile, p. 76 sq.; Lenel, Edict, p. 183; Pernice, Labeo, iii. pp. 211, n. 2.]

⁸ Gaius enumerates them as the demonstratio, intentio, adjudicatio, and condemnatio, and describes their several functions in iv. §§ 39-43. Besides these, a formula might be preceded by a praescriptio (Gai. iv. §§ 130-137); and have incorporated in it fictions (§§ 32-38), exceptions (§§ 115-125), and replications, duplications, etc. (§§ 126-129).

a "demonstration" or indication of the cause of action, and whose "intention" referred to it and was conceived indefinitely: "Titius be judge. Whereas A. A. stipulated with N. N. for a share of the profits of a joint adventure, whatever it appears that N. N. ought in respect thereof to give to or do for A. A. (dare facere oportere), in the amount thereof condemn N. N.," and so on.⁹ Once this point was attained, further progress was comparatively easy, the way being open for the construction of formulae upon illiquid claims arising from transactions in which the practice of stipulation gradually dropped out of use (p. 267); till at last the bonae fidei judicia were reached, marked by the presence in the "intention" of the words ex fide bona—"whatever in respect thereof N. N. ought in good faith to give to or do for A. A."

In the case of real actions, the transition from the legis actiones to the formulae followed a different course. The Aebutian law did not abolish the procedure per sacramentum when reference was to be to the centumviral court on a question of quiritarian right. In the time of Cicero, although the petitory formula was sometimes employed,¹⁰ that court was still in full activity (§ 33, note 14); but by the time of Gaius it is doubtful if it was resorted to except for trial of questions of inheritance. In his time questions of property were raised either per sponsionem or per formulam petitoriam. The procedure by sponsion must be regarded as the bridge between the sacramental process and the petitory vindicatio. In the first as in the second the question of real right was determined only indirectly. The plaintiff required the defendant to give him his stipulatory promise to pay a nominal sum of twenty-five sesterces in the event of the thing in dispute being found to belong to the former; and at the same time the defendant gave sureties for its transfer to the plaintiff, with all fruits and profits, in the same event. The formula that was adjusted and remitted to a judge ex facie raised only the simple question whether the twenty-five sesterces were due or not: the action was in form a personal, not a real one, and therefore appropriately remitted to a single judex instead of to the centumviral tribunal. But judgment on it could be reached only through means of a finding (sententia) on the question of real right; if it was for the plaintiff, he did not claim the amount of the sponsion, but the thing which had been found to be his; and if the defendant delayed to deliver it with its fruits and profits, the plaintiff had recourse against the latter's sureties.¹¹ The petitory formula was undoubtedly of later introduction and much more straightforward. Like the certi condictio, it contained only "intention" and "condemnation." It ran thus: "Titius be judge. Should it appear that the slave Stichus, about whom this action has been raised, belongs to A. A. in quiritary right, then, unless the slave be restored, whatever be his value, in that, Judge, you will condemn N. N. to A. A.; should it not so appear, you will acquit him."

⁹ This was specifically called the actio ex stipulatu, but really nothing more than a variety of the condictio incerti. The later actions on the consensual contracts, and on all the nominate real contracts except mutuum, in like manner had specific names, but in fact were just incerti condictiones in the larger sense of the phrase. [The statement in the text and in this note is not quite accurate. There was a distinction between incertae actiones (as the actio ex stipulatu) and incerti condictiones. It was only in the formula of the former and not in that of the latter that a demonstratio was inserted. See Bekker, Akt. i. 110; Girard, p. 481. There is, however, considerable doubt whether a condictio incerti was at all recognised by the classical jurists. See Trampedach, Die condictio incerti, Z. d. Sav. Stift. (R. A.), xvii. pp. 97 sq.; Pflüger, xviii. pp. 75 sq. of same Zeitschrift.]

¹⁰ See an example in Cic. In Verr. II. ii. 12, § 81.

The formulae given above, whether applicable to real or personal actions, are so many illustrations of the class known as formulae juris civilis or in jus conceptae. The characteristic of such a formula was that it contained in the "intention" one or other of the following phrases—ejus esse ex jure Quiritium, adjudicari oportere,¹² dari oportere, dari fieri oportere, or damnum decidi oportere.¹³ Such a formula was employed

¹¹ Gai. iv. 91-96. [On this actio in rem per sponsionem consult Jobbé-Duval, Études sur l'histoire de la procédure civile, vol. i. pp. 459-483.]

¹² Employed only in the divisory actions, i.e. for dividing common property, partitioning an inheritance, or settling boundaries; the demand was that the judge should adjudicate (or award in property) to each of the parties such a share as he thought just.

¹³ Employed in certain actions upon delict, where the old penalties of death, slavery, or talion had in practice been transmuted into money payments, and the defendant consequently called upon to make a settlement in that way. [According to Lenel, Ed. Perp. pp. 236, 237, the word praestare was probably used in the formulae of actions pro socio and mandati.]

where the right to be vindicated or the obligation to be enforced had its sanction in the jus civile, whether in the shape of statute, consuetude, or interpretation. Where, on the other hand, the right or obligation had its sanction solely from the praetors' edict, formulae so conceived were inappropriate and incompetent. The actions employed in such cases were actiones juris honorarii, and these either actiones utiles, or actiones in factum. The first were adaptations of actions of the jus civile to cases that did not properly fall within them; the second were actions entirely of praetorian devising, for the protection of rights or redress of wrongs unknown to the jus civile.¹⁴

Of the actiones utiles some were called actiones ficticiae. Resort to a fiction is sometimes said to be a confession of weakness, and adversely criticised accordingly. But every amendment on the law is an admission of defect in what is being amended; and it was in sympathy with the spirit of Roman jurisprudence, when it found an action too narrow in its definition to include some new case that ought to fall within it, rather, by feigning that the new case was the same as the old, to bring it within the scope of the existing and familiar action, than to cause disturbance by either altering the definition of the latter or introducing an entirely new remedy. A bonorum possessor (p. 273) held a position unknown to the jus civile; he was not an heir, and therefore not entitled off-hand to employ the actions competent to an heir, either for recovering the property of the defunct or proceeding against his debtors. The praetor could have had no difficulty in devising quite new actions to meet his case; but he preferred the simpler expedient of adapting to it those of an heir, by introducing into the formula a fiction of civil heirship.¹⁵ So he did with the bonorum emptor or purchaser of a bankrupt's estate

¹⁴ In a few instances (not satisfactorily explained) there was both civil and praetorian remedy for the same wrong; for Gaius observes (iv. 45) that in commodate and deposit failure of the borrower or depositary to return the thing lent to or deposited with him gave rise to actions that might be formulated either in jus or in factum. In the same section he gives the styles of actiones depositi in jus and in factum conceptae; their comparison is instructive. [Girard, p. 515, n. 1, holds that the formulae in factum conceptae were older than those in jus. The term actio utilis, in a wide sense, included actio in factum. Cf. Gaius, iii. 219; Inst. iv. 3, § 16.]

¹⁵ Gai. iv. 34.

at the sale of it in mass by his creditors. Emptio bonorum was a purely praetorian institution,¹⁶ and the praetor, if he had thought fit, could easily have fortified the purchaser's acquisition by giving him praetorian remedies for recovering the property and suing the debtors of the bankrupt; but here again he followed the simpler course of giving him, as if he were a universal successor, the benefit of an heir's actions by help of a fiction of heirship.¹⁷ A peregrin could not sue or be sued for theft or culpable damage to property, for the XII Tables and the Aquilian law applied only to citizens; but he could both sue and be sued under cover of a fiction of citizenship.¹⁸ A man who had acquired a res Mancipi on a good title but without taking a conveyance by mancipation or surrender in court, if he was dispossessed before he had completed his usucapion, could not sue by rei vindicatio for its recovery, for he was not in a position to affirm that he was quiritarian owner; neither, for the same reason, could a man who in good faith and on a sufficient title had acquired a thing from one who was not in a position to alienate it. But in both cases the praetor granted him what was in effect a rei vindicatio proceeding on a fiction of completed usucapion,¹⁹—the extremely useful Publician action referred to in a previous section (§ 52).

These are examples of actiones ficticiae,—actions of the jus civile adapted by this very simple expedient to cases to which otherwise they would have been inapplicable, and that formed one of the most important varieties of the actiones utiles. Quite different was the course of procedure in the actiones in factum, whose number and varieties were practically unlimited, although for the most part granted in pursuance of the praetor's promise in the edict that under such and such circumstances he would make a remit to a judex (judicium dabo),²⁰ and formulated in accordance with the relative skeleton ¹⁶ Gai. iii. §§ 77-81.

¹⁷ Gai. iv. 35. Theophilus (Par. Inst. iii. 12) calls the bonorum emptor πραιτώριος διάδοχος (praetorian successor) of the bankrupt.

¹⁸ Gai. iv. 37. [On delictual actions, by and against peregrina, see Mommsen, SR. iii. 606 n.]

¹⁹ Gai. iv. 36.

²⁰ Examples: "Si quis negotia alterius . . . gesserit, judicium eo nomine dabo" (Dig. iii. 5, 3, pr.); "Quae dolo malo facta esse dicentur, si de his rebus styles also published on the album. A great number of them came to be known by special names, as, for example, the actio de dolo, actio negotiorum gestorum, actio hypothecaria, actio de pecunia constituta, actio vi bonorum raptorum, actio de superficie, etc., the generic name actio in factum being usually confined to the innominate ones. Their formulae, unlike those in jus conceptae, submitted no question of legal right for the consideration of the judge, but only a question of fact, proof of which was to be followed by a condemnation. That of the actio de dolo, for example, ran thus: "Titius be judge. Should it appear that, through the fraud of N. N., A. A. was induced to convey and give up possession of his farm (describing it) to N. N., then, Judge, unless according to your order N. N. restores it, you will condemn him in damages to A. A.; if it shall not so appear, you will acquit him." /

The words nisi arbitrato tuo restituat in this formula are an illustration of a qualification of the condemnatio of frequent occurrence in certain classes of actions. Under the formular system a judge, in condemning a defendant, had no alternative but to do so in money;²¹ the amount being sometimes definitely fixed in the formula, sometimes limited to a maximum, and sometimes left entirely to his discretion.²² But it frequently happened, especially in actions for restitution or exhibition of a thing, that pecuniary damages might not be the most appropriate result of the procedure; and so the judge was empowered, once the plaintiff had made out his case, to determine what, in all the circumstances, and in fairness and equity, would be sufficient satisfaction by the defendant.²³ It is possible that in some instances this discretionary power may have been conferred on the judge in such general words as "nisi arbitrato tuo N. N. A° A° satisfaciat;" but in actions for restitution or exhibition, if alia actio non erit et justa causa esse videbitur, iudicium dabo" (Dig. iv. 3, 1, § 1); "Nautae caupones stabularii quod cujusque salvum fore receperint, nisi restituent, in eos iudicium dabo" (Dig. iv. 9, 3, 1); "Quod quis commodasse dicetur, de eo iudicium dabo" (Dig. xiii. 6, 1, pr.).

²¹ Gai. iv. 48.

²² Gai. iv. §§ 50, 51.

²³ "Permittitur iudici ex bono et aequo secundum cujusque rei, de qua actum est, naturam aestimare, quemadmodum actori satisfieri oporteat" (Just. Inst. iv. 6, § 31).

satisfaction was not given voluntarily, it was usually specific performance that was ordained, under such qualifications as to mode, time, and place as the judge thought proper. It was only when default was made in obeying his order that the judge proceeded to condemnation in damages, the amount being assessed by the plaintiff himself under oath. Actions in which such a discretionary power was conferred on the judge was called arbitrary (actiones arbitrarie). It is noteworthy that the list of them given by Justinian²⁴ contains none but praetorian actions. But it is not therefore to be inferred that in actions of the jus civile a judge had no such discretion. On the contrary, Gaius says that it was his duty to acquit a defendant who made satisfaction to the plaintiff at any time after litiscontestatio.²⁵ There was no question that he was bound to do so ex officio in a bonae fidei [or a real] action; and the doubt of the Proculians whether he was bound or even entitled to do so in those that were stricti juris created no real difficulty, as it was apparently the practice in actions of that sort, when the complaint was of non-restitution, to introduce the words nisi restituat. This did not, it is true, empower the judge to determine what, short of restitution, might in the circumstances be deemed sufficient satisfaction to the plaintiff; but it authorised, if not compelled, him to abstain from condemning a defendant who had made full restitution.²⁶

Another clause that was very frequently incorporated in a formula was what was known as an exception (exceptio),—a plea in defence that excluded condemnation on grounds of equity or public policy, even when the plaintiff had clearly established the matter of fact and law embodied in his intentio. Thus, suppose A to have given B his stipulatory promise for 1000 sesterces, and B to have thereafter informally agreed not to sue upon the debt: the agreement, as a mere nudum pactum, was of no moment according to the jus civile, and so was no ipso jure bar to an action at B's instance,—it had not affected the dare oportere. Such an action, however, in face of the agreement, involved a breach of faith on B's part, which the praetor could not tolerate. He had announced in his album that he would give effect to any informal pact honestly entered into, that neither contravened a statute nor evaded its provisions;²⁷ and so, when B applied for a formula, A was entitled to have inserted in it an instruction to the judge that condemnation was to be conditional on A's failure to prove the alleged pactum de non petendo ("si inter A. A. et N. N. non convenit ne ea pecunia peteretur").²⁸ So where it was alleged that the money promised was in repayment of a loan that in fact had never been advanced; that the promise had been induced by fraudulent misrepresentations, extorted by intimidation, or given under excusable error of fact; that the matter had been compromised, and so on,—in all these cases the exception formulated by the praetor was the assertion of the equity of the jus honorarium in derogation of the strictness of the jus civile. Sometimes a defendant, instead of founding upon any particular fact which might have entitled him to a specific exception, deemed it more for his advantage to have words inserted in the formula which reserved to him the right to plead any unfair dealing on the part of the plaintiff that in equity disentitled him to demand condemnation; this was the so-called exceptio doli (generalis),—"si non in ea re quid dolo malo A¹ A¹ fiat." It was held to be implied in all bonae fidei actions,—"exceptio doli inest bonae fidei judiciis;" the quidquid dare facere oportet ex fide bona of their "intention" entitled the judge, without any exception formally pleaded, to take into consideration any suggestion by the defendant of unfair conduct on the part of the plaintiff.²⁹

²⁴ Inst. l.c. The passage in which Gaius probably dealt with them is almost entirely illegible in the Verona MS.; it is page 227, and would come between §§ 114 and 115 of book iv.

²⁵ Gai. iv. 114. [Cf. Inst. iv. 12, § 2.]

²⁶ On the actiones arbitrarie and the judge's arbitrium, see Lenel, Beiträge p. 80 sq.; Sohm, Inst. d. r. R. p. 136 sq. [p. 196 of English translation].

It is unnecessary to go into any explanation of the consequences of defects in the formula; or of the procedure in jure before it was adjusted, or in judicio afterwards; or of ²⁷ Ulp. lib. 4 ad edict. in Dig. ii. 14, fr. 7, § 7.

²⁸ Gai. iv. 119.

²⁹ On the subject of exceptions see Lenel, Ueber Ursprung u. Wirkung d. Exceptionen, Heidelb. 1876, and literature there referred to; Sohm, Inst. [Eng. trans. p. 197]. The latter explains very distinctly and in short compass the nature of exceptions founded on statute, such as the Velleian and Macedonian senatusconsults, and the function of the exception in actiones in factum.

appeal for review of the judgment by a higher tribunal; or of execution (which was against the estate of the judgment-debtor, and took the form of incarceration only when his goods could not be attached).⁸⁰ Enough has been said to show how elastic was this procedure, and how the praetorian formulae, in conjunction with the relative announcements in the Edict, supplied the vehicle for the introduction into the law of an immense amount of new doctrine. The system was fully developed before Julian's consolidation of the Edict; and the statutory recognition which the latter then obtained did nothing to impair its efficiency.

SECTION 72.—PROCEDURE "EXTRA ORDINEM"¹

The two-staged procedure, first in jure and then in judicio, constituted the ordo judiciorum privatorum. Early in the empire, however, it became the practice in certain cases for the magistrate to abstain from adjusting a formula and making a remit to a judex, and to keep the cause in his own hands from beginning to end. This course was adopted sometimes because the claim that was being made rested rather on moral than on legal right, and sometimes in order to avoid unnecessary disclosure of family misunderstandings. Thus the earliest questions that were raised about testamentary trusts were sent for consideration and disposal to the consuls; apparently because, in the existing state of jurisprudence, it was thought incompetent for a beneficiary to maintain in reference to the heir (who had only been requested to comply with the testator's wishes) that he was bound in law to pay him (dare oportere) his bequest. Had the difficulty arisen at an earlier period and in the heyday of the constructive energy of the praetors, they would probably have solved it with an actio in factum. As it was, it fell to the emperors to deal with it, and they adopted the method of extraordinaria cognitio; the jurisdiction which they in the first instance conferred on the consuls being before long confided to a magistrate specially designated for it,—the praetor fideicommissarius. Questions between tutors and their pupil wards in like manner began to be dealt with extra ordinem, the cognition being entrusted by Marcus Aurelius to a praetor tutelaris; while fiscal questions in which a private party was interested went to a praetor fisci, whose creation was due to Nerva. Claims for aliment between parent and child or patron and freedman rested on natural duty rather than legal right; they could not therefore well be made the subject-matter of a judicium, and consequently went for disposal to the consuls or the city prefect, and in the provinces to the governor. Questions of status, especially of freedom or slavery, at least from the time of Marcus Aurelius, were also disposed of extra ordinem; and so were claims by physicians, advocates, and public teachers for their honoraria, and by officials for their salaries, the Romans refusing to admit that these could be recovered by an ordinary action of location. In all those extraordinary cognitions the procedure began with a complaint addressed to the magistrate, instead of an in jús vocatio of the party complained against; it was for the magistrate to require the attendance of the latter (evocatio) if he thought the complaint relevant. The decision was a judicatum or decretum according to circumstances.

⁸⁰ [On the form of execution by missio in bona, see infra, p. 349, n. 12.]

¹ See Keller, Röm. CP. § 81; Bethmann-Hollweg, Gesch. d. CP. vol. ii. § 122; Bekker, Aktionen, vol. ii. chap. 23; Baron, Gesch. d. r. R. vol. i. § 220; Buonamici, Procedura, p. 398 sq. [Cf. supra, § 38.]

SECTION 73.—JURAL REMEDIES FLOWING DIRECTLY FROM THE MAGISTRATE'S IMPERIUM¹

Great as were the results for the law of the multiplication and simplification of judicia through the formular system, it may be questioned whether it did not benefit quite as much from the direct intervention of the praetors in certain cases, in virtue of the supreme power with which they were invested. It manifested itself principally in the form of (1) interdicts; (2) praetorian stipulations; (3) missio in possessionem; and (4) in integrum restitutio.

¹ Keller, §§ 74-80; Bethmann-Hollweg, CP. vol. ii. §§ 98, 119-121; Bekker, vol. ii. chaps. 16-18; Baron, vol. i. §§ 216-219.

1. The interdicts² have already been referred to as in use under the régime of the jus civile (p. 206); but their number and scope were vastly increased under that of the jus honorarium. The characteristic of the procedure by interdict was this,—that in it the praetor reversed the ordinary course of things, and instead of waiting for an inquiry into the facts alleged by a complainer, provisionally assumed them to be true, and pronounced an order upon the respondent which he was bound either to obey or show to be unjustified. The order pronounced might be either restitutory, exhibitory (in both cases usually spoken of in the texts as a decree), or prohibitory:—restitutory when, for example, the respondent was ordained to restore something he was alleged to have taken possession of by violent means, remove impediments he had placed in the channel of a river, and so on; exhibitory, when he was ordained to produce something he was unwarrantably detaining, e.g. the body of a freeman he was holding as his slave, or a will in which the complainer alleged that he had an interest; prohibitory, as, for example, that he should not disturb the status quo of possession as between the complainer and himself, that he should not interfere with a highway, a watercourse, the access to a burial-place, and so forth. If the respondent obeyed the order pronounced in a restitutory or exhibitory decree, there was an end of the matter. But frequently, and perhaps more often than not, the interdict was only the commencement of a litigation, facilitated by sponsions and restipulations, in which the questions had to be tried (1) whether the interdict or injunction was justified, (2) whether there had been breach of it, and (3) if so, what damages were due in consequence. The procedure, therefore, was often anything but summary.

In the possessory interdicts uti possidetis and utrubi in particular it was extremely involved; due to some extent to the fact that they were double interdicts (interdicta duplicia), i.e. addressed indifferently to both parties. Gaius says,³ but, as most jurists think, without adequate grounds for it, that they had been devised as ancillary to a litigation about ownership, and for the purpose of deciding which of the parties, as possessor, was to have the advantage of standing on the defensive in the rei vindicatio.⁴ That they were so used in his time, as in that of Justinian,⁵ cannot be doubted. But it is amazing that they should have been, for they were infinitely more cumbrous than the vindicatio to which they led up.⁶ Take the interdict uti possidetis (which applied to immovables, as utrubi did to movables). Both parties being present, the praetor addressed them to this effect: "I forbid that one of you who does not possess the house in question to use force to prevent him who does possess it from continuing to do so as at present, provided always that his possession is due neither to clandestine or forcible exclusion of his adversary nor to a grant from him during pleasure." It is manifest that this decided nothing; it was no more than a prohibition of disturbance of the status quo; it left the question entirely open which of the parties it was that was in possession, and which that was forbidden to interfere. The manner of its explication was somewhat singular. Each of the parties was bound at once to commit what in the case of one of them must have been a breach of the interdict, by a pretence of violence offered to the other (vis ex conventu);⁷ each of them was thus in a position to say to the other—

² In addition to the authorities in last note, see K. A. Schmidt, Das Interdiktenverfahren d. Röm. in geschichtl. Entwicklung, Leipzig, 1853; Machélaud, Théorie des interdits en droit romain, Paris, 1864; Buonamici, Procedura, pp. 420-480. [Add Karlowa, Röm. RG. ii. pp. 313 sq.; Ubbelohde, Die Interdicte des röm. Rechts, 1889-96 (in Glück's Pandecten, Serie der Bücher, 43 und 44); Jobbé-Duval, La procédure civile chez les Romains, i. p. 207 sq. The last-named writer (p. 212) treats the interdict in the classical law as having its source in jurisdictio rather than in imperium. Cf. Ubbelohde, op. cit. § 1833, p. 9.]

³ Gai. iv. 148. [Cf. Cuq, p. 483.]

⁴ If that had been their original purpose, they must have been unknown as long as the rei vindicatio proceeded per sacramentum; for in the sacramental real action both parties vindicated, and both consequently were at once plaintiffs and defendants (supra, § 34, note 5). [But see Bekker, Akt. i. 210 and note 10.]

⁵ Inst. iv. 16, 4. But long before the time of Justinian they had been greatly simplified, and really converted into an action, though retaining the old name.

⁶ See the (imperfect) description of the procedure in Gai. iv. §§ 148-152, 160, 166-170.

⁷ So Gaius calls it: it was probably the same thing as the vis moribus facta referred to by Cicero, Pro Caec. 1, § 2; 8, § 22. See Kappeyne van de Coppello, "Ueber das vim facere beim interdictum uti possidetis," in his Abhandl. zum röm. Staats- und Privatrecht (Stuttgart, 1885), pp. 115 sq. [Cf. Puchta, Inst. i. § 161, n. 8; Girard, p. 1029, n. 1.]

"We have both used force; but it was you alone that did it in defiance of the interdict, for it is I that am in possession." The interim enjoyment of the house was then awarded to the highest bidder, who gave his stipulatory promise to pay the rent to his adversary in the event of the latter being successful in the long-run; penal sponsions and restipulations were exchanged upon the question which of them had committed a breach of the interdict; and on these, four in number, formulae were adjusted and sent to a judex for trial. If the procedure could not thus be explicated, because either of the parties declined to take part in the vis ex conventu, or the bidding, or the sponsions and restipulations, he was assumed to be in the wrong, and, by what was called a "secondary" interdict, required at once to yield up his possession or detention, and to abstain from disturbing the other in all time coming.⁸ Whatever we may think of the action-system of the Romans in the period of the classical jurisprudence, one cannot help wondering at a procedure so cumbrous and complex as that of their possessory interdicts.⁹

2. A praetorian stipulation¹⁰ was a stipulatory engagement imposed upon a man by a magistrate or judge, in order to secure a third party from the chance of loss or prejudice through some act or omission either of him from whom the engagement was exacted or of some other person for whom he was responsible. Although called praetorian, because the cases in which such stipulations were exigible were set forth in the Edict, yet there can be no question that they originated in the jus civile; in fact they were just a means of assuring to a man in advance the benefit of an action of the jus civile, whereby he might obtain reparation for any injury suffered by him through the occurrence of the act or omission contemplated as possible. Ulpian classified them¹¹ as cautionary (cautionales), judicial, and common. The first were purely precautionary, and quite independent of any action already in dependence between the party moving the magistrate to exact the stipulation and him on whom it was desired to impose it. There were many varieties of them, connected with all branches of the law; for example, the cautio damni infecti, security against damage to a man's property in consequence say of the ruinous condition of his neighbour's house, the cautio usufructuaria that property usufructed should revert unimpaired to the owner on the expiry of the usufructuary's life interest, the aedilian stipulation against faults in a thing sold, and so forth. In all these cases the stipulation or cautio was a guarantee against future loss or injury, usually corroborated by sureties, and made effectual by an action on the stipulation in the event of loss or injury resulting. Judicial stipulations, according to Ulpian's classification, were those imposed by a judge in the course of and with reference to an action in dependence before him, as, for example, the cautio judicatum solvi (that the defendant would satisfy the judgment), the cautio de dolo (that a thing claimed in the action would not be impaired in the meantime), and many others. Common were such as might either be imposed by a magistrate apart from any depending action or by a judge in the course of one; such as that taken from a tutor or curator for the faithful administration of his office, or from a procurator that his principal would ratify what he was doing.

⁸ Kappeyne van de Coppello (p. 166 sq.) holds that the secondary interdict (int. secundarium) was not a contumacial procedure, but one in which the party declining vim facere, etc. (because he knew he could not establish lawful possession in his own person), was still entitled to appear as defendant, and require his adversary to prove his possession as the foundation of a restitutory or prohibitory decree.

⁹ [The old English common law action of ejectment with its lease, entry, and ouster presents some curious analogies.]

¹⁰ To the authorities in note 1 add Schirmer, Ueber die prätorischen Judicial-stipulationen, Greifswald, 1853; Buonamici, Procedura, p. 499 sq.

3. *Missio in possessionem*¹² was the putting of a person in possession either of the whole estate of another (missio in bona) or of some particular thing belonging to him (missio in rem). The first was by far the most important. It was resorted to as a means of execution, not only against a judgment-debtor, but also against a man who fraudulently kept out of the way and thus avoided summons in an action, or who, having been duly summoned, would not do what was expected on the part of a defendant; against the estate of a party deceased to which no heir would enter, thus leaving creditors without a debtor from whom they could enforce payment of their claims; and also against the estate that had belonged to a person who had undergone capitis deminutio (§ 29), if the family-head to whom he had subjected himself refused to be responsible for his debts. Missio in rem was granted, for example, when a man refused to give cautio damni infecti; the applicant was then put in possession of the ruinous property for his own protection.

¹¹ Dig. xlv. 5, 1.

¹² [Creditors had in many cases the option of real or personal execution. See supra, p. 201; Puchta, Inst. § 179 and note m.m.; Girard, p. 1018. Whether in the ordinary formulary procedure pignus in causa judicati captum was available, is a doubtful question.]

4. In integrum restitutio,¹² reinstatement of an individual, on ground of equity, in the position he had occupied before some occurrence that had resulted to his prejudice, was one of the most remarkable manifestations of the exercise of the imperium. It was not that the individual in question, either directly by action or indirectly by exception, obtained a judgment that either rendered what had happened comparatively harmless or gave him compensation in damages for the loss he had sustained from it, but that the magistrate—and it could only be the praetor, the urban or praetorian prefect, a provincial governor, or the emperor himself—at his own hand pronounced a decree that as far as possible restored the status quo ante. It was not enough, however, to entitle a man to this extraordinary relief that he was able to show that he had been taken advantage of to his hurt, and that no other adequate means of redress was open to him; he required in addition to be able to found on some subjective ground of restitution, such as minority, or, if he was of full age, intimidation which could not be resisted, mistake of fact, fraud, absence, or the like. What should be held to amount to a sufficient ground of restitution, either objective or subjective, was at first left very much to the discretion of the magistrate; but even here practice and jurisprudence in time fixed the lines within which he ought to confine himself, and made the principles of in integrum restitutio as well settled almost as those of the actio quod metus causa or the actio de dolo.

¹² In addition to the authorities in note 1, see Savigny, System, vol. vii. §§ 315-343; Buonamici, Procedura, p. 480 sq.

PART V
THE PERIOD OF CODIFICATION

Diocletian to Justinian

PART V

THE PERIOD OF CODIFICATION

Diocletian to Justinian

CHAPTER I

HISTORICAL EVENTS THAT INFLUENCED THE LAW

SECTION 74.—SUPREMACY OF THE EMPERORS AS SOLE LEGISLATORS

FROM the time of Diocletian downwards, the making of the law was exclusively in the hands of the emperors. The senate still existed, but shorn of all its old functions alike of government and legislation. The responses of patented jurists were a thing of the past. It was to the imperial consistory alone that men looked for interpretation of old law or promulgation of new.

In the reign of Diocletian rescripts (p. 294) were still abundant; but the constitutions in the Theodosian and Justinianian Codes that date from the time of Constantine downwards are mostly of a wider scope, and of the class known as general or edictal laws (leges generales, edictales). It would be wrong, however, to infer that rescripts had ceased; for Justinian's Code contains various regulations as to their form, and the matter is dealt with again in one of his Novels. The reason why so few are preserved is that they were no longer authoritative except for the parties to whom they were addressed. This was expressly declared by the Emperors Arcadius and Honorius in 398, in reference to those in answer to applications for advice from officials; and it is not unreasonable to assume that a limitation of the same sort had been put at an earlier date on the authority of those addressed to private parties. Puchta is of opinion that the enactment of Honorius and Arcadius applied equally to decreta (p. 294); for this reason,—that during this period matters of litigation did not come under the cognisance of the emperors except on appeal, and that under the new arrangements of Constantine the judgment of affirmance or reversal was embodied in a rescript addressed to the magistrate from whom the appeal had been taken.¹ The rule of Arcadius and Honorius was renewed in 425 by Theodosius and Valentinian, who qualified it, however, to this extent,—that if it contained any distinct indication that the doctrine it laid down was meant to be of general application, then it was to be received as an edict or lex generalis. To this Justinian adhered in so far as rescripts in the old sense of the word were concerned; but declared that his judgments (decreta) should be received everywhere as laws of general application, and that so should any interpretation given by him of a lex generalis, even though elicited by the petition of a private party.

The imperial edicts, adjusted in the consistory, were usually addressed to the people, the senate, or some official, civil, military, or ecclesiastical, according to the nature of their subject-matter. The mode of publication varied; but when sent down to an official it was his duty to see to the matter. After the partition of the empire, as each Augustus had the power of legislating for the whole empire, constitutions that affected the interests of both East and West were frequently the result of consultation; at other times there was a communication of a new law by pragmatic sanction from its author to his colleague, the latter by edict ordering its publication if thought expedient. In style the edicts compare very unfavourably with the senatusconsults and rescripts of the second and third century, being uniformly verbose and in many cases obscure. It is not in the least surprising that the compilers of the Lex Romana

¹ [So-called consultationes post sententiam, see Puchta, Inst. i. § 131.]

Visigothorum thought them to stand in need of an "interpretatio"; the pity is that the latter is itself so far from clear.

SECTION 75.—ESTABLISHMENT OF CHRISTIANITY AS THE STATE RELIGION¹

A disposition has sometimes been manifested to credit nascent Christianity with the humaner spirit that began to operate on some of the institutions of the law in the first century of the empire, but which in a previous section (§ 55) has been ascribed to the infiltration into the jus civile of doctrines of the jus naturale, the product of the philosophy of the Stoa. The teaching of Seneca did quite as much, nay, far more, to influence it then than the lessons that were taught in the little assemblies of the early converts. It would be a bold thing to say that, had Christianity never gained its predominance, that spirit of natural right would not have continued to animate the course of legislation, and to evoke, as years progressed, most of those amendments in the law of the family and the law of succession that were amongst the most valuable contributions of the imperial constitutions to the private law. It may well be that that spirit was intensified and rendered more active with the growth of Christian belief; but not until the latter had been publicly sanctioned by Constantine, and by Theodosius declared to be the religion of the state, do we meet with incontestable records of its influence. We find them in enactments in favour of the Church and its property, and of its privileges as a legatee; in those conferring or imposing on the bishops a supervision of charities and charitable institutions, and a power of interfering in matters of guardianship; in the recognition of the efficacy of certain acts done in presence of two or three of the clergy, and thereafter recorded in the church registers; in the disabilities as to marriage and succession with which heretics and apostates were visited, and in a variety of minor matters. Of greater importance were three features for which it was directly responsible,—the repeal of the caduciary provisions of the Papia-Poppaeian law (p. 285), the penalties imposed upon divorce, and the institution of the bishop's court (episcopalis audientia).

¹ Troplong, De l'influence du christianisme sur le droit civil des Romains, Paris, 1843 (and subsequently); Merivale, The Conversion of the Roman Empire (Boyle Lectures for 1864), London, 1864, particularly Lect. 4 and notes to it in the Appendix; [Allard, Le christianisme et l'empire romain, 2nd ed. Paris, 1897].

The purpose of the Caduciary Law was to discourage celibacy and encourage fruitful marriages; but legislation in such a spirit could not possibly be maintained when celibacy had come to be inculcated as a virtue, and as the peculiar characteristic of a holy life. The penalties alike of orbitas and coelibatus were abolished by Constantine in the year 320.

The legislation about divorce, from the first of Constantine's enactments on the subject down to those of Justinian, forms a miserable chapter in the history of the law. Not one of the emperors who busied himself with the matter, undoing the work of his predecessors and substituting legislation of his own quite as complicated and futile, thought of interfering with the old principle that divorce ought to be as free as marriage, and independent of the sanction or decree of a judicial tribunal. Justinian was the first that, by one of his Novels, imposed a condition on parties to a divorce of common accord (communi consensu), namely, that they should both enter a convent, otherwise it should be null; but so distasteful was this to popular feeling, and so little conducive to improvement of the tone of morals within the conventual precincts, that it was repealed by his successor. What wonder, with such unqualified freedom of divorce, that Jerome should tell us he had seen in Rome a man living with his twenty-first wife, she having already had twenty-two husbands; or that we should have a bishop of Amasia, some thirty or forty years before Justinian, declaring that men changed their wives just as they did their clothes, and that nuptial beds were removed as often and as easily as market-stalls! The legislation of Justinian's predecessors and the bulk of his own were levelled at one-sided repudiations, imposing penalties, personal and patrimonial, (1) upon the author of a repudiation on some ground the law did not recognise as sufficient,—and the lawful grounds varied from reign to reign,—and (2) upon the party whose misconduct gave rise to a repudiation that was justifiable. Into the details, however, it is unnecessary to enter.²

The bishop's court (episcopale judicium, episcopalis audientia)³ had its origin in the practice of the primitive Christians, in accordance with the apostolic precept, of submitting their differences to one or two of their brethren in the faith, usually a presbyter or bishop, who acted as arbiter.⁴ On the establishment of Christianity the practice obtained legislative sanction; Constantine giving the bishop's court concurrent jurisdiction with the ordinary civil courts where both parties preferred the former, and by a later enactment going so far as to empower one of the parties to a suit to remove it to the ecclesiastical tribunal against the will of the other. For various reasons, and amongst them the ignorance of the ordinary judges and the costs of litigation in the civil courts, advantage was taken of this power of resorting to the bishop to an extent which seriously interfered with the proper discharge of his spiritual functions; so that Honorius judged it expedient to revert to the original rule, and, at least as regarded laymen, to limit the right of resort to the episcopal judicatory to cases in which both parties consented. The procedure was of much the same nature as a reference to arbitration; the bishop's finding was not a judgment but a definitio; and, if not voluntarily observed, had to be made operative by aid of the civil magistrate. It is impossible to say with any approach to exactitude what effect this intervention of the clergy as judges in ordinary civil causes—for they had no criminal jurisdiction—had on the development of the law; but it can hardly have been without some influence in still further promoting the tendency to subordinate act and word to will and animus, to deal leniently with technicalities, and to temper the rules of the jus civile with equity and considerations of natural right.

² See Wächter, Ueber Ehescheidungen bei den Römern (Stuttgart, 1822), p. 184 sq.

³ Bethmann-Hollweg, Gesch. d. CP. vol. iii. § 139. [Puchta, Inst. i. § 126.]

⁴ Cox's First Century of Christianity (London, 1886), p. 226 sq.

SECTION 76.—SOCIAL AND AGRARIAN CHANGES

There were two amid the many social and economical changes of the period that had a material bearing on the private law,—the introduction of the principle of heredity into most trades, occupations, and professions, and the extension of the colonate or servitude of the glebe. The consequences of the first, however, are too special to be discussed with advantage.

As regards the colonate (colonatus),¹ it seems to have become the normal condition of the plebs rustica all over the empire,—personal freedom, but perpetual servitude to the soil (servi terrae ipsius). There is much controversy as to its origin. The truth seems to be that conditions nearly resembling it, and out of which it may be said to have been evolved, existed in different parts of the empire long before there was any general legislation on the subject; and that those conditions, regulated to a great extent by local custom or special imperial mandate, must be ascribed to different causes in different places. There is evidence that in Egypt there existed something very like the colonate even before it had passed under Roman domination; that in some parts of Africa slaves were enfranchised on condition of perpetual attachment to the land that had been their peculium; that into the western provinces there were repeated importations of barbarian prisoners who were distributed amongst the great landowners as coloni; and that very often the small yeomen placed themselves in the same position in relation to some great landowner for the sake of his protection, or were by him compelled so to submit themselves. It was a state of matters which those at the head of affairs, with their recollection of the disastrous fate of the latifundia of Italy, had good reason to encourage; for it moderated the mischiefs of great estates by ensuring that they would be peopled by freemen, whose poll-tax increased the revenue, and whose own interests afforded the best guarantee for their doing all they could to make their little holdings productive.

¹ The earlier literature is referred to and criticised in Heisterbergk, Die Entstehung des Colonats, Leipzig, 1876. He omits reference to the important work of Elia Lattes, Studi storici sopra il contratto di Enfiteusi nelle sue relazioni col Colonato, Turin, 1868, of which chaps. ii. and iii. are devoted to the colonate. Of later date than Heisterbergk may be noted Marquardt, Röm. Staatsverwalt. vol. ii. p. 232 sq.; Fustel de Coulanges, "Le Colonat romain," in his Recherches sur quelques problèmes d'histoire, Paris, 1881; Mommsen, "Ueber d. Dekret des Commodus f. den saltus Burunitanus," in Hermes, vol. xv. p. 408 sq.; Humbert's article "Colonus," in Daremberg and Saglio's Dict. des Antiquités grecques et romaines, part ix. (1884), p. 1322 sq.; Karlowa, Röm. RG. vol. i. p. 918 sq. [See also Esmein, Mélanges, pp. 293 sq., 370 sq.; Richter, Das Weströmische Reich, pp. 190 sq.; Pelham, The Imperial Domains and the Colonate, 1890; Beaudouin, "Les grands domaines dans l'empire romain," in Nouv. Rev. Hist. vols. xxi. and xxii.]

According to the very numerous constitutions in the Theodosian and Justinianian Codes that regulate the position of the coloni, they were freemen, subject to capitation, and inscribed in the census list in the page appropriated to the landowner under whom they held and from whom their poll-tax was collected; it is in reference to their liability to it that they are frequently spoken of as adscripticii, tributarii, censiti. They were liable also to military service when their lord was called upon to furnish recruits; but they were not entitled voluntarily to enlist, for that was to desert their service. From his lord the colonus held a small farm, for a rent payable sometimes in money but usually in kind, but which the former had no power to augment. With fixity of rent he had also a sort of fixity of tenure; his lord (dominus, possessor, patronus) could not sell him apart from his holding, nor his holding without him; but it was lawful for an owner of two estates, if one was insufficiently furnished with tenants, to replenish it from the other, provided that in so doing he did not separate a man from his wife and young children. If a colonus fled, his lord, when he recovered him, might put him in chains; and against any third party detaining him the lord had a right of action as if the colonus were really a slave. This, however, he was not; for, with permission of his lord, which sometimes had to be paid for, he might contract a lawful marriage that gave him potestas over his children; he might hold property of his own, even lands, in respect of which he was entered in the census lists and liable for land-tax as proprietor in his own right; and on his death what belonged to him passed to his heirs by testament or on intestacy, and only on their failure fell to his lord. Alienation inter vivos, as a rule, was competent only with the lord's consent, the belongings of the colonus being in a manner no more than peculium; but a privileged class known as liberi coloni, who either themselves or their ancestors had originally been citizens of free birth, were not subject to this restriction.²

Once a class of coloni had been created on an estate, it was perpetuated and recruited by birth (for the condition was hereditary), by prescription, by a freeman's marriage with an adscripticia, and by the reduction of able-bodied mendicants to that condition as a penalty. Once a colonus, ever a colonus, was almost literally true. For a time it was held that if a born colonus had de facto for thirty years lived in independence, he thereby acquired de jure the status of a free Roman citizen; but this was disallowed by Justinian, who, possibly out of consideration for the interests of agriculture, refused to admit the possibility of a man's escape from the bonds that tied him to the soil except by his elevation to the episcopate, and provided always he had taken orders with the consent of his lord.

SECTION 77.—ABANDONMENT OF THE "FORMULAR" SYSTEM OF PROCEDURE¹

The formular system, with its remit from the praetor to a sworn judex who was to try the cause, was of infinite advantage to the law; for the judgment was that of a free and independent citizen, untrammelled by officialism, fresh from some centre of business, and in full sympathy with the parties between whom he had to decide. Such a system was incompatible with the political arrangements of Diocletian and Constantine; and it is with no surprise that we find the former of those sovereigns instructing the provincial governors that in future, unless prevented by pressure of business (or, according to a later constitution of Julian's, when the matter was of trifling importance), they were themselves to hear the causes brought before them from first to last, as was already the practice in the extraordinariae cognitiones (§ 72). The remit in exceptional cases was not, as formerly, to a private citizen, but to what was called a judex pedaneus, probably a matriculated member of the local bar (whom, however, the parties might decline if they could agree upon a referee of their own selection); and for a time his delegated authority was embodied in a formula after the old fashion. But even this exceptional use of it did not long survive; for an enactment by the two sons of Constantine, conceived in terms the most comprehensive, declared fixed styles to be but traps for the unwary, and forbade their use in any legal act whatever, whether contentious or voluntary. The result was not only the formal disappearance of the distinction between the proceedings in jure and in judicio, but the practical disappearance also of the distinctions between actions in jus and in factum, and actiones directae and utiles; the conversion of the interdict into an actio ex interdicto; admission of power of amendment of the pleadings; condemnation in the specific thing claimed, if in existence, instead of its pecuniary equivalent; and execution accordingly by aid of officers of the law.

² [As to the distinction between free and servile coloni, in relation to enfranchisement, see Esmein, Mélanges, p. 372 sq.]

¹ Wieding, Der Justinianische Libellprocess, Vienna, 1865; Bethmann-Hollweg, Gesch. d. CP. vol. iii. (1866); Muther (rev. Wieding), in the Krit. VJS. vol. ix. (1867), pp. 161 sq., 329 sq.; Wieding, in same journal, vol. xii. (1870), p. 228 sq.; Bekker, Aktionen, vol. ii. chaps. 23, 24; Baron, Gesch. d. r. R. vol. i. p. 448 sq.; Buonamici, Procedura, p. 408 sq.

In Constantinople the jurisdiction in civil matters was in the prefect of the city and the minor judges, to wit, the praefectus annonae and the praetors; in Rome it was in the hands of the same officials, and concurrently with them the vicarius urbis. In the provinces it was in the governors; but with a limited competence in the municipal magistrates and the defenders of towns.² The vicars and praetorian prefects acted as courts of the first instance only exceptionally; but the latter had eventually the same power as the emperor of citing any person to their tribunal, whatever his proper forum.³ In addition, there were many special fora for privileged parties or causes, to which it is unnecessary to refer. From the minor judges there was appeal to the superior ones, and from these again to the emperor. A process was full from first to last of intervention by officials. The in jus vocatio of the

² [Defensores civitatum. See Kuntze, Cursus, § 948.]

³ Willems, Droit publ. romain (4th ed. Paris, 1880), p. 620 [6th ed. p. 579.]

Twelve Tables—the procedure by which a plaintiff himself brought his adversary into court, was a thing of the past. In the earlier part of the period the proceedings commenced with the litis denuntiatio introduced in the time of Marcus Aurelius and remodelled by Constantine; but under Justinian (though probably begun before his reign) the initial step was what was called the libellus conventionis. This was a short and precise written statement addressed by the plaintiff to the court, explaining (but without detail) the nature of the action he proposed to raise and the claim he had to prefer; which was accompanied with a formal undertaking to proceed with the cause and follow it out to judgment, under penalty of having to pay double costs to the defendant. If the judge was satisfied of the relevancy of the libel, he pronounced an interlocutor (interlocutio) ordaining its service on the respondent. This was done by an officer of court, who cited him to appear on a day named, usually at a distance of two or three months. The defendant, through the officer, put in an answer (libellus contradictionis), at the same time giving security for the proper maintenance of the defence and eventual satisfaction of the judgment. On the day appointed the parties were first heard on any dilatory pleas, such as defect of jurisdiction, if none were offered, or those stated repelled, they then proceeded to expound their respective grounds of action and defence, each finally making oath of his good faith in the matter (juramentum calumniae), and their counsel doing the same.

From this point, which marked the litis contestatio or joinder of issue, the procedure was much the same as that in judicio under the formular system. But in all cases in which the demand was that a particular thing should be given or restored, and the plaintiff desired to have the thing itself rather than damages, execution was specific and effected through officers of the law (manu militari). Where, on the other hand, the condemnation was pecuniary, the usual course was for the judge, through his officers, to take possession of such things belonging to the defendant as were thought sufficient to satisfy the judgment (pignus in causa judicati captum), and which were eventually sold judicially if the defendant still refused to pay; the missio in bona (p. 349) of the classical period was rarely [if ever] resorted to except in the case of insolvency.

SECTION 78.—THE VALENTINIANIAN "LAW OF CITATIONS" ¹

This famous enactment, the production of Theodosius II., tutor of the youthful Valentinian III., was issued from Ravenna in the year 426, and addressed to the Roman Senate. It ran thus:—

"We accord our approval to all the writings of Papinian, Paul, Gaius, Ulpian, and Modestine, conceding to Gaius the same authority that is enjoyed by Paul, Ulpian, and the rest, and sanctioning the citation of all his works. We ratify also the jurisprudence (scientiam) of those earlier writers whose treatises and statements of the law any of the aforesaid five have made use of in their own works,—Scaevola, for example, and Sabinus, and Julian, and Marcellus,—and of all others whom they have been in the habit of quoting as authorities (omniumque quos illi celebrarunt); provided always, as their antiquity makes them uncertain, that the texts of those earlier jurists are verified by collation of manuscripts.² If divergent dicta be adduced, that party shall prevail who has the greatest number of authorities on his side; if the number on each side be the same, that one shall prevail which has the support of Papinian; but, whilst he, most excellent of them all, is to be preferred to any other single authority, he must yield to any two. (Paul's and Ulpian's notes on his writings, however, as already enacted, are to be disregarded.) Where opinions are equal, and none entitled to preference, we leave it to the discretion of the judge which he shall adopt." [We also order that Paul's "Sentences" shall always be held authoritative.]

This constitution has always been regarded as a signal proof of the lamentable condition into which jurisprudence

¹ Theod. Cod. i. 4, 3; Puchta, in the Rhein. Museum f. Jurisprud. vol. v. (1832), p. 141 sq., and in his Verm. Schrift. (Leipzig, 1851), p. 284 sq.; Sanio, in his Rechtshistor. Abhandl. u. Studien (Königsberg, 1845), p. 1 sq.; Karlowa, Röm. RG. vol. i. p. 933 sq.; Roby, Introduction, p. lxxxiv. sq.

² [See Sohm, Inst. § 17 n. 1 and 2. Sohm's view is that the words of the enactment "codicum collatione firmantur" mean that citations from the earlier jurists, as Scaevola, etc., are only to be allowed after collation with certain collections of passages from these writers which had been intended to be made by Theodosius, but which, in fact, never were made. And so, in practical result, only passages of such jurists as had been incorporated by Papinian, etc., into their works could be referred to as authorities. Cf. Pernice, Z. d. S. Stift. vii. 155.]

had sunk in the beginning of the fifth century. Constantine, a hundred years earlier, had condemned the notes of Ulpian and Paul upon Papinian. Claiming, as the later emperors did, to be the only authoritative mouthpieces of the law, it was not an unreasonable stretch of their prerogative to declare that the criticism of the two younger jurists, notwithstanding that they had enjoyed the jus respondendi ex auctoritate principis, should not derogate from the authority of their more eminent predecessor. There were no longer any living jurists to lay down the law (jura condere); and if it was to be gathered from the writings of those who were dead, it was well that the use of them should be regulated as was done by Constantine. The Valentinian law proceeded so far in the same direction. It made a selection of the jurisconsults of the past whose works alone were to be allowed to be cited: Papinian, Paul, Ulpian, and Modestine, the four latest patented counsel of any distinction; Gaius, of authority previously only in the schools, but whose writings were now approved universally, notwithstanding that he had never possessed the jus respondendi; and all the earlier jurists whose dicta those five had accepted.³ But it went yet a step further; for it declared all of them, with the sole exception of Papinian, to be of equal authority, and degraded the function of the judge in most cases, so far at least as a question of law was concerned, to the purely arithmetical task of counting up the names which the industry of the advocates on either side had succeeded in adducing in support of their respective contentions.⁴ It is probable that, from the days of Hadrian down to those of Alexander Severus, when the emperor in his council had to frame a rescript or a decree, its tenor would be decided by the vote of the majority; but that was after argument and counter-argument, which must in many cases have modified first impressions. Taking the votes of dead men, who had not heard each other's reasons for their opinions, was a very different process. It may have been necessary; but it can have been so only because a living jurisprudence had no existence,—because the constructive talent of the earlier empire had entirely disappeared.

³ This seems to be the natural reading of the enactment; although some are of opinion that it was intended to sanction the citation of those passages only of the earlier jurists that were referred to by any of the five. [See preceding note, and Ortolan, Hist. de droit romain, § 501 note.]

⁴ [Cf. Gai. i. 8, as to Hadrian's regulation of the responsa prudentium where opinions differed; supra, p. 293.]

CHAPTER II

ANTEJUSTINIANIAN COLLECTIONS OF STATUTE AND JURISPRUDENCE

SECTION 79.—THE GREGORIAN AND HERMOGENIAN CODES ¹

THE first of these codes was a collection of imperial rescripts (with a few edicts, etc.) made by one Gregorianus ² at the very end of the third century, and probably at the instigation of Diocletian, though whether in East or West, critics are unable to decide. It is believed to have contained fifteen or sixteen books, subdivided into titles, arranged after the order of the Edict. Our acquaintance with its contents is derived principally from Alaric's Breviary (p. 371), and the Collatio, the Vatican Fragments, and the Consultatio (pp. 369-371), although there can be little doubt that most of the rescripts in Justinian's Code are taken from it without acknowledgment. The collection of Hermogenianus, also of rescripts, seems to have been a supplement to the earlier one, but, so far as appears, arranged only in titles. As the latest enactment in it is of the year 365, the probability is that it was published about that time. Both codes, although the work of private parties, received statutory recognition from Theodosius and Valentinian in their commission for preparation of a collection of edictal law; and from the language of Justinian in reference to them there is reason to believe that in the courts they were regarded as authoritative, even to the ignoring of all rescripts not embodied in them. They have been edited by the younger Haenel, in the Corpus Juris Romani Antejustiniani (Bonn, 1837); he has gathered about seventy constitutions that stood in the first, and about thirty that stood in the second. But how small a proportion this bears to their original contents is manifest when we take note of the 1200 or 1300 rescripts of Diocletian and Maximian alone which we find in the Justinianian Code, and which can hardly have been obtained from any other source than the Gregorian and Hermogenian collections. They seem to have been still a subject of exposition in the law-school of Beirout in the early years of Justinian; for comments upon them by Eudoxius and Patricius, who taught there, are preserved amongst the scholia of the Basilica (p. 403).³

¹ Huschke, "Ueber den Gregorianus u. Hermogenianus Codex," in the Z. f. RG. vol. vi (1867), p. 283 sq. ; Karlowa, Röm. RG. vol. i. pp. 940 sq., 959 sq. [Krüger, Quellen, § 34 ; also an article by Mommsen, in Z. d. Sav. Stift. 1889, vol. x. p. 345 sq. The date of the Hermogenian Code was probably not later than 324, though additions were subsequently made to it. A private collection of constitutions was made by Papirius Justus under Marcus Aurelius.]

² [Mommsen, l.c. thinks that his name was Gregorius.]

SECTION 80.—THE THEODOSIAN CODE AND [THEODOSIAN AND] POST-THEODOSIAN NOVELS¹

Three years after publication of the “Law of Citations” (§ 78) Theodosius nominated a commission of nine members to initiate the preparation of a body of law, which, if his scheme had been carried into execution, would have rendered that of Justinian unnecessary. In a constitution some ten years later he explains the motives that had actuated him,—that he saw with much concern the poverty-stricken condition of jurisprudence, and how very few men there were who, notwithstanding the prizes that awaited them, were able to make themselves familiar with the whole range of law; and that he attributed it very much to the multitude of books and large masses of statutes through which it was dispersed, and which it was next to impossible for any ordinary mortal to master. His scheme was eventually to compile one single code from materials derived alike from the writings of the jurists, the Gregorian and Hermogenian collections of rescripts, and the edictal laws from the time of Constantine downwards. His language leaves no doubt that it was his intention to have the general code very carefully prepared, so as to make it a complete exponent of the law in force, which should take the place of everything, statutory or jurisprudential, of an earlier date. The collection of edicts which he directed his commissioners to prepare, and which was to contain all that had not been displaced by later legislation, even though some of them might be obsolete by disuse, was to be the first step in the execution of his project. For some reason or other nothing followed upon this enactment; and in 435 a new commission of sixteen members was nominated to collect the edicts, but with nothing said in their instructions about anything ulterior. The Code was completed in three years, and published at Constantinople early in the year 438, with the declaration that it should take effect from 1st January following; and a copy was communicated to Valentinian, who ordained that it should come into force in the West from 12th January 439.

³ [These two codes, edited by Krüger on a new plan of arrangement, are contained in the 3rd vol. of Krüger, M. and S.’s Collectio lib. jur.]

¹ Karlowa, Röm. RG. i. pp. 943, 960 sq. [Krüger, Quellen, §§ 36, 37.]

The arrangement of the Theodosian Code is in sixteen books, subdivided into titles, in which the constitutions are placed in chronological order. They cover the whole field of law, private and public, civil and criminal, fiscal and municipal, military and ecclesiastical. The private law is in the first five books. Until the present century these were known only by the excerpts from them in the Lex Romana Visigothorum; whereas the last eight books were published in extenso by Dutillet as long ago as 1550, from a manuscript of the Code itself, and books 6, 7, and 8 by Cujas a few years later from another manuscript. It was upon the Code as thus restored that Jac. Gothofredus wrote his six folios of commentary,—a work of stupendous industry and erudition, which remains of the highest importance as illustrative of the public law and administration of the period. Between the years 1820 and 1840 a large number of constitutions belonging to the first five books were recovered by Amedeo Peyron, Baudi di Vesme, Cardinal Mai, Clossius, and Haenel, mostly from palimpsests in the University Library at Turin ; all these were incorporated in the edition of the Code contributed by Haenel to the (Bonn) *Corpus Jur. Rom. Antejust.*² There are still, however, many deficiencies ; Haenel estimates that about 450 of the constitutions of the first five books are lost.

The imperial edicts subsequent to the publication of the Theodosian Code got the name of Novels (novellae constitutiones). There were many such published in both divisions of the empire, and for a time communicated from one emperor to the other. The first recorded transmission—it was of a considerable batch of constitutions—was by Theodosius himself to Valentinian in the year 447 ; Marcian seems to have followed his example, as long as Valentinian was alive ; but Leo bestowed his favours only on Anthemius. It is probable that Valentinian sent his Novels to Theodosius and Marcian ; but it does not appear that the practice was followed by his successors, although a considerable number were published in the Western empire by Maximus, Majorian, Severus, and Anthemius. But, whether communicated or not, none of the Western Novels seem to have been adopted in the East, for there is not one of them in the Justinianian Code. They are preserved partly in manuscripts and partly (in abridgement) in the Breviary ; and are usually published (as in Haenel's edition) as an appendix to the Theodosian Code.

SECTION 81.—THE "COLLATIO," THE VATICAN FRAGMENTS, AND THE "CONSULTATIO"

These three were unofficial collections. (1) The Collatio Legum Mosaicarum et Romanarum, otherwise Lex Dei quam

² Codex Theodosianus. Ad LIV libror. manuscriptor. et prior. edition. fidem recognov. et annot. crit. instruxit Gust. Haenel, Bonn, 1842. Krüger, in 1868, 1869, and 1878, prepared a facsimile of the Turin palimpsests, which was published in the Transactions of the Royal Academy of Berlin in 1879. [Codicis Theodosiani fragmenta Taurinensia, ed. P. Krüger, 1880.] He promises a new edition of the Code for the 3rd vol. of his, Mommsen's, and Studemund's Collectio libror. juris Antejustiniani. [This 3rd vol., published in 1890, does not include the Theodosian Code.]

*praecepit Dominus ad Moysen*¹ is a parallel of divine and human law, the former drawn from the Pentateuch, and the latter from the writings of Gaius, Papinian, Paul, Ulpian, and Modestine, rescripts from the Gregorian and Hermogenian Codes, and one or two later general enactments. Its date is probably about the year 390, but its authorship is unknown.² It was first published by P. Pithou in 1573, and has been often re-edited; the most critical version being that of Blume (Bonn, 1833), and the latest that of Huschke in his Jurisprudentia Antejustiniana.³ (2) The Vatican Fragments were discovered by Mai in a palimpsest in the Vatican in 1820. What was the title of the book to which they originally belonged it is impossible to say; but it was evidently a book of practice, compiled in the Western empire, and of very considerable dimensions. The extant fragments deal with the law of sale, usufruct, dowries, donations, tutories, and processual agency. They are drawn from the writings of Papinian, Ulpian, and Paul, the two collections of rescripts, and a few general enactments, the latest dating from the year 372. The compilation may be of about the same antiquity as the Collatio; although Mommsen is disposed to ascribe it to the time of Constantine, and to assume that the enactment of 372 was introduced by a later hand. It is printed in Huschke's collection of Antejustinianian law; but the authoritative text is that of Mommsen, submitted, along with a facsimile of the MS., to the Berlin Academy in 1860.⁴ (3) The *Consultatio (veteris cujusdam jurisconsulti consultatio)*⁵

¹ See a paper by Huschke in the Z. f. gesch. RW. vol. xiii. (1846), p. 1 sq.; a second by Dirksen (published originally in 1846), in his Hinterlass. Schriften (Leipsic, 1871), vol. ii. p. 100 sq.; and a third by Rudorff, in the Abhandl. d. K. Akademie d. Wissensch. zu Berlin, 1868, p. 265 sq.

² [It has been attributed, though on no authentic evidence, to a churchman called Licinius Rufinus. See Huschke, Jurisprud. Antejust. p. 645.]

³ [5th ed. p. 647 sq. It has since been edited by Mommsen, in vol. iii. of Krüger, Mommsen, and Studemund's Collectio lib. jur. Antejust. For full information about it see Mommsen's preface.]

⁴ This text is reprinted in a small volume published at Bonn in 1861, and since then in Weidmann's collection of Latin and Greek authors. [A final recension by Mommsen is now published in 3rd vol. of Krüger, M. and S.'s Collectio, etc. For a full account of the work see his preface.]

⁵ See Rudorff, "Ueber d. Entstehung d. Consultatio," in the Z. f. gesch. RW. vol. xiii. (1846), p. 50 sq., and Huschke, in his preface to it in his Jurisprud.

was first published by Cujas in 1577 from a manuscript (now lost) that had come to him from his friend Antoine Loysel. It seems to be part of a collection of answers upon questions of law submitted for the opinion of counsel, and is of value for the fragments it contains from Paul's Sentences and the three Codes. It is thought to have been written in France in the end of the fifth or beginning of the sixth century.

SECTION 82.—THE ROMANO-BARBARIAN CODES

This title is usually applied to three collections compiled in Western Europe after it had thrown off the sovereignty of Rome. They are—

1. The Edictum Theodorici, compiled at the instance of Theodoric, king of the Ostrogoths, during his residence in Rome in the year 500. Its materials were drawn from the writings of the jurists (principally the Sentences of Paul), the Gregorian, Hermogenian, and Theodosian Codes, and the later Novels; all reduced into 154 sections, with no systematic arrangement, but touching upon all branches of the law, public and private, especially criminal law and procedure. It was professedly intended to apply to all Theodoric's subjects, both Goths and Romans; but it is pretty generally admitted that this idea cannot have been fully realised, and that in some matters, e.g. the law of the family, Gothic customs must still have continued to prevail.¹

2. The Lex Romana Visigothorum or Breviarium Alaricianum was a much more ambitious and important collection. It was compiled by commissioners appointed by Alaric II., king of the Western Goths, with approval of the bishops

Antejustiniana, p. 797 sq. [5th ed. p. 835. Also an edition by Krüger in 3rd vol. of Krüger, M. and S.'s Collectio.]

¹ See Savigny, Gesch. d. r. R. vol. ii. p. 172 sq.; Glöden, Das röm. Recht. im ostgothischen Reiche, Jena, 1843; Stobbe, Gesch. der deutsch. Rechtsquellen (Leipsic, 1860-64), vol. i. p. 94 sq. The text was first published in 1579, from a MS. of Pithou's, in an appendix to Cassiodorus's Variarum Libri XII, and is in most collections of the Leges Barbarorum; that in Pertz's Monum. Germ. Hist. Leges, vol. v. is by Blume. The last separate edition is that of Rhon, Comment. ad Edict. Theodorici, Halle, 1816.

and nobles, published at Aire in Gascony in the year 506, the original deposited in the treasury, and compared and certified copies sent down to all the greater officials of the kingdom, with instructions to allow no other law to be used within their jurisdictions on pain of death. In accordance with their commission the compilers selected their material partly from leges (statute law) and partly from jus (jurisprudential law); taking what they considered appropriate, without altering the text except in the way of excision of passages that were obsolete or purely historical. For the leges they utilised some 400 of the 3400 enactments (according to Haenel's estimate) of the Theodosian Code, and about 30 of the known 104 post-Theodosian Novels; for the jus,—the Institutes of Gaius, Paul's Sentences, the Gregorian and Hermogenian rescripts, and the first book of Papinian's Responses (a single sentence). All of these, except Gaius, were accompanied with an "interpretation," which resembles the interpretatio of the XII Tables in this respect,—that it is often not so much explanatory of the text as qualificative or corrective. Gaius is in an Epitome in two books, believed to have been only a reproduction of an abridgement already current, and dating from about the beginning of the fifth century. The Breviary exercised very considerable influence in Europe generally. This is traceable, for example, in the lex Salica, in the Capitularies, and in the collections of styles of the early middle age; and there is no question that, until the rise of the Bologna school in the twelfth century, it was from it, rather than from the books of Justinian, that Western Europe acquired its scanty knowledge of Roman law.²

3. The Lex Romana Burgundionum, formerly, owing to a mistake of a transcriber, called Papianus. This is the collection which King Gundobald, in publishing in 501 his code of native law (lex Burgundionum or Gundobada), had promised should be prepared for the use of his Roman subjects. Its date, and even whether it was promulgated by him or his son Sigismund, are uncertain: owing to the incorporation in it of certain passages bearing a close resemblance to some of the "interpretations" in the Breviary, many jurists think it must be of later date than 506; but it is quite possible that the interpretations in question were borrowed by the compilers of both collections from an earlier source. The Romano-Burgundian Code deals with private law, criminal law, and judicial procedure, distributed through forty-seven titles, and arranged very much after the order of the Gundobada, from which it has a few extracts. Its statutory Roman sources are the same as those of the Breviary; the jurisprudential authorities referred to are Gaius and Paul, the latter in his Sentences, and the former (only three times altogether) in some other book than his Institutes. In form it is not, like the Breviary or the Justinianian Digest and Code, a collection of extracts, but a consecutive and homogeneous compilation, something between a text-book and a code, with only occasional quotation of the writer's authorities in this way—"secundum legem Theodosiani, lib. ix.," "secundum legem Novellam," "secundum Pauli sententiam," etc.³

² See Savigny, op. cit. vol. ii. p. 37 sq.; Haenel's Prolegomena; Stobbe, vol. i. p. 65 sq.; Karlowa, Röm. RG. vol. i. p. 976 sq. The Breviary was first published in extenso by Sichard (Basle, 1528); but the authoritative edition is that of Haenel,—Lex Rom. Visigothorum ad LXXVI libror. manuscriptor. fidem recognovit . . . Gust. Haenel, Berlin, 1849. [Krüger, Quellen, § 40. It was first styled Breviarium by the writers of the sixteenth century.]

SECTION 83.—ORIENTAL COLLECTIONS

A few years ago there was discovered in the convent on Mount Sinai a bundle of papyrus leaves which seemed to contain part of a treatise on Graeco-Roman law. Their finder, Dr. Bernardakis, made a transcript, which he forwarded to Dareste in Paris, by whom they were published in 1880. Since then they have been re-edited by Zachariae v. Lingenthal, Alibrandi, and Krüger; and may possibly be still further elucidated after a revision and, if practicable, photographic reproduction of the originals. They have proved to be parts of a commentary on Ulpianus ad Sabinum, written after the Theodosian Code, but before that of Justinian, and therefore between 439 and 529.¹ The scholiast, who seems to have intended his book rather for educational than practical purposes, and may have been of the school of Beirout, makes use not only of the Theodosian, but also of the Gregorian and Hermogenian Codes, drawing frequently upon the last, and, as Krüger observes, creating the impression that it must have been of greater proportions than is usually supposed; and amongst the jurists to whom he refers are Marcian, Florentine, Paul, and Modestine. The papyri have thrown new light upon a few questions of historical jurisprudence, and it is possible that still more may be derived from them.²

³ See preface to Barkow, Lex Romana Burgundionum, Greifswald, 1826; Savigny, vol. ii. p. 9 sq., and vol. vii. (addition by Merkel), p. 30 sq.; Blume, "Ueber den burgundischen Papianus," in Bekker and Muther's Jahrb. des gem. Rechts, vol. ii. (1858), p. 197 sq.; Karlowa, Röm. RG. vol. i. p. 983 sq. The first edition was by Cujas in 1566; the best is that of Blume, in Pertz's Monum. Germ. Hist. Leges, vol. iii. (1863), p. 505; the handiest that of Barkow (as above) [edited by de Salis, in Monum. Germ. Hist., Legum Sectio I. (1892).]

Under the title of Leges Constantini Theodosii et Leonis there are extant, in Syrian, Arabic, and Armenian, in the British Museum, the Bodleian, and the National and Royal libraries of Paris, Berlin, and St. Petersburg, manuscripts of a collection of Syro-Roman law, dating from about the year 476, which was recently published by Bruns and Sachau under the title of Syrisch-Römisches Rechtsbuch.³ It is the opinion of Bruns that all the versions are from a Greek original of which no trace survives, but which he thinks must have been com-

¹ [Baron says between 440-450 A.D. See Centralblatt, vii. p. 58.]

² See Dareste, in the Nouv. Rev. Hist. vol. iv. (1880), p. 648 sq.; Alibrandi, in the Studi e documenti di storia e diritto, vol. iii. (1882), p. 30 sq.; Krüger in the Z. d. Sav. Stift. (R.A.), vol. iv. (1883), p. 1 sq.; Karlowa, Röm. RG. vol. i. p. 985 sq. [These fragments, inter alia, throw some light on the law of guardianship. They are printed in Huschke's Jurisprud. Antejust. 5th ed. p. 815 sq., and (edited by Krüger) in the Collectio lib. Antejust. 3rd vol. p. 269 sq.]

³ Syrisch-Römisches Rechtsbuch aus dem fünften Jahrhundert . . . herausgegeben, übersetzt, u. erläutert von Dr. K. G. Bruns u. Dr. E. Sachau, Leipsic, 1880. See review by Bluntchli, in the Krit. VJS. f. Rechtswissensch. N.F. vol. iii. (1880), p. 548 sq.; also Karlowa, Röm. RG. vol. i. p. 987 sq. A Syrian version, from a British Museum MS., had been published, with a Latin translation, by the Dutch theologian and orientalist, Dr. Land, in his Anecdota Syriaca (Leyden, 1862); but as, from want of acquaintance with law, it was not up to the mark, the edition of Bruns and Sachau was undertaken at the instigation and cost of the Berlin Academy. Some particulars are given by von Hube, in the Z. d. Sav. Stift. (R.A.), vol. iii. p. 17 sq., of a translation of the Law Book into Georgian in the seventeenth century, and from that into Russian in 1813 and 1823. [The work seems to have been compiled by an ecclesiastic of the church of Syria, see Esmein, Mélanges, p. 403 sq.]

piled in Syria itself. As a repertory of Roman law it is of little or no value; interesting no doubt as showing how, notwithstanding all the efforts of legislation, the law might become corrupted and degraded in the provinces by commixture with native custom, and to some extent by the ignorance of the jurists; but adding scarcely a single iota to our knowledge of pure Roman doctrine.⁴

⁴ [It throws some light upon the law of sale (e.g. the use of arrae), see Esmein, op. cit. p. 413.]

CHAPTER III

THE JUSTINIANIAN LAW

SECTION 84.—JUSTINIAN'S COLLECTIONS AND HIS OWN LEGISLATION

“FLAVIUS ANICIUS JUSTINIANUS, surnamed the Great, the most famous of all the emperors of the Eastern Roman empire, was by birth a barbarian, native of a place called Tauresium in the district of Dardania, a region of Illyricum, and was born, most probably, on May 11, 483. His family has been variously conjectured, on the strength of the proper names which its members are stated to have borne, to have been Teutonic or Slavonic. The latter seems the more probable view. His own name was originally Uprauda. Justinianus was a Roman name which he took from his uncle Justin who adopted him, and to whom his advancement in life was due. Of his early life we know nothing except that he came to Constantinople while still a young man, and received there an excellent education. Doubtless he knew Latin before Greek; it is alleged that he always spoke Greek with a barbarian accent. When Justin ascended the throne in 518 A.D. Justinian became at once a person of the first consequence, guiding, especially in church matters, the policy of his aged, childless, and ignorant uncle, receiving high rank and office at his hands, and soon coming to be regarded as his destined successor. On Justin's death in 527, having been a few months earlier associated with him as joint-emperor, he succeeded without opposition to the throne.”¹

¹ From Professor Bryce's article “Justinian” in the Encyclopaedia Britannica,

Of his great projects at home and abroad none was attended with so much success as his scheme for making an authoritative collection of the law. Ambitious to carry out a reform more complete even than that which Theodosius had planned but failed to execute (p. 368) he took the first step towards it little more than six months after the death of his uncle, in the appointment of a commission to prepare a collection of the statute law. It was published in April 529; and in rapid succession there followed his Fifty Decisions (529-532), his Institutes (21st November 533), his Digest of excerpts from the writings of the jurists (16th December 533), and the revised edition of his Code, in which he incorporated his own legislation down to date (16th November 534). From that time until his death in 565 there followed a series of Novels (novellae constitutiones), which were never officially collected, and of which probably many have been lost.²

The first intimation of his scheme was contained in a constitution addressed to the senate, of date 13th February 528.³ There is reason for believing that he had already planned the compilation of all the collections we now possess, and he may even have had in view an eventual general codification in the modern sense of the word. But this constitution contained no hint of anything beyond a collection of statute law (leges),—of all that was worth preserving in the Gregorian, Hermogenian, and Theodosian Codes, and the later enactments of his imperial predecessors. He informed the senate that for its compilation he had nominated a commission of ten members, mostly ministers of state, but including Theophilus, who was

vol. xiii. p. 792 sq. [of the 9th edition]; to which, and to another article with the same title in the third volume of Smith's Dictionary of Christian Biography, from the pen of the same learned writer, the reader is referred for an account of the emperor's administration of the empire, his ecclesiastical policy, and his wars and foreign policy generally. For the present those who would go more fully into his history must consult the pages of Gibbon. [In an article in the English Historical Review for October 1887, pp. 657-686, Mr. Bryce has shown that a life of Justinian attributed to a clerical writer called Theophilus, asserted to have been Justinian's preceptor, from which a number of biographical details in current circulation about him have come, is without authenticity.]

² [On the general history of Justinian's codification, see Krüger, Quellen, §§ 42-48, and § 53 sq.]

³ Const. "Haec quae necessario," which forms the 1st preface to the Code.

a professor at Constantinople, and two barristers of distinction. They were instructed to reject all enactments that had gone into disuse and all that they considered of no practical value; and were authorised to abridge those they accepted, and make such alterations in their language as they considered necessary or expedient. The work was completed in little more than a year, and officially ratified, under the name of Justinianus Codex, by a constitution of 7th April 529, addressed to Menna, one of the praetorian prefects.⁴ The emperor therein declared that the new collection was in future to be regarded as the sole repertory of statute law throughout the empire, reference to the earlier collections being expressly prohibited; and that those of its provisions that had originally been addressed to individuals, and that hitherto had ranked only as rescripts, were now to be received with all the authority of general enactments (leges edictales). As for the statutory enactments of the republic and the senatusconsults of the early empire, these had long ceased to be referred to as authoritative monuments of legislation; they were recognised only in the form in which they had been embodied in the writings of the jurisconsults, and were regarded as part of the jus or jurisprudential law rather than of the leges or statute law.

It was to this jurisprudential law (vetus jus) that Justinian turned his attention in the next place. Notwithstanding the limitation imposed by the Valentinian "Law of Citations" (§ 76), in bulk it was excessive and in quality unequal, while in certainty it left much to be desired; and it therefore seemed to the emperor expedient that it should be thoroughly sifted and reduced into more manageable compass. In this scheme he was seconded, if not prompted, by Tribonian, who had become Quaestor of the Royal Palace, and whose name will ever be associated with Justinian's as that of the master-spirit of the latter's law-reforms. There can be little doubt that Tribonian was the real author of the constitution, addressed to himself,⁵ in which the lines were laid down upon which the new collection was to be constructed. Under the name of ⁴ Const. "Summa rei publicae,"—the 2nd preface to the Code.

⁵ Const. "Deo auctore" of 15th December 530, in the preface to the Digest, and again in Cod. i. 17, 1.

Digesta or Pandectae, divided into fifty books, each subdivided into titles, and arranged generally after the order of topics in the Julian consolidation of the Edict, it was to embody such a selection of extracts from the writings of those of the old jurists whose authority had been recognised by earlier sovereigns⁶ as would afford an exposition of so much of the law still in observance as had not been already promulgated in the recently completed collection of statutes. To aid him in the execution of the work Tribonian was empowered to appoint such coadjutors as he thought fit. While he and they were required on the one hand, in testimony of their strict adherence to the general design, to insert at the head of each extract the name of its author and the particular treatise of his from which it was taken, they had on the other hand a very large discretion in their choice of materials and in their mode of dealing with them. The Valentinian law had forbidden any reference to the notes of Ulpian and Paul upon the writings of Papinian, and had declared that, where there was difference of opinion amongst the jurists, that of the latter (unless there was a majority against him) was to prevail; but the compilers of the Digest were relieved from any such restrictions and authorised to use their own judgment as to which of two or more conflicting dicta should be preferred. Furthermore, they were empowered to delete superfluities and redundancies, to alter expressions, and even to interpolate a word or phrase where it was deemed expedient; for the design of the emperor was to publish, not a historical view of the law, but an authoritative statement of it as it then stood, which should be beyond controversy and everywhere be received as definitive. ✓

Tribonian associated with himself sixteen colleagues, of whom four were law-professors, and eleven were members of the bar. Even before they had commenced their labours Tribonian had discovered that there were moot points in the law which could be satisfactorily settled only by imperial authority; and as the work progressed more and more of them became apparent. All controversy in regard to them was set at rest by a series of enactments of Justinian's in the years 529-532, which got the name of "the Fifty Decisions" (Quinquaginta Decisiones),⁷ and which there is some reason for supposing formed a collection by themselves before their incorporation in the second edition of the Code.⁸

⁶ "Antiquorum prudentium, quibus auctoritatem conscribendarum interpretandarumque legum sacratissimi Principes praeberunt" (Const. cit. § 4). This description included not only those who had enjoyed the jus respondendi ex auctoritate principis (supra, § 59), but also those not so privileged (such as Gaius), whose writings enjoyed imperial sanction under the "Law of Citations" (§ 76).

When the Digest was nearing its completion another work was taken in hand, which had been foreshadowed in the constitution "Deo auctore."⁹ This was the little volume so well known under the name of Justinian's Institutes (Justiniani Institutiones),—an elementary treatise for the use of students. Its preparation was entrusted to Tribonian, Theophilus, and Dorotheus, but seems to have been really accomplished by the two last, who were professors in Constantinople and Beirout respectively.¹⁰ Its foundation, according to the emperor's instructions, was the Institutes of Gaius, which had long been the introductory text-book in the law-schools. In its preparation its compilers had a much freer hand than in the Digest. They were enjoined to expunge everything that was antiquated, and to introduce whatever in their judgment was necessary to make the little book a faithful though elementary exposition of Justinianian law. In this way the detailed accounts in Gaius of institutions that before the time of Justinian had gone out of date, all disappeared, a brief reference to them being introduced only here and there; some rules and definitions were incorporated from the Libri VII. rerum quotidianarum of Gaius, and the elementary works of Marcian, Ulpian, Florentine, and other classical jurists; and a great body of new matter was inserted displaying the amendments of the latter emperors, among which special prominence was given to the legislation

⁷ "Nostras constitutiones, per quas, suggerente nobis Triboniano, . . . antiqui juris altercationes placavimus" (Just. Inst. i. 5, § 3).

⁸ "Sicut libro L constitutionum invenies:" in the Turin Gloss on the Institutes, in Savigny, Gesch. d. r. R. vol. ii. p. 452.

⁹ Const. cit. § 11. See also Const. "Tanta," § 11 (in pref. to Dig. and in Cod. i. 17, 2), and proem. Inst.

¹⁰ [Attempts have been made, from observation of style, etc. to distinguish the parts composed by Theophilus from those by Dorotheus. See Huschke, in the preface to his edition of the Institutes, 1868, p. vi. sq.]

of Justinian himself. The way in which this was done is objectionable, and mars the work as a whole; for in form the emperor is the relator; and it is unpleasant to have him parading so frequently his own wisdom, humanity, and beneficence, and drawing comparisons between himself and his predecessors, all to his own advantage.

The Institutes were published on the 21st November 533; the Digest or Pandects (Digesta, Pandectae) followed on the 16th December of the same year. Three constitutions of that date announced its completion, — one, known as “Tanta,” ratifying the work, which was addressed to the senate and the world; another, known as “Δέδωκεν,” which was substantially a Greek version of the first; and the third, known as “Omnem rei publicae,” addressed specially to the professors in the law-schools.¹¹ Three years had sufficed to reduce the mass of the old jurisprudence (jus vetus) to about one-twentieth of its bulk. This had been facilitated by a division of labour; the commissioners having formed themselves into three sections, to each of which were confided all the books of a particular class,—those bearing on the jus civile to the first, those bearing on the jus honorarium to the second, and those not properly rangeable under either of those heads to the third.¹² The matter selected by those three sections seems then to have been submitted either to the whole commission or an editorial committee, at whose hands it was distributed under appropriate rubrics, and submitted to a second revision, in which manifest superfluities were expunged,¹³ contrarieties removed,¹⁴ and expressions varied or words interpolated so as to adapt the doctrine to the altered

¹¹ All three are printed in the preface to the Digest; the “Tanta” also in Cod. i. 17, 2.

¹² It was Blume that, from internal evidence, discovered the modus operandi of the commissioners, which explains the otherwise confusing arrangement of the extracts in the several titles. His paper is in the Z. f. gesch. RW. vol. iv. (1820), p. 257 sq. An account of the results at which he arrived will be found in Roby, Introduction, p. xlv. sq.

¹³ All this was in accordance with the instructions contained in Const. “Deo auctore,” §§ 7-10.

¹⁴ Justinian, in Const. “Tanta,” § 15, denies that any contradictions are to be found in the Digest. But there are not a few passages in it which not all the skill of the civilians has yet been able to reconcile.

state of the law.¹⁵ The whole was then arranged in seven parts and fifty books. The division into seven parts was made apparently in view of a readjustment of the course of study in the schools;¹⁶ that into books was in compliance with the emperor's instructions in the "Deo auctore," and was not accomplished without some humouring of the subject-matter.¹⁷ Each book, with the exception of the three on legacies, contains a greater or smaller number of rubricated titles; these again contain each a varying number of laws or fragments, some of no more than a word or two that serve as a connecting-link between what precedes and follows, others filling two or three pages; and all but the shortest of those fragments are subdivided into paragraphs.¹⁸ Each law, or rather fragment, is an excerpt from some treatise of an earlier jurist; and this, in compliance with Justinian's instructions, is invariably quoted at the commencement.¹⁹ The nature of the books laid under contribution has been indicated in previous sections (§§ 61-64) in commenting on the literary activity of the jurists of the earlier empire. Their number was very considerable, but all from the pens of thirty-nine writers. The earliest is Quintus Mucius Scaevola (p. 248),

¹⁵ Such alterations and interpolations are often spoken of as "Tribonian's emblems" (emblemata Triboniani). It is only in regard to a very few of the Digest extracts that we have the means of judging how far the text was manipulated; but a comparison of some of these with the presumably original versions of them preserved in the Vatican Fragments and elsewhere is given by Mr. Roby in his Introduction, chapter v., and is very instructive. [Considerable light has been thrown upon Tribonian's interpolations by recent inquiries, and particularly by Lenel (infra, n. 21); Gradenwitz, Interpolationen in den Pandekten, Z. d. Sav. Stift. (R.A.) 1885, vol. vi. p. 56 sq.; vol. vii. p. 45 sq.; and Eisele, Z. d. Sav. Stift. (R.A.) 1886, vol. vii. p. 15 sq.; 1889, vol. x. p. 296 sq.; 1890, vol. xi. p. 1 sq.; 1892, vol. xiii. p. 118 sq.; 1897, vol. xviii. p. 1 sq.]

¹⁶ On this division, see Justinian himself in Const. "Tanta" and "Δέδωκεν," §§ 2-8; Eyssenhardt, Justinians Digesten nach Drittheilen, Parties, Büchern, Titeln, u. Fragmenten (Leipsic, 1845), p. 44 sq.; Roby, Introd. p. xxix. sq.

¹⁷ In order to eke out the fifty, the matter of legacies had to be spread over three books (xxx.-xxxii.), often called the 1st, 2nd, and 3rd books de legatis, none of them subdivided into titles.

¹⁸ This explains the now usual method of citation: Dig. xi. 7, fr. 8, § 3, or sometimes fr. 8, § 3, Dig. de religiosis (xi. 7). [As to the various methods of citation, see Roby, Introduction, chap. 18. The numeration of fragments and paragraphs was much later than Justinian.]

¹⁹ As, in the fragment referred to in last note,—"Ulpianus, libro xxv. ad Edictum."

not to be confounded with Q. Cervidius Scaevola (p. 303); he is the only jurist of the republic from whose works any direct extract is preserved.²⁰ The latest are Hermogenian and Arcadius Charisius (p. 307), who are supposed to have flourished about the middle of the fourth century after Christ. The most largely utilised is Ulpian; he furnishes about one-third of the whole Digest, the greater part being from his Commentary on the Edict. Paul supplies about one-sixth of the whole; and next in importance, so far as the bulk of their contributions is concerned, come Papinian, Julian, Pomponius, Q. Cervidius Scaevola, Gaius, and Modestine.²¹

The order of sequence of the books and titles in the Digest is at the first sight somewhat incomprehensible, and from a modern point of view anything but satisfactory. It is not a systematic exposition either of the rights of individuals or of the law by which they were regulated, but rather of the magisterial and judicial measures employed for their protection and vindication. The method is substantially that adopted by Julian in his consolidation of the Edict (p. 289). This was in accordance with Justinian's instructions; and for those for whom his collection was destined was not without its advantages. But it is at first a little perplexing to a modern to find (for example) the matter of pacts or agreements dealt with in the second book, real and consensual contracts in books 12-19, but stipulations postponed to the forty-fifth; to find property dealt with in the sixth book, and its exposition resumed in the forty-first; to see the disabilities of minors explained in the fourth book, but guardianship introduced only in the twenty-sixth and twenty-seventh. All this, however, has its historical explanation.²² The order of sequence of the fragments in the individual titles was also somewhat perplexing until the key was supplied by Blume (supra, p. 381). In many titles the ground seems to be gone over a second and often a third time. One is disposed to think that this might to a great extent have been avoided had the final revision been more deliberate. But expedition was one of the things at which Tribonian aimed; as witness the allowance of no more than a fortnight between the publication of this great body of law and its coming into force all over the empire. So, to save time, the matter appropriate to any particular title, as brought up by each of the three sections into which the commission had been divided, as a rule was thrown into it as it stood, the largest contribution usually getting precedence; the revisers were content to leave mere repetitions undisturbed, and to expunge only what was irrelevant or contradictory. In the title locati (Dig. xix. 2), for example, there are in all 62 fragments. The first 38, with four or five exceptions, constitute what is called the Sabinian group,—the contribution of the section that dealt with works on the jus civile; fragments 39-52 constitute the so-called Edictal group, contributed by the section entrusted with the treatises on the jus honorarium; fragments 53-56 form the so-called Papinian group,—the contribution of the third section; while the remainder mostly belong to what recent editors regard as an appendix to all three. The same mode of treatment is observable all through the Digest, although every now and then may be noticed the interpolation of an Edictal or Papinianian fragment in the middle of a series of Sabinianian ones, or vice versa, when it is necessary as a qualification of or an addition to what precedes.²³

²⁰ [There is an extract, but probably taken at second hand, from Aelius Gallus in D, l. 16, fr. 157. See Roby, Introduction, p. cxiii.; supra, p. 248.]

²¹ In Hommel's Palingenesia libror. juris veterum (8 vols., Leipsic, 1767) the extracts from each author are collected, re-arranged according to the books of his from which they were taken, and printed consecutively; and the order given above is determined by the number of pages of the Palingenesia which the contributions of each of those jurists occupy. [In 1888-89 was published at Leipsic the Palingenesia juris civilis of O. Lenel—a magnificent work in two volumes quarto, forming a compendium of texts of the ante-Justinianian jurists, in their natural order, as handed down to us fragmentarily in the Digest and other sources, with notes on the probable interpolations by the Digest compilers. It thus forms a restoration, so far as possible, of the works of each jurist. It excludes, however, Gaius' Institutes, Paul's Sentences, and Ulpian's Rules.]

²² See Roby, Introduction, pp. xxxi.-xlvi. He observes (p. xxxiii.): "The Digest is a handbook for practitioners, not a systematic treatise for students. It treats of who are judges, who are plaintiffs, and how they can get defendants into court, what matters are actionable, the effect of a judgment and the means of enforcing it, and then other remedies, such as injunctions and recognisances" (i.e. interdicts and praetorian stipulations). "Matter necessary for the explanation of the various actions is prefixed, often in separate titles, and cognate matter is sometimes appended in other titles." (E.g. the law of espousals, marriage, dowries, dotal settlements, and the matrimonial relation generally, is grouped round the discussion of the actio rei uxoriae). "It is the insertion of these prefatory and explanatory titles and occasional digressions which often prevents a student from catching the main lines of the arrangement."

Soon after the publication of the Digest, Justinian commissioned Tribonian, Dorotheus, and two or three others to prepare a new edition of the Code of statute-law of 529. This had become necessary in consequence of the numerous amendments introduced by the emperor during the six years he had filled the throne. The terms of the commission are not preserved, but the scope of it is indicated in the constitution "Cordi nobis" of 16th November 534,²⁴ whereby the new collection was ratified under the name of Codex Justinianus repetitae praelectionis. This is the edition that we now possess. Owing to the entire disappearance of all copies of the earlier one it is impossible to say with certainty whether or not they proceeded on the same lines; but from the emphasis that the emperor, in the constitution referred to, puts on the phrase repetita praelectio, it is more than probable that the only changes consisted in the deletion of what had ceased to be law,²⁵ and the introduction of some four hundred enactments of Justinian himself, including the Quinquaginta Decisiones (p. 380). The arrangement follows that of the Edict rather more closely than does the Digest. The division is into twelve books, whose relation to the Digest is roughly this:—

Part	i. of Digest	=	Books 1, 2 of Code.
"	ii. "	=	Book 3 "
"	iii. "	=	" 4 "
"	iv. "	=	" 5 "
"	v. "	=	" 6 "
"	vi. "	=	" 7 "
"	vii. "	=	Books 8-12 "

The Code, however, especially in Books 1 and 9-12, contains much in reference to political, ecclesiastical, criminal, municipal, fiscal, and military institutions, that has no counterpart in the ²³ See supra, note 12.

²⁴ It is addressed to the senate, and will be found in the preface to the Code.

²⁵ Either by accident or design one or two enactments were deleted which are founded on in the Institutes; for example, in ii. 10, § 11, and ii. 20, § 27. [As to the second of these Institutional passages, see Cod. vi. 48. We get an account of the constitution from the Scholia to the Basilica and some other sources.]

Digest. Each book is subdivided into titles, much more numerous than in the jurisprudential collection; and each title contains a greater or smaller number of laws (leges), the longer ones being subdivided into paragraphs.²⁶ In compliance with Justinian's instructions the laws in the titles are arranged chronologically; the name of the emperor from whom each proceeded, and the body or individual to whom it was addressed, are mentioned at the head of it (inscriptio), and the place and time of its issue (if known) at the end (subscriptio). The collection contains between 4600 and 4700 enactments, of which more than the half were originally rescripts. The latter have manifestly been much abridged; and comparison with corresponding versions in the Theodosian Code shows that even the constitutions of Constantine and Theodosius have often been considerably curtailed. The earliest in the collection is a rescript of Hadrian's and the latest a law of Justinian's dated about a fortnight before the Code was published. There are only 23 prior to the time of Septimius Severus. He and his son Caracalla are responsible for about 190, Caracalla alone for nearly 250, Alexander Severus for about 450, Gordian III. for more than 270, Diocletian and Maximinian for more than 1200, Constantine for over 200, Valentinian II., Theodosius I., and Arcadius for about the same number, Valentinian II. alone for nearly 170, Arcadius for about 180, Theodosius II. for about 190, and Justinian for about 400.²⁷

The name of Novels (novellae constitutiones post Codicem) is given to the enactments of Justinian subsequent to the publication of the Code. They are mostly in Greek, some in both Greek and Latin, and a very small number of peculiarly local interest in Latin alone. The greater number relate to public and ecclesiastical affairs; but some of those dealing with the private law, especially those reforming the law of intestate succession, are of the very highest importance. They do not seem ever to have been officially collected, and only about 170 have been preserved.²⁸

²⁶ Hence the usual mode of citation,—Cod. vi. 23, l. 21, § 5, or sometimes l. 21, § 5, C. de testament (vi. 23). [See supra, p. 382, n. 18.]

²⁷ There are chronological lists in Haenel's Corp. leg. ab imperatorib. Rom. ante Justinianum latorum (Leipsic, 1857), and in an appendix to Krüger's edition of the Code.

²⁸ See Biener's Geschichte der Novellen Justinians, Berlin, 1824. A complete

Taking his enactments in the Code and his Novels together, we have of Justinian's own legislation not far short of six hundred constitutions. Diocletian's contributions to the Code are more than twice as numerous, but most of them professed to be nothing more than short declaratory statements of pre-existing law; whereas Justinian's, apart from his Fifty Decisions, were mostly reformatory enactments, many of those in the Novels as long as an average Act of Parliament, and dealing with diverse matters under the same rubric. They cover the whole field of law, public and private, civil and criminal, secular and ecclesiastical. It cannot be said that they afford pleasant reading; they are so disfigured by redundancy of language, involved periods, and nauseous self-glorification. But it is undeniable that several of those dealing with the private law embody reforms of great moment and of most salutary tendency. The emperor sometimes loved to pose as the champion of the simplicity and evenhandedness of the early law (antiquum statum renovantes sancimus, etc.), at others to denounce it for its subtleties (antiquae subtilitatis ludibrium expellentes); sometimes he allowed himself to be influenced by his own extreme asceticism, and now and again we detect traces of subservience to the imperious will of his consort; but in the main his legislation was dictated by what he was pleased to call humanitas so far as the law of persons was concerned, and by naturalis ratio and public utility so far as concerned that of things. The result was the eradication of almost every trace of the old jus Quiritium, and the substitution for it, under the name of jus Romanum, of that cosmopolitan body of law which has contributed so largely to almost every modern system.

SECTION 85.—CHANGES IN THE LAW OF THE FAMILY

With the Christian emperors the last traces disappeared of the old conception of the familia as an aggregate of persons and estate subject absolutely to the power and dominion of its head. Manus, the power in a husband over his wife and her account of the sources from which those extant have been obtained may be expected in the Prolegomena to Schoell's edition of the Novels now in course of publication. [This has since been published, see infra, p. 411, n. 10.]

belongings, was a thing of the past; they stood now on a footing of equality before the law; perhaps it might be more accurate to say, at least with reference to the Justinianian legislation, that the wife was the more privileged of the two in respect both of the protection and indulgence the law accorded her. With manus the old confarreation and coemption had ceased, marriage needing nothing more than simple interchange of consent,¹ except as between persons of rank or when the intention was to legitimate previous issue; in the latter case a written marriage settlement was required,² and in the former either such a settlement, or a marriage in church before the bishop and at least three clerical witnesses, who granted and signed a certificate of the completed union.³ Second marriage, which the Julian and Papia-Poppaeian law enjoined upon widows under fifty, was discountenanced by Theodosius and his successors, and latterly entailed forfeiture of the lucra nuptialia of the first, in favour of the children who were the issue of it.⁴ The legislation of the Christian emperors on the subject of divorce, largely contributed to by Justinian in his Novels, has already (p. 356) been referred to.⁵ In regard to the dos many new provisions were introduced, principally for curtailing the husband's power of dealing with it while the marriage lasted, enlarging the right of the wife and her heirs in respect of it, and simplifying the means of recovering it from the husband or his heirs when the marriage was dissolved.⁶ Between the time of Constantine and that of Theodosius and Valentinian it had become the practice for a man to make a settlement on his intended wife of a provision which was to remain his property (but without the power of alienation) during the marriage, but to pass to her on his predecease; it got the name of donatio ante nuptias, or sometimes, as being a sort of return for the dos, antipherna. The earliest legislation about it was by the last-

¹ Cod. v. 4, 22; Nov. cxvii. cap. 4. [But see supra, p. 323; cf. Girard, p. 148.]

² Just. in Cod. v. 27, 10, pr.

³ Just. in Nov. cxvii. capp. 4, 6. [An instrumentum dotale seems to have been here also necessary.]

⁴ Grat. Valent. and Theod. in Cod. v. 9, l. 3; Leo and Anthem. cod. tit. l. 6; Just. cod. tit. l. 10, and in Nov. xxii. capp. 21-28.

⁵ Theod. and Valent. in Cod. v. 17, 8; Justinian, cod. tit. ll. 10-12, and Novels xxii. cxvii. cxxvii. and cxxxiv.

⁶ See Just. Cod. v. 12, ll. 29-31; v. 13, l. un.

mentioned emperors; Zeno and Justin followed suit; and Justinian, in Code and Novels, published five or six enactments for its regulation. The general result was that wherever a dos was given or promised on the part of the wife, there a donatio was to be constituted on the part of the husband; that if one was increased during the marriage, a corresponding increase was to be made to the other; that it might be constituted after the marriage without infringing the rule prohibiting donations between husband and wife (which caused Justinian to change its name to donatio propter nuptias); that the wife might demand its transfer to her (as she could that of the dos) on her husband's insolvency, but under obligation to apply its income to the maintenance of the family; and that, on the dissolution of the marriage by her husband's death or by a divorce for which he was in fault, she had ample remedies for reducing it into possession.⁷

The change in the complexion of the relations between husband and wife under the Christian emperors, however, was insignificant when compared with that which had overtaken the relation between parent and child. Justinian in his Institutes reproduces the boast of Gaius that nowhere else had a father such power over his children as was exercised by a Roman paterfamilias.⁸ True it is that the patria potestas in name still held a prominent place in the Justinianian collections; but it had been shorn of most of the prerogatives that had characterised it during the republic. To expose a new-born child was forbidden under penalties.⁹ To take the life of a grown-up one—unless it was a daughter slain with her paramour in the act of adultery¹⁰—was murder;¹¹ for the domestic tribunal, with the judicial power of life and death in the paterfamilias at its head, had long disappeared. For the same reason a parent could no longer sell his child as a slave; at least he could do so only when the child was an infant, and he in such extreme poverty as to be unable to support it.¹² Even the right to make a noxal surrender of his son to a

⁷ See Inst. ii. 7, § 3, and tit. Cod. de don. ante nupt. (v. 3).

⁸ Inst. i. 9, § 2 [supra, p. 28 n.].

⁹ Valent. Val. and Grat. in Cod. viii. 51, l. 2; Just. eod. tit. l. 3.

¹⁰ Dig. xlviii. 5, fr. 20, fr. 22, §§ 2, 4.

¹¹ Const. in Cod. ix. 17, l. un.

¹² Const. in Cod. iv. 43, 2. [The text says filium filiamve sanguinolentos.]

party who had suffered from the latter's delict had silently become obsolete,—so greatly had altered sentiment, in sympathy with legislation, curtailed the power of the paterfamilias over those in his potestas.¹³ All that remained of it in the latest Justinianian law was no more than is sanctioned in most modern systems as natural emanations of the paternal relationship,—the rights of moderate chastisement for offence, of testamentary nomination of guardians, of giving a filiusfamilias in adoption, of pupillary substitution (enlarged by Justinian), and of withholding consent from the marriage of a child (subject to magisterial intervention if done unreasonably).¹⁴ How the right of the paterfamilias over the earnings and acquisitions of his children was modified by the recognition of the peculium castrense vel quasi has been shown in a previous section (p. 322). But the modification was carried to such an extent by the Christian emperors as finally to negative the father's ownership altogether, except as regarded acquisitions that were the outcome of funds advanced by him to his filiusfamilias for his separate use (peculium profecticium).¹⁵ Of some of the child's acquisitions his father had, down to the time of Justinian, the life-interest and right of administration; but by his legislation even these might be excluded at the pleasure of the persons from whom the acquisitions had been derived.¹⁶ By the classical law, the father's radical right in his son's peculium castrense revived on the latter's death; for if he died intestate the former appropriated it, not as his son's heir, but as an owner whose powers as such had been merely temporarily suspended.¹⁷ But, by one of the chapters in the famous Novel on the law of intestate succession, even this prerogative of the paterfamilias was abolished, and all a child's belongings except his peculium profecticium recognised as his own in death as ¹³ Inst. iv. 8, § 7.

¹⁴ [See Dig. xxiii. 2, 19.]

¹⁵ Inst. ii. 9, § 1; Cod. vi. 61, 6.

¹⁶ Nov. cxvii. cap. 1.

¹⁷ Ulp. in Dig. xix. 17, 2. In the later ante-Justinianian law the father did not take if his son, who had died intestate, was survived by children or brothers (Inst. ii. 12, pr.). [Whether the father took under Justinian's law, "nullis liberis vel fratribus superstitis," by title of inheritance or jure peculii is a disputed question, and depends for its solution upon the meaning to be given to jus commune in the just cited passage in the Institutes. The better opinion is that he took jure peculii prior to the 118th Novel; cf. supra, p. 323, n. 14.]

well as in life, so that, if any of them should pass to his parent on his intestacy, it should only be by title of inheritance and in the absence of descendants.¹⁸

In every other branch of the law of the family the same reforming spirit was manifested. Adoption was no longer followed in all cases by a change of family for the adoptee, but only when the adopter was in fact one of his parents, such as a paternal or maternal grandfather,—when there was a natural potestas to underlie and justify the civil one.¹⁹ The modes of legitimation of children born out of wedlock, especially that by subsequent marriage of the parents, first introduced by Constantine,²⁰ were regulated, and the extent of the rights of the legitimated issue carefully defined.²¹ Emancipation was simplified, and the old procedure by sales and manumissions, which degraded the child too much to the level of a slave, abolished.²² Tutorship at law was opened to the pupil's nearest kinsmen, whether on the father's side or the mother's;²³ and the mother herself, or the child's grandmother, might be allowed under certain conditions to act as its guardian.²⁴ Slavery was often converted into the milder condition of colonate (§ 75); but even where this did not happen, the rights of owners were not allowed to be abused; for slaves were permitted to claim the protection of the magistrate, and cruelty by a master might result in his being deprived of his human property.²⁵ Kinship that had arisen between two persons when one or both were slaves (servilis cognatio) was recognised as creative not only of disabilities but of rights.²⁶ The modes of manumission were multiplied, and the restrictions of the legislation of the early empire (p. 316) abolished;²⁷ and a freedman invariably became a citizen, Junian latinity (p. 317) and dediticiancy being no longer recognised.²⁸

¹⁸ Nov. cxviii. cap. 1. ¹⁹ Just. in Cod. viii. 47, 10. ²⁰ Cod. v. 27, 5.

²¹ Just. in Cod. v. 27, ll. 10, 11; Nov. xii. cap. 4; lxxiv. præf. capp. 1, 2; lxxxix. capp. 8-10. [See Meyer, Röm. Concubinatus, Leipzig, 1895.]

²² Just. Cod. viii. 49, 5, 6.

²³ Just. Cod. vi. 58, 15, § 4; Nov. cxviii. cap. 5.

²⁴ This had been allowed even before the time of Justinian. See the enactment of Valent. Theod. and Arcad. in Cod. v. 35, 2. See also Nov. cxiv.

²⁵ Inst. i. 8, 2.

²⁶ Inst. iii. 6, 10.

²⁷ Inst. i. 5, 1.

²⁸ Cod. vii. 5, vii. 6; Inst. i. 5, 3.

SECTION 86.—THE LAW OF PROPERTY AND OBLIGATION

In the law of property the principal changes of the Christian empire were the simplification of the forms of conveyance, the extension of the colonate, the introduction and regulation of emphyteusis, and the remodelling of the law of prescription. Simplification of the forms of conveyance was necessary only in the case of res Mancipi, for res nec Mancipi had always passed by delivery. From the Theodosian Code it is apparent that movable res Mancipi usually passed in the same way from very early in the period; and that for the mancipation of lands and houses—for in jure cessio had disappeared with the formular system—a solemnis traditio, a written instrument and delivery following thereon, and both before witnesses, was gradually substituted.¹ Of this there is no trace in the Justinianian Code. For the emperor abolished all remains of the distinction between res Mancipi and nec Mancipi, between full ownership, bonitarian ownership, and nudum jus Quiritium, placing movables and immovables on a footing of perfect equality so far as their direct conveyance was concerned.² But as regarded the possession required of an alienee to cure any defect in the conveyance, he made a marked difference between them. For, amalgamating the old positive usucapion of the jus civile with the negative "prolonged possession" (longi temporis possessio) that had been introduced in the provinces (probably by the provincial edict), he declared that possession on a sufficient title and in good faith should in future make the possessor legal owner of the thing possessed by him, provided that the possession of himself and his author had endured uninterruptedly for three years in the case of a movable, and in the case of an immovable for ten years if the party against whom he possessed was resident in the same province, or for twenty if he resided in another one.³

The effects of the extension of the colonate have already been referred to (§ 76). The same causes that had led to it induced the introduction of emphyteusis:⁴ an institution

¹ Theod. Arcad. and Honor. in Theod. Cod. ii. 29, 2, §§ 1, 2.

² Cod. vii. 31.

³ Inst. ii. 6, pr.; Cod. vii. 31.

⁴ On emphyteusis, see Lattes (as in § 75, note 1), chaps. i. and iii.; François, which had previously existed in some of the Eastern provinces when independent, and which came to be utilised first by the emperors, then by the Church, and afterwards by municipalities and private landowners, for bringing into cultivation the large tracts of provincial land belonging to them which were unproductive and unprofitable through want of supervision on the spot. One somewhat like it had long existed both in Italy and in some of the western provinces under the name of ager vectigalis,—an inheritable lease for a long term of years, usually from a municipality, which gave the grantee rights much greater than those of an ordinary tenant; but this Justinian assimilated to emphyteusis. The nature and conditions of the latter were carefully defined by Zeno and amended by Justinian himself.⁵ The emphyteuta, as the grantee of the right was called, did not become owner; the granter still remained dominus, all that the grantee enjoyed being a jus in re aliena, but de facto so extensive as hardly to be distinguishable from ownership. It conferred upon him and his heirs a perpetual right in the lands included in the grant, in consideration of a fixed annual payment to the lord (canon) and due observance of conventional and statutory conditions; but he was not entitled to abandon it, or able to free himself of the obligations he had undertaken, without the lord's consent. The latter was entitled to hold the grant forfeited if the canon fell into arrear for three years (in church lands for two), or if the land tax was in arrear for the same period, or if the emphyteuta allowed the lands to deteriorate, or if he attempted to alienate them (alienare meliorationes as the text says) without observance of statutory requirements. These were that he should intimate an intended alienation and the name of the proposed alienee to the lord, so that the latter, before giving his assent, might satisfy himself that he would not be a loser by the transaction; and if the alienation was to be by sale, he had to state the price fixed, so as to give the lord the opportunity of exercising his statutory right of pre-emption at the same figure. If those requirements were complied with, and the lord, himself declining to purchase, had no reasonable objection to the proposed alienee, he was not entitled to resist the alienation, provided a payment (laudemium) was made to him of two per cent of the sale price in consideration of his enforced consent.

De l'emphytéose, Grenoble, 1883. [Beaudouin, in Nouv. Rev. Hist. 1898, pp. 545 sq.]

⁵ Zeno, in Cod. iv. 66, 1; Just. eod. tit. ll. 2, 3; Nov. vii. cap. 8, § 2; Nov. cxx. capp. 6, 8. [Cf. Inst. iii. 24, § 3.]

The changes in the law of obligation were more superficial than those in the law of property, and consisted principally in the simplification of formalities, and in some cases their entire abolition. To describe them, however, would necessitate details which would here be out of place.

SECTION 87.—CHANGES IN THE LAW OF SUCCESSION

The changes made in the law of succession by Justinian's Christian predecessors, especially Theodosius II. and Anastasius, were far from insignificant; but his own were in some directions positively revolutionary. The testament per aes et libram of the jus civile (pp. 159 sq.) probably never obtained any firm footing in the East; for it was only by Caracalla's constitution conferring citizenship on all his free subjects that provincials generally acquired testamenti factio; and by that time a testament bearing externally the requisite number of seals had been recognised as sufficient for a grant of bonorum possessio, unchallengeable by the heirs-at-law, even though they were able to prove that neither familiae mancipatio nor testamenti nuncupatio had intervened.¹ Hence the universal adoption of what Justinian calls the praetorian testament;² which, however, underwent considerable reform at the hands of the emperors, notably in the requirement (in the ordinary case) of signature by the testator and subscription by the witnesses. There was much hesitating legislation on the subject before the law was finally established as it stands in the Justinianian books;³ and even at the last we find it encumbered with many exceptions and reservations in favour of testaments that were merely deeds of division by a parent among his children, testaments made in time of plague, testaments recorded in books of court, testaments intrusted to the safe-keeping of the emperor, and so forth. Codicils had become deeds of such importance as, in the absence of a testament, to be dealt with as imposing a trust on the heir-at-law;⁴ it was therefore thought expedient to refuse effect to them unless attested by at least five witnesses.⁵ And a most important step in advance was taken by Justinian in the recognition of the validity of an oral mortis causa trust; for he declared that if it should be represented to a competent judge that a person on his deathbed had by word of mouth directed his heir-at-law to give something to the complainant, the heir should be required either on his oath to deny the averment or to give or pay what was claimed.⁶

¹ Gai. ii. §§ 119, 120; Ulp. xxiii. 6, xxviii. 6.

² Inst. ii. 10, 2.

³ The leading provisions are in the title of the Code de testamentis (vi. 23). The testator's subscription was required by an enactment of Theodosius II. of the year 439 (Cod. vi. 23, 21). The subscriptions of five witnesses (as well as their seals) had been required by Arcad. and Honor. (Theod. Cod. iv. 4, 3, §§ 1, 2), who declared they were following a rule of Constantine's. It was Theodosius (in 439) that reverted to the old number of seven.

In the matter of intestacy there was long a halting between two opinions,—a desire still further to amend the law in the direction taken by the praetors and by the legislature in the Tertullian and Orphitian senatusconsults (p. 332 sq.), and yet a hesitancy about breaking altogether from the time-hallowed principle of agnation.⁷ Justinian in his Code went far beyond his predecessors, making a mother's right of succession independent altogether of the jus liberorum;⁸ extending that of a daughter or sister to her descendants, without any deduction in favour of agnates thus excluded;⁹ admitting emancipated collaterals and their descendants as freely as if there had been no capitis deminutio;¹⁰ applying to agnates the same successio graduum that the praetors had allowed to cognates,¹¹ and so forth. But it was by his Novels, and especially the 118th and 127th, that he revolutionised the system, by eradicating agnation altogether,¹² and settling the canons of descent—which were the same for real and personal estate—solely on the basis

⁴ Inst. ii. 23, 10; ii. 25, 1.

⁵ Theod. in Cod. vi. 36, 8, § 3.

⁶ Cod. vi. 42, 32; Inst. ii. 23, § 12.

⁷ Examples in Inst. iii. 1, 15; iii. 3, 5; iii. 5, 1.

⁸ Cod. viii. 58, 2.

⁹ Cod. vi. 55, 12.

¹⁰ Cod. vi. 58, 15, § 1.

¹¹ Cod. vi. 4, l. 4, § 20; Inst. ii. 2, § 7.

¹² [Except as regards adoptive children, whose rights of succession to their adoptive father and his family were not destroyed.]

of blood kinship, whether through males or females, and whether crossed or not by a capitis deminutio minima (pp. 122 sq.) First came descendants of the intestate, male and female alike, taking per capita if all were of the nearest degree, per stirpes if of remoter ones. Failing descendants, the succession passed to the nearest ascendants, and, concurrently with them, brothers and sisters of the full blood and (by Nov. 127) the children of any that had predeceased. Where there were ascendants alone, one half of the succession went to the paternal line and one half to the maternal; where there were ascendants and brothers and sisters, or only brothers and sisters, the division was made equally per capita; when children of a deceased brother or sister participated it was per stirpes. In the third class came in brothers and sisters of the half blood or by adoption, and their children; the partition here was on the same principle as in the second class. The fourth class included all other collaterals according to propinquity, and without distinction between full and half blood; the primary division was per stirpes, but all of the same branch took per capita.

A reform effected by Justinian by his 115th Novel ought not to pass unnoticed, for it rendered superfluous all the old rules about disherison and praeterition of a testator's children (p. 162 sq.), practically abolished *bonorum possessio contra tabulas*¹³ (p. 273), and established the principle that a child had, as a general rule, an inherent and indefeasible right to be one of his father's heirs in a certain share at all events of the hereditas, and that a parent had the same right in the succession of his child if the latter had died without issue. The enactment enumerated certain grounds upon which alone it should be lawful for a parent to disinherit his child or a child his parent; declaring that in every case of disherison the reason of it should be stated in the testament, but giving leave to the person disinherited to dispute and disprove the facts when the testament was opened.¹⁴ If a child who had not been disinherited—and one improperly disinherited was eventually in the same position —was not instituted to some share, however small, of his parent's hereditas, he was entitled to have the testament declared null in so far as the institutions in it were concerned, thus opening the succession to himself and the other heirs-at-law, but without affecting the minor provisions, such as bequests, nomination of tutors, etc.; and if the share to which he was instituted was less than his legitim (legitima or debita portio), he was entitled to an action in supplement. The legitim, which under the practice of the centumviral court had been one-fourth of the share to which the child would have been entitled ab intestato, was raised by Justinian (by his 18th Novel) to one-third at least, and one-half where there were five or more entitled to participate. He did not allow challenge of the will to be excluded, as in the earlier querela inofficiosi testamenti (p. 235), because the testator had made advances to his child during his life or left him a legacy which quantitatively equalled the legitim; his idea was that a child was entitled to recognition by his parent as one of his heirs, and that without cause to deny him that position was to put upon him an affront which the law ought not to tolerate.¹⁵

¹³ [That is to say ordinary b. p. c. t., though even this is disputed. See Puchta, Pandekten, § 493. The Novel did not apply to the succession of patrons to freedmen—the extraordinaria b. p. See Cod. vi. 4, 4.]

¹⁴ [The onus of proof was laid upon the instituted heir. Nov. cxv. cap. 3, § 15, and cap. 4, § 9.]

Amongst the other beneficial changes effected by Justinian or his immediate predecessors may be mentioned the assimilation as far as possible of hereditas and bonorum possessio, so that the latter might be taken like the former without formal petition for a grant of it;¹⁶ the equiparation of legacies and singular trust-gifts,¹⁷ and the application of some of their rules to mortis causa donations;¹⁸ the extension of the principle of "transmission" to every heir without exception, so that, if he died within the time allowed him for considering whether or not he would accept (tempus deliberandi), his power of acceptance or declinature passed to his heirs, to be exercised by them within what remained of the period:¹⁹ the introduction of entry under inventory (cum beneficio inventarii), which limited

¹⁵ [Brothers and sisters excluded by a persona turpis continued to be entitled to claim legitim; see supra, p. 235.]

¹⁶ Const. in Cod. vi. 9, 9.

¹⁷ Just. in Cod. vi. 43, 2, § 1; Inst. ii. 20, § 3.

¹⁸ Just. in Cod. viii. 56, 3; Inst. ii. 7, § 1.

¹⁹ Just. in Cod. vi. 30, l. 19, l. 22, § 13.

the heir's responsibilities, and rendered unnecessary the nine or twelve months of deliberation;²⁰ and the application of the principle of collation to descendants generally, so that they were bound to throw into the mass of the succession before its partition every advance of importance they had received from their parent in anticipation of their shares.²¹

²⁰ Just., in Cod. vi. 30, 22.

²¹ Leo, in Cod. vi. 20, 17; Just. ead. tit. ll. 19, 20; Nov. xviii. cap. 6.

CHAPTER IV

THE JUSTINIANIAN LAW-BOOKS

SECTION 88—THEIR USE IN THE COURTS AND IN THE SCHOOLS¹

ALTHOUGH the Institutes were primarily intended to serve as a text-book in the schools, yet it was expressly declared that they and the Digest and Code should be regarded as just so many parts of one great piece of legislation and all of equal authority; and that, although Digest and Code were but collections of legislation and doctrine that had proceeded originally from many different hands, yet they were to be treated with the same respect as if they had been the work of Justinian himself. But, while everything within them was to be held as law, nothing outside them was to be looked at, not even the volumes from which they had been collected; and so far did this go that, after the publication of the revised Code, neither the first edition of it nor the Fifty Dècisions were allowed to be referred to. If a case arose for which no precedent was to be found, the emperor was to be resorted to for his decision, as outside his collections the only fountain of the law. To preserve the purity of the texts,—for which Justinian would have done well to have followed the example of Alaric, who had copies of his Breviary prepared and certified in the chancery, and then distributed through the country,—he forbade the use of conventional abbreviations (sigla) in making transcripts, visiting an offender with the penalties of falsification (crimen falsi). Literal translations into Greek were authorised, and indeed very necessary for many of his subjects; and so were παράτιτλα or summaries of the contents of individual titles (although the jurists read the word less strictly). Commentaries and general summaries were forbidden under heavy penalties, as an interference with the imperial prerogative of interpretation; but the prohibition does not seem to have been enforced, as we have accounts and remains not only of translations, but of commentaries, notes, abridgements, excerpts, and general summaries, even in Justinian's lifetime. Dorotheus, Anatolius, and Thalelaeus were all amongst those to whom his collections were specially addressed, and two of them were engaged in their preparation; yet the first was author of a translation of the Digest with notes; the second made an abridgement of the Code; and the third translated it with annotations. Julian, too, who made a Latin abridgement of the Novels in 556, probably at the instance of Justinian himself, has been identified with an Anonymus often referred to in the scholia of the Basilica, as the author of an annotated translation of the Digest. All of these, it is true, were professors (antecessores), and their productions may have been intended primarily for educational purposes; but there can be little doubt that they soon passed into the hands of the practitioners and were used without scruple in the courts.

¹ See Heimbach's Prolegomena Basilicorum (Leipsic, 1870), book i. chap. i. §§ 1-6, chap. ii. §§ 1, 2. [See infra, p. 402, n. 1.]

In the early empire the teaching² of the law was free; and it may have been first in the time of Diocletian that state recognition was accorded to the schools of Rome and Beirout, and not until considerably later that it was extended to those of Constantinople, Alexandria, and Caesarea. That of Rome seems still to have subsisted while Italy was in the hands of the Ostrogoths; but Justinian suppressed those of Alexandria and Caesarea, and prohibited the public teaching of law elsewhere than in the other three, under heavy pecuniary penalties. The course of study prior to Justinian's reforms ran over five years, the last two being given to private reading. The students of the first year—dupondii they were called—were taken over two books of Gaius's Institutes and four separate books of his (libri singulares) on dowries, tutories, testaments, and legacies. Those of the second (edictales) and third (Papinianistae) were exercised in the Edict or probably Ulpian's commentary on it, and the latter (in addition) in eight of the nineteen books of Papinian's Responses. In the fourth the students (then called λύται) read Paul's Responses, and in the fifth (προλύται) the imperial constitutions. Justinian still enjoined a five years' course, but prescribed that the teaching should be entirely from his own collections. The men of the first year—whom he relieved of their old nickname, and honoured with the title of novi Justiniani (Justinian's freshmen)—were to be instructed in the Institutes and the first part (books 1-4) of the Digest; those of the second year in either the second (books 5-11) or the third part (books 12-19) of the Digest, along with four of the last fourteen books of parts iv. and v., of which one should be on the law of dowries, one on tutories, one on testaments, and one on legacies; those of the third year in that one of parts ii. and iii. of the Digest which had not been taken up in the second, together with the first three books of the fourth part; those of the fourth year were to read privately the remaining ten books of parts iv. and v.; while those of the fifth were to read the Code of imperial constitutions, leaving the sixth and seventh parts (books 37-50) of the Digest to be read after the course was completed, as opportunity presented itself.³ As already observed, it is not improbable that the instruction thus prescribed was conveyed through the medium of translations and annotated summaries of the Justinianian books. A Greek paraphrase of the Institutes, usually attributed to Theophilus, a professor in Constantinople and one of Justinian's commissioners, is commonly supposed to have been used by him in his prelections. It embodies much more historical matter than is to be found in the Institutes; but its value has been very differently rated by different critics. Its latest editor, Ferrini,⁴ who puts a high estimate on it, is of opinion that the original of it was a paraphrase of Gaius, which was remodelled after the plan of Justinian's Institutes, and had their new matter incorporated in order to adapt it to the altered conditions; but he doubts if there be any sufficient authority for ascribing it to Theophilus. If he be right in assuming it was really a redaction of Gaius, the historical explanations will be received with all the more confidence.

² See Heimbach as in last note; Amos, History and Principles of the Civil Law (London, 1883), p. 102 sq.; Karlowa, Röm. RG. i. p. 1022 sq.

³ [See the constitution Omnem reip. and Roby, Digest, pp. xxvi., xxvii.]

⁴ Institutionum Graeca paraphrasis Theophilo antecessori vulgo tributa. Ad fid. libror. manuscriptor. recensuit E. C. Ferrini. 2 vols. Berlin, 1884, 1897. [See Arch. Giur. vol. xxxvii. p. 353—"Origine della parafrasi."]

SECTION 89.—FATE OF THE JUSTINIANIAN BOOKS IN THE EAST¹

The literary work indicated in the first part of last section was continued throughout the sixth century by various writers, of whom Heimbach gives some account in his Prolegomena. But the next three were comparatively barren; the only thing worth noting being the Ἐκλογή τῶν νόμων ἐν συντόμῳ γενομένη of Leo the Isaurian in 740, professedly an abstract of the whole Justinianian law amended and rearranged,² but which was repealed by Basil the Macedonian on account of its imperfections and its audacious departure from the law it pretended to summarise. The last-named emperor, with his son Leo the Philosopher, set himself in the end of the ninth and beginning of the tenth centuries to the production of an authoritative Greek version of the whole of the Justinianian collections and legislation, omitting what had become obsolete, excising redundancies, and introducing such of the post-Justinianian legislation as merited preservation. The result was the Basilica (τὰ Βασιλικά, sc. νόμιμα), which was completed in the reign of Leo, though probably issued in a preparatory stage in the reign of Basil (who also published a sort of institutional work, the Πρόχειρον, which was revised and republished by Leo under the name of Ἐπαναγωγή τοῦ νόμου).³ The Basilica are in sixty books, subdivided into titles, following generally the plan of the Justinianian Code, but with the whole law on any particular subject arranged consecutively, whether borrowed from the Digest, the Code, or the Novels.⁴ Leo's son, Constantinus Porphyrogenetus, made an addition to it in the shape of an official commentary collected from the writings of the sixth-century jurists,—the so-called Παράγραφοι τῶν παλαιῶν, which are now spoken of as the Scholia to the Basilica, and have done good exegetical service for modern civilians. The Basilica retained their statutory authority until the fall of the Byzantine empire in 1453. But long before that they had practically been abandoned; and not a single complete copy of them exists. Their place was taken by epitomes and compendia, of which several are printed in Zachariae's collection, the last being the Ἐξάβιβλος of Const. Harmenopulus of 1345,⁵ "a miserable epitome of the epitomes of epitomes," as Bruns calls it, which survived the vicissitudes of the centuries, and finally received statutory authority in the new kingdom of Greece in the year 1835,⁶ in place of the Basilica which had been sanctioned in 1822.

¹ Zachariae, Historiae juris Graeco-Romani delineatio, Heidelberg, 1839; Mortrueil, Histoire du Droit byzantin, 3 vols. Paris, 1843-46; Prolegomena to Heimbach's edition of the Basilica (6th vol. of Basilicorum libri LX . . . restituit C. G. E. Heimbach, 6 vols. Leipsic, 1833-70, with a supplement to books 15-19 by Zachariae in 1846); Zachariae von Lingenthal, Jus Graeco-Romanum (a collection of Byzantine treatises of the second order), 7 vols. Leipsic, 1856-84; Zachariae v. Ling. Gesch. d. griech.-röm. Rechts (doctrine), 2nd ed. Berlin, 1877 [3rd ed. 1892]; Rivier, Introd. hist. au droit romain (2nd ed. Brussels, 1881), p. 545 sq.; Amos (as in § 88, note 2), p. 392 sq. [A second supplement to Heimbach's edition of the Basilica, (vol. vii.) by Ferrini and Mercati, with Latin translation, has been published, Leipsic, 1897.]

² [Published in Zachariae's Collectio librorum juris Graeco-Romani ineditorum, Leipsic, 1852.]

SECTION 90.—THEIR FATE IN THE WEST

Before the rise of the Bologna school it was to a very much greater extent from the Romano-Barbarian Codes (§ 79) than

³ [Edited by Zachariae in his Collectio lib. jur.]

⁴ [There is an abstract of the Basilica called Tipucitos, of which a MS. is in the Vatican. The publication of this has been contemplated by the Istituto di Diritto Romano. For editions of the Basilica, see n. 1.]

⁵ Harmenopuli manuale legum seu Hexabiblos. Recensuit G. E. Heimbach, Leipsic, 1851.

⁶ [But revised and expanded by reference to the Basilica. Since 1835 codes have been prepared and enacted which have in great part been modelled upon those of France.]

from the books of Justinian that Central and Western Europe derived their acquaintance with Roman law. Theodoric's Edict can have had little influence after Justinian's recovery of Italy, and the Romano-Burgundian law was no doubt gradually displaced by the Breviary (Lex Rom. Visigothorum) after Burgundy had fallen into the hands of the Franks; but the Breviary itself found its way in all directions in France and Germany, penetrating even into England, to a great extent through the agency of the Church. There must, however, have been other repertories of Roman law in circulation; as witness a testament made in Paris in the end of the seventh century, preserved by Mabillon, in which the testator uses the old formula of the jus civile,—"ita do, ita lego, ita testor, ita vos Quirites testimonium mihi perhibetote,"—words that are not to be found either in the Visigothic or the Justinianian collections.

In his pragmatic sanction of the year 554 Justinian anew accorded his imperial sanction to the jura and leges, i.e. the Digest and Code, which he says he had long before transmitted to Italy; at the same time declaring that his Novels were to be of the same authority there as in the East. Two years after this came Julian's Latin epitome of them, not improbably prepared by command of the emperor himself. That they all came at once to some extent into use is beyond question; for there is preserved in Marini's collection the testament of one Mannanes, executed at Ravenna in the reign of Justinian's immediate successor, Justin II., in which the requirements of both Code and Novels are scrupulously observed. Of other monuments of the same period that prove the currency of the Justinianian law in Italy, several are referred to by Savigny in the second volume of his History of the Roman Law in the Middle Ages; among which may be mentioned the Turin Gloss of the Institutes, which Fitting ascribes to about the year 545 and two little pieces known as the Dictatum de consiliariis and the Collectio de tutoribus, which form an appendix to some manuscripts of Julian's Epitome of the Novels, and the first may have been from his pen. The invasion of the Lombards, the disturbance they caused in Italy for 200 years, and the barrier they formed between it and the rest of Europe, militated against the spread of the Justinianian law northwards; but it was taught without much interruption in Ravenna, the seat of the exarchs, to which—but this is doubtful—the school (studium) of Rome, revived by Justinian, is said to have been transferred.¹ By the Lombards, as their savagery toned down, the Roman law was recognised to this extent,—that they allowed it to be applied to Romans within their territory; and it is said to have even been taught in Pavia, which they had established as their capital. Their overthrow by Charlemagne opened an outlet for it beyond Italy; and in the ninth century there is evidence that the Justinianian books, or some of them, were already circulating in the hands of the clergy in various parts of Europe. Yet there are very few remains of any literature indicating much acquaintance with them. Almost the only pieces worth mentioning are the so-called Summa Perusina, an abridgement of the first eight books of the Code, ascribed to the ninth century; the Quaestiones ac Monita on the Lombardic Laws, drawn mostly from the Institutes, but with a few texts from the Digest, the Code, and Julian's Epitome, and supposed to have been written early in the eleventh century; the Brachylogus, an abbreviated revision of Justinian's Institutes, with references to his other books, which is thought to have been written in France (Orleans?), according to some authorities in the tenth, but according to others in the eleventh or first half of the twelfth centuries; and Petri exceptiones legum Romanarum, a systematic exposition of the law in four books, written in the south of France early in the latter half of the eleventh century, and mostly compiled from Justinianian sources.²

It was in the very end of the eleventh century or the beginning of the twelfth that at Bologna, and under one Irnerius, who appears not to have been a professional jurist but originally a teacher of letters, the study of Roman law

¹ [See La Scuola delle leggi romane in Ravenna, by V. Rivolta, Bologna, 1888. Fitting in Z. d. Sav. Stift. vol. xvi. p. 49 sq.]

² [On the origin of the Petri exceptiones, see Max. Conrat (Cohn), Das Ashburnhamer Rechtsbuch, 1886. According to Conrat, this latter work (the MS. of which is in Lord Ashburnham's collection) was the source from which the "Exceptiones" was, in part, drawn, and was written probably in Burgundy in the first quarter of the twelfth century. See also Conrat, Gesch. d. Quellen, in n. 3 infra.]

began somewhat suddenly to attract students from all parts of southern Europe. The only parts of the Justinianian legislation that had hitherto made any great way,—and that through the action of the clergy,—were the Institutes, the Code, and the Novels. The first, from its elementary character, had very naturally commended itself; the Code, with its opening title on the Trinity and its second on Holy Church, and the Novels with their abundant legislation on matters ecclesiastical, were in many respects charters of the Church's privileges and prized accordingly; but the Digest, the work of pagan jurists, had been practically ignored. The Code and the Novels, however, with their modicum of wheat concealed in such a quantity of chaff, offered little attraction to laymen of intelligence; and when a copy of a portion of the Digest, with its infinitely purer diction and clear and incisive reasoning, came into the hands of Irnerius, it must have been for him as a new revelation. The text of it seems to have reached him by instalments; at least this is the reasonable explanation of its division by the Glossarists—as Irnerius and his successors of the Bologna school were called, from the glossae, notes marginal and interlinear, with which they furnished it—into three parts, Digestum Vetus (books 1 to 24, tit. 2), Infortiatum, and Digestum Novum (books 39 to the end); the general idea being that after first the old and then the new Digest had come to light, the connecting link unexpectedly turned up, and got in consequence the somewhat singular name by which it continued to be known for centuries. The whole collection was by the Glossarists distributed in five volumes; the fourth containing the first nine books of the Code, and the fifth, called volumen parvum legum, containing the Institutes, a Latin translation of 134 of the Novels known as the Authenticum, and the last three books of the Code (which had been recovered subsequently to the others). With those five volumes, the teaching that accompanied them, and the glossae, summae, casus, brocardica, etc. with which they were enriched from the rise of the school with Irnerius till its close with Franciscus Accursius in 1260, Roman jurisprudence began a new career, which it would carry me beyond the scope of this little book to attempt to trace even in meagrest outline.⁸

SECTION 91.—THE PRINCIPAL MANUSCRIPTS, TEXTS, AND EDITIONS OF THE JUSTINIANIAN BOOKS

Of the whole Corpus Juris Civilis, as the collected body of the Justinianian law was first styled by Denis Godefroi (Gothofredus) in 1583,¹ very few MSS. are known to exist. There is one in Copenhagen, but it is not of great antiquity or any critical value. It is said that a second exists (or existed) in the Dominican library at Würzburg, gifted to it by the Emperor Frederick Barbarossa, and a third in a convent library at Prague; but the mention in the Catalogus MSS. Angliae et Hiberniae of the existence of a fourth in the cathedral library at Salisbury is founded on a misapprehension. Of printed editions, on the other hand, it may be said with certainty that there is but one book of which there is a greater multitude,—the Holy Bible.

Of the Institutes the manuscripts are numerous, the earliest mere fragments, and but one of the ninth (or more probably tenth) century complete,—the Codex Bambergensis; the great majority are of the fourteenth century, and some still later. The earliest edition was that of Peter Schoeffer (Mayence, 1468), with the Accursian gloss; the first unglossated one was published in Paris in 1511; and the most authoritative one at the present day, being the result of a collation of the best manuscripts, is that of Krüger, first published in 1867.² The texts of Schrader (1832) and Huschke (1868) rank next in importance.

⁸ The great authority on the matter of this section is still Savigny's Gesch. d. röm. Rechts im Mittelalter, 7 vols. 2nd ed. Heidelberg, 1834-51; but much additional light has been thrown on it by Merkel, Stintzing, Blume, Fitting, Bruns, Mommsen, Krüger, Ficker, Rivier, Conrat (Cohn), and others, whose writings, mostly in periodicals, are too numerous to mention. [More recently by Conrat, Gesch. der Quellen und Litteratur des röm. Rechts im früheren Mittelalter, vol. i. 1889-1891; Fitting, Summa Codicis, and Quaestiones, des Irnerius, 2 (separate) vols. 1894.] On the early traces of Roman law in Britain, see Amos (as in § 88, note 2), p. 443 sq.; Caillemer, Le Droit Civil dans les provinces Anglo-Normandes, Caen, 1883; Scrutton, The Influence of the Roman Law on the Law of England, Cambridge, 1885. A tractate by Leonard, Beiträge zur Geschichte des römischen Rechts in England (Heidelb. 1868), is of little value; it is mostly compiled from Selden's Ad Fletam dissertatio, Savigny's Geschichte, and Wenck's Magister Vacarius primus juris Romani in Anglia Professor, Leipsic, 1820. [See also Pollock and Maitland, History of English Law, vol. i.]

¹ [The term corpus juris as applied to the whole Roman Law is used by Livy iii. 34 (see supra, p. 96, n. 6), and by Justinian, Cod. v. 13, 1 pr. As applied to Justinianian law it was used by the Glossarists (Puchta, Inst. § 148). Probably the earliest instance of its use in England is to be found in an Index of MSS. by an Abbot of Peterborough towards the end of the twelfth century, of which an account is given in Wenck, Magister Vacarius, p. 26 n.]

There is but one complete manuscript of the Digest of earlier date than the rise of the Bologna school,—the famous Codex Florentinus, formerly in Pisa, but now one of the most valued treasures of the Lorenzian Library in Florence.³ Of this MS. a minute description is given by Brenemann in his Historia Pandectarum (Utrecht, 1722), and a more critical one by Mommsen in the preface to the first volume of his greater edition of the Digest (Berlin, 1866). It is a very beautiful codex, dating from the sixth or seventh century, written, if not in Constantinople, at all events in Greece, with a good many corrections by later hands. It is free from abbreviations,—the sigla which Justinian had forbidden; and has neither numeration of the consecutive fragments, nor spaces between the words, nor punctuation except at the end of sentences. The inscriptions are always preserved, and the Greek passages written with even greater accuracy than the general text. Also of great antiquity, and probably not much younger than the Florentine, are the Pommersfeld and Naples codices; but they are mere fragments,—the first a papyrus containing part of the first title of the forty-fifth book, and the second a palimpsest containing part of the tenth book. A manuscript in the Royal Library at Berlin, which dates from the ninth century, contains part of the first book. No other known codices go beyond the commencement of the school of the glossarists. With very few exceptions, they⁴ contain not the whole Digest, but only one of its Bolognese divisions,—either the Dig.

² [This edition, with some slight alterations, now forms part of vol. i. of the stereotype edition of the Corpus Juris of Mommsen, Krüger, and Schoell.]

³ [It was transferred to Florence after the sack of Pisa in 1406.]

⁴ [I.e. the glossarist MSS.]

Vetus, the Infortiatum, or the Dig. Novum; not more than six or eight are as old as the eleventh or twelfth century: while about 500 are known of later date. These last for the most part contain the Accursian gloss; and it is characteristic of them that they do not give the inscriptions in full,—i.e. the indications of the books of the old jurists from which the passages had been excerpted,—and sometimes omit them altogether; and that they omit the Greek words and sentences, or substitute for them a current Latin translation. Of the texts, three are distinguished by the civilians,—the Pisan, the Vulgate, and the Noric.⁵ The first is that of the Florentine manuscript. The Vulgate is that which was adopted by the glossarists, and which is to be found, more or less varied, in all the manuscripts from the thirteenth century downwards. Mommsen is of opinion that, while the (Pisan or) Florentine formed the basis of the Bologna text, yet the glossarists must have been in possession of another manuscript of perhaps equal antiquity, though possibly incomplete, from which they corrected the former with great advantage. The lectio Norica or Haloandrina is a mixed text due to Gregorius Haloander (Metzler), the result of a collation of the Florentine with some of the oldest Vulgate MSS., aided largely by arbitrary conjecture, which was published by him at Nuremberg in 1529. The editio princeps, curiously enough, was of the Infortiatum, at Rome, in 1475; the Dig. Vetus and Novum followed in the ensuing year at Perusina and Rome respectively. All three were prints of the Bologna text, with the Accursian gloss. Haloander's edition of 1529, which was of the whole Digest, was unglossated. So was the magnificent reproduction of the Florentine Pandects by the Torellis in 1553, under the sanction of several crowned heads, and amongst them King Edward VI. From that time, and down to the middle of the present century, most unglossated editions—the latest glossated one dates from 1627—were a combination of all three texts, the Florentine predominating, but conjectural readings gradually multiplying. The uncertainty which thus resulted induced Mommsen to undertake the preparation of the edition (2 volumes, Berlin, 1866-70) which is now on all hands accepted as authoritative. It is substantially the reading of the Florentine from a new collation prepared for the purpose, checked only by the three fragments above referred to and a small number of the very earliest Bologna codices, and, where necessary, by the Basilica and its scholia; conjectural emendations being very sparingly admitted, and usually relegated to footnotes.⁶

⁵ [Lectio Pisana, lectio vulgata sive Bononiensis, and lectio Norica.]

Of the Code there exists three incomplete ante-glossarist manuscripts. Irnerius seems to have had originally only the first nine books, for the three last (tres libri) formed part of the Volumen according to the Bologna arrangement. They all fared somewhat badly; for comparatively early the inscriptions and subscriptions and all the Greek constitutions came to be omitted. Into the Code as they had it the glossarists introduced what they called Authenticæ,—notes of the alterations made on the law by Justinian's Novels; also some constitutions of the Emperors Frederick I. and II., which are quite out of place. The authoritative edition, prepared from the best manuscripts, with restitution of all that the glossarists had excised, is that of Krüger (Berlin, 1877).⁷

The Novels, as already observed, were never collected officially. For several centuries they were known in Italy only through Julian's Latin Epitome of some 125 of them.⁸ Another Latin version, which is thought to have been also of the time of Justinian, was accepted by the glossarists (versio vulgata), and obtained the name of Authenticum,—"that sanctioned as law."⁹ This they divided into twelve Collationes; in nine of them ranging those laws which they glossated as of practical value (authenticæ ordinariæ), the rest (the authenticæ extraordinariæ or extravagantes) being

⁶ [A reproduction of the Florentine MS. in phototype is announced as being about to be published in Italy. See Bullettino dell' Ist. di Diritto Romano, 1897, vol. ix. p. 158.]

⁷ [For an account of earlier editions, see Krüger's prolegomena to his editio major; Cramer in the Savigny Z. f. gesch. RW. ii. p. 289.]

⁸ [Juliani Epitome Latina Novellarum Justiniani, edited by G. Haenel, Leipsic, 1878.]

⁹ Authenticum Novellarum Constitutionum Justiniani, versio vulgata quam recensuit G. E. Heimbach, 2 vols. Leipsic, 1846-1851, with elaborate prolegomena and other critical apparatus.

placed in the other three and unglossated. In the sixteenth century two Greek manuscripts were discovered, which form the basis of the now accepted collection; one in Florence, which was published by Haloander in 1531, the other in Venice, published in 1556 by Henry Scrimgeour, the first Scotsman who obtained European distinction as a civilian. The last edition is that of Zachariae von Lingenthal (2 vols., Leipsic, 1882).¹⁰ Another by Rudolf Schoell is in course of publication; it is meant to rank with the Digest by Mommsen, and the Institutes and Code by Krüger, as the completion of a trustworthy presentation of the whole Corpus Juris Civilis.¹¹

¹⁰ [For a full account see Kroll's prolegomena to Schoell's edition of the Novels as in next note.]

¹¹ [This edition, the publication of which was delayed by the death of Schoell, has been completed by F. Kroll and published at Berlin in 1895. It contains the text of the Greek collection, accompanied by a Latin translation and the text of the Authenticum. On this section (91), see, generally, Krüger, Quellen, § 52.]

APPENDIX

NOTE A. (See § 9, in fine.)

REFERENCES in the pages of the lay writers to the action of the cognati and adfines must be received with caution. For instance, in their accounts of the caristia or cara cognatio, an annual festival that immediately followed the parentales dies and the feralia, and at which all the members of a family assembled to renew the bonds of goodwill and affection over a common repast in presence of the domestic lares, Ovid (Fast. ii. 617 sq.) and Valerius Maximus (ii. 1, § 8) speak of it as a reunion of the cognati and adfines generally, to the exclusion of all third parties. But as the feast was held everywhere on the same day and was kept up till night, and as both men and women might be nearly connected by blood or marriage with half a dozen families or more, it is clear that the cognation and affinity that qualified for participation in it must have stopped short of that sixth degree to which they usually extended. It is only by assuming that the gathering was exclusively of wife, sons, unmarried daughters, and wives and children of sons, around the table of the head of the house, that the account of it becomes comprehensible. His sons and their children and his unmarried daughters were undoubtedly cognates of his, and his wife and daughters-in-law adfines in the wider sense of the word; but what a small proportion probably of those entitled to those designations. It may be that in other cases in which cognati and adfines are spoken of a similar limitation is necessary.

NOTE B. (See § 14, note 4.)

Gaius (i. 113) describes coemptio as an imaginary sale and purchase per aes et libram, in presence of a libripens and five citizen witnesses; but unfortunately the final words in the MS.—“a [= asse] emit eum mulierem, cujus in manum convenit”—do not indicate with certainty which of the parties was the nominal seller and which the nominal purchaser. Comparative jurisprudence shows so many examples of bride-capture developing into bride-purchase, that many jurists rush to the conclusion that, as the story of the Sabine rape, the hasta coelibaris, the pretended forcible tearing of the bride from her mother, etc., point to a time when capture was in vogue, and as Gaius defines coemptio as an imaginary sale, there must have been an intermediate stage in which there was a real purchase of the bride from her father or guardian, of which coemptio was a modified survival; that in it consequently the bridegroom was the purchaser, the bride's paterfamilias or guardian the seller, and the bride herself the object of sale. That there may have been such an intermediate stage is more than probable; but the coemption of the texts does not represent it.

The following points are to be noted: (1) that Emere in old Latin did not necessarily mean to purchase for a substantial money price, but simply to take, receive, or acquire; see Festus, v. Redemptores (Bruns, p. 286), Paul. Diac. vv. Abemito and Emere (Bruns, pp. 262, 267); (2) though coemptio was a mancipation, yet this was used for many other purposes besides actual sale and conveyance of a res Mancipi, e.g. the execution of a testament and the effecting of a donation, adoption, or emancipation; the touching of the scales with a piece of copper (and later a coin) in the presence of witnesses was but the solemnity employed to mark the completion of the act, whose nature and purpose were defined in the contemporaneous spoken words; (3) that Cicero and Gaius never use the word coemere, but always coemptionem facere, a phrase they apply exclusively to the bride, coemptionari and coemptionator being applied to the bridegroom; (4) that Servius, speaking of coemptio, says (in Aen. iv. 103, Bruns, p. 322), "Mulier atque vir in se quasi coemptionem faciunt," and (in Georg. i. 31, Bruns, p. 324) "Se maritus et uxor invicem coemebant;" (5) that Boethius (in Cic. Top. ii. 3, § 14, Bruns, p. 320), quoting Ulpian as his authority, says, "Sese in coemendo invicem interrogabant," etc.; (6) that Isidore (Orig. v. 24, § 26, Bruns, p. 327) says, "Se maritus et uxor invicem emebant, ne videretur uxor ancilla;" (7) that Nonius Marcellus, v. Nubentes (Bruns, p. 312), says that in ancient times a woman marrying carried three pieces of money, one for her husband tamquam emendi causa, and the others for his domestic and compital lares.

In presence of all these authorities it seems impossible to accept either the prevalent opinion that the bridegroom alone was purchaser, or that entertained by Hölder (Die römische Ehe, Zurich, 1874, p. 20 sq.), that this position was taken solely by the bride, the bridegroom being the object of purchase. Reciprocal purchase, or rather, as Boethius puts it, the acquiring of each other as paterfamilias and materfamilias respectively, and that under pretence of purchase, seems to have been the true nature of the transaction. The objection usually urged against this view—that a man could not sell himself—is of very little weight. Why could he not do so as well as the bride? It is said she did not do so; that if a filiafamilias, she was sold by her father, and if sui juris, by her tutors. But the last part of the explanation is inconsistent with what is stated both by Gaius (i. 190) and Ulpian (xi. 25), that tutors never acted for their full-grown female wards, but only sanctioned the latter's acts,—a rule to which coemption formed no exception (Gai. i. 115, 195);¹ and even the first part of it is contradicted by a statement of Paul's in a passage preserved in the Collatio (iv. 2, 2),—that, when a filiafamilias passed in manum mariti, the act was her own, her father being no more than auctor. That a man could not go through the form of selling himself per aes et libram, however, is a proposition that is unsupported by any authority ; the extent of the truth is that he could not so sell himself into slavery, or quasi slavery ; and Gaius says expressly (i. 123) that neither of these was implied by the words used in coemption.

¹ [Omnibus (tutoribus) auctoribus, Cic. Pro Flacco, xxxiv. 84.]

On these grounds I am disposed to think that there is an omission in the text of the MS. of Gaius, and that the latter ought to read somewhat to this effect,—“asse [emit vir mulierem, quam in manum recipit (see Gai. ii. 98), et invicem] emit eum mulier, cujus in manum convenit.” Huschke’s opinion is similar ; in his last (4th) edition of Gaius he has “asse emit eum [mulier et is] mulierem, cujus in manum convenit.” The objection to this reading is that, as vir does not occur in the previous part of the sentence, eum and is have no antecedent.²

NOTE C. (See § 31, note 4.)

Considerable confusion has been caused as to the meaning of the word nexum by some definitions of it by writers of the later republic, preserved by Varro, De L. L. vii. 105 (Bruns. p. 308) and Festus v. Nexum (Bruns, p. 274). In reading them it must be kept in view that Mamilius (as quoted by Varro) and Aelius Gallus (as quoted by Festus) are not speaking of a person making himself nexus by copper and scales,—for that practice was abolished by the Poetilian law of 428 U.C. (supra, p. 153), but of a thing being bonded (obligata) in that way. The phrase res nexa is quite common in the classical law, as applied to something impledged or hypothecated to a creditor ; see Ulp. in Dig. xliii. 4, fr. 1, § 4, Antoninus (Caracalla), in Cod. viii. 19, 2, Alex. Sever. in Cod. viii. 27, 2. When a thing was given as a security per aes et libram it was called fiducia (supra, p. 133 sq.), and it is this that Q. Mucius Scaevola (Varro, as above) appears to have had in view when correcting Mamilius ; he limits the word nexum to a thing over which a nexus was created per aes et libram, and excludes from it an ordinary mancipatory conveyance of property,—a limitation and exclusion of which Varro approves. It may be objected that a fiducia, although undoubtedly intended only as a security, was in form transferred to the creditor in property. But the money lent to a borrower per aes et libram also became his property, and yet it was called nexum aes. The borrowed money and the thing given as fiducia, therefore, were in much the same position: both became the property of the receiver, but with an obligation of return; if the one was properly called nexum aes, why should not the other be res nexa? The final, and unfortunately corrupt, sentence in the passage of Varro refers to the case of the debtor who, in the earlier law, made himself nexus, and has little or no connection with what precedes it. (See on this subject the observations of Prof. Nettleship in the Journal of Philology, vol. xii. (1883), p. 198 sq.)

² [No antecedent is necessary, as the pronoun cujus explains. Huschke, Gaius, 5th ed. p. 200. This notion of a mutual sale receives little support from modern civilians. The force of co in co-emere is supposed to point to acquisition as in comparare, conquirere, etc. See Rivier, Droit de famille romain, p. 171 n. On the whole, it is difficult to resist the conclusion that coemptio represents a development or application of an older form of marriage in which there was an actual sale for a price of the bride to the bridegroom by her father or family, such as we find among many primitive races both in the past and at the present day. See as to old German law, Esmein, Mélanges, p. 13, and authorities there cited. Consult also Bourcart (trad. Muirhead), p. 579, and authorities there cited, and in a contrary sense, Cuq, Inst. Jurid. p. 208 ; Karlowa, Röm. RG. ii. pp. 158-161.]

NOTE D. (See § 34, note 12.)

In the early sacramental procedure each party had to deposit his stake before he could be heard on the question at issue; but afterwards he only gave security for its payment in the event of a judgment declaring him to have been in the wrong. Jhering ("Reich und Arm im altröm. Civil-prozess," in his Scherz und Ernst, p. 175 sq.) regards this change of practice as a signal triumph of popular legislation. He maintains that not only the tendency but the motive of the arrangements of the judicial procedure, both by sacrament (§ 34) and manus injectio (§ 36), were to throw obstacles in the way of a poor man asserting or defending his rights, by making deposit of a considerable sum of money in the one case, and the finding of a vindex in the other, a condition precedent of his plaint or defence; that both these procedures were instruments for defeating the ends of justice when a rich man set himself in opposition to a poor one. This was in time amended in the case of manus injectio by allowing the party against whom it was employed to defend himself in most cases in propria persona, i.e. without a vindex; and in that of the sacramental procedure by its being held sufficient for the parties to give sureties for the summa or poena sacramenti, which was exacted only from him who was eventually unsuccessful. Jhering ascribes the latter amendment to a law partially preserved by Festus (Bruns, p. 43), passed on the proposal of one L. Papirius, a tribune of the people, and which cannot have been earlier than the sixth century, appointing three officials to collect and adjudicate upon sacramental penalties (sacramenta exigunto judicanteque);¹ and he understands by these words that not only were they to exact the penalties, but that, disregarding the figures of 500 or 50 asses which had been named in the provocatio, they were to determine in each particular case what the amount should be. He identifies this Papirian law with one of the same name mentioned by Pliny (H. N. 33, § 46), but which most recent writers assign to the year 665, reducing the weight of the copper as to half an ounce ; (it had been reduced in 485 from 1 lb. to 4 oz., about 513 to 2 oz., and in 537 to 1 oz.) He thus makes the lex Papiria a statute of considerable scope, at once postponing the collection of the sacramentum until the end of the suit, empowering the IIIviri capitales to say what should be its amount, and facilitating its payment by reducing the value of the as. But the purpose of this last provision is more likely to have been the alleviation of the position of borrowers ; and as regards the other two, the text preserved by Festus seems rather to indicate that the new officials in exaction and judgment—and what is meant by the judicatio is far from clear—were to follow already existing practice. Be this as it may, and the date of the change earlier than that assigned to it by Jhering, there can be no question of its importance or doubt of the benefit it must have conferred on poor litigants.

¹ [This resembles the provision in Lex Malacitana, cap. 66, "quaeque multae non erunt injustae a decurionibus conscriptivae judicatae, eas multas Ilviri in publicum municipum eius municipii redigunto." Compare also Lex Col. Genet. Jul. cap. 61, "eiusque pecuniae . . . Ilviro quive j. d. p. exactio judicatioque esto."]

NOTE E. (See § 34, note 19)

Varro, De L. L. v. 180 (Bruns, p. 303), says that even after the summa sacramenti had been converted into money, it was deposited ad pontem,—some bridge, he does not say which, where there was a sacred “pound.” (Curiously enough, the Irish spelling of “pound” is “pont” ; Skeat’s Etym. Dict. v. “Pound.”) A most ingenious and plausible explanation was suggested by Danz in 1867, in the Z. f. RG. vol. vi. p. 359. Recalling the facts that there had been discovered in the Tiber-island sacella of Jupiter Jurarius and Dius Fidius, the two deities to whom solemn oaths were usually addressed, and that the island was spoken of as “inter duos pontes,” because connected with both banks of the river by bridges bearing no particular names, he suggested that the island may have been the spot to which disputants resorted to make their sacramenta, and that the cattle, sheep, or money were deposited in a place for the purpose before the bridge was crossed. Much the same explanation was offered by Huschke two years later in his book Das alte römische Jahr (Breslau, 1869), p. 360, apparently without being aware of Danz’s speculation. He adds, on the authority of the Iguvine Tables, that while bullocks were offered to Jupiter, only sheep were offered to Dius Fidius. The island, he thinks, must have been selected as neutral ground, to which all parties might have access, and which obviated intrusion into the temples of the two gods on the Capitol and Quirinal respectively. And it is to its use as the scene of the sacramental procedure that he attributes its name of “holy island,” rather than to the fact of its having been the seat of the temple of Aesculapius. Huschke recurs to and enforces this view in his Multa und Sacramentum (1874), p. 410, where he does refer to Danz’s paper.

NOTE F. (See § 36, note 13)

Another argument in favour of the view that the aeris confessi of the XII Tables referred to nexal debt occurred to me after the text was in type. It is derived from the language of cap. lxi. of the Lex Coloniae Juliae Genetivae of the year of Rome 710 (Bruns, p. 111): "Judicati jure manus injectio esto. . . . Vindex arbitratus Iiviri quive jure dicundo praeerit locuples esto. Ni vindicem dabit judicatumve faciet, secum ducito. Jure civili vinctum habeto," etc. The aeris confessi of the Tables does not reappear; but no one contends that the manus injectio authorised by the colonial statute did not apply to the in jure confessus. If it did apply to him, it must have been because he was included in the term judicatus. The aeris confessi no doubt was omitted because it applied to nexal debtors, against whom manus injectio had been prohibited by the Poetilian law.

NOTE G. (See § 36, note 23)

"The idea of responsibility (Haftung) is primarily one of answering with life and limb; in primitive times responsibility in any other way is inconceivable. Hence the debtor who does not pay falls straightway into the hands of his creditor, who may hold him as a slave, may sell him into slavery, may kill him. But this last alternative is ere long subjected to some modification. The members of the body have very soon each its own value put upon it, in order that for every case of injury there may be a fixed and certain composition. This point reached, a creditor must no longer cut from his debtor's body more than necessary—than is a proper equivalent for the wrong he has sustained; and, if there be several concurring creditors, none must cut more than corresponds to his own claim. So we find it put in the extant remains of old Scandinavian law. In contrast it may be said to have been a step in advance when the Roman XII Tables made an end of this detestable calculation, by declaring that in such a case it should be of no moment whether one or more creditors cut away more or less than his or their proper share; they might hack their debtor in pieces just as they pleased; the law was no longer to be encumbered with details: si plus minusve secuerunt se fraude esto. So long as the sequence of ideas in the world's history was undiscovered, this provision of the Tables was naturally beyond comprehension. And yet it is somewhat surprising that no one should have lighted on the meaning of it when one thinks of all the hypotheses that have been suggested to explain it, but that really explain nothing; hypotheses so multitudinous that there fails from the list of them this only,—that the ancient Romans must have been anthropophagi!

"It is a step further in advance when the law stops short of killing a debtor, and contents itself with pains and tortures. In the invention of such punitive devices mankind has given signal proofs of its ingenuity,—expulsion from the body social, infamy in every shape, corporal punishment, incarceration. All these fell to the lot of the unfortunate debtor. If he was dead, his creditor seized even his poor remains. To deprive a debtor's body of a peaceful grave was a custom among the Egyptians that survived into the Christian period. Even as late as the sixth century the emperors had to interfere to suppress this horrible abuse ; and the legends alike of East and West held him in honour who ransomed an insolvent's corpse and gave it decent burial.

"In my work 'Shakespeare vor dem Forum der Jurisprudenz' I have shown in detail how those gruesome customs gradually disappeared,—how the development of the law step by step removed the foundations of the system ; and it is enough to refer to what is there said. I have shown there also the conservative element that for many a long year held that development of the law in check. The severities that attended insolvency were perpetuated through the medium of contract. When the old consequences of insolvency no longer resulted by direct operation of law, creditors began to make sure of them by clauses embodied in their agreements. If a debtor was no longer to fall ipso jure into the hands of his creditor, it was necessary that he should expressly impledge himself. He pledged his body, his freedom, his honour, even the salvation of his soul. The clause inserted in the contract might prescribe forfeiture by the debtor of a pound of flesh,—a figure that has become typical for all times through the genius of the great dramatist. Or it might be one whereby the debtor subjected himself, in the event of non-payment, to some indignity, or to outlawry, or even to excommunication," etc. etc. Kohler, Das Recht als Culturerscheinung, Würzburg, 1885, p. 17 sq.

NOTE H. (See § 50, note 20 ; § 53, note 16)

Gaius says that, while it was on all hands admitted that there could be transcription of a book-debt from one person to another only between citizens, it was a matter of dispute in the empire whether there might not be transcription from thing to person even between peregrins, seeing it proceeded on an antecedent liability under a juris gentium obligation. One might suppose from the anecdote told by Cicero (De Off. iii. 14, §§ 58-60) of C. Canius and Pythius, the Syracusan banker, that it was in use by peregrins in his time (unless indeed Pythius, though living in a province, was in fact a citizen). It affords a capital illustration of the effect of the nomen. Hearing that Canius was in search of a country-house, Pythius, who owned one, invited him to dine with him a day or two afterwards. In the meantime he bespoke some fishermen to be then in the bay (which was finless) with some boats well filled with fish, which, on a given signal, they were to bring ashore before the eyes of his guest, as if just caught ; while he arranged with some huntsmen to be in the vicinity, well furnished with game, which they were to bring to the house while Canius was sipping his wine, pretending it had been newly killed in the woods. The bait took. A place with such attractions was just what Canius wanted. Would Pythius sell it ? He might have any price he liked ; and so on, and so on, until Pythius made pretence of reluctant consent. Naturally, Canius had not the money with him ; but the astute Pythius knew very well that if he left the price standing until his guest had discovered the fraud, he would never have any chance of fingering it.

So he produced his books and transcribed the debt at once : nomina facit, negotium conficit. He thereby made Canius his debtor, not for the price of a house and grounds, but for money booked against him, recoverable by an actio certae creditae pecuniae ; and as the exceptio and actio doli had not yet been invented, there was no means by which Canius could plead the fraud as an equitable defence, or have reparation for the deceit of which he had been the victim.

A propos of this incident, there is a controversy as to the authorship and date of the exceptio doli. Cicero (l. c. § 60) says that Canius had no answer to any action by Pythius upon the nomen, and no action at his own hand for having it annulled or for obtaining damages, because Aquilius Gallus had not yet introduced his formulae de dolo. It is inconceivable to what he refers in thus employing the plural if not to the exceptio doli and actio de dolo ; and, if this be what he means, then, speaking as he does of what had been done under his own eyes by his friend and colleague in the praetorship, it is difficult to question his testimony. From a passage of Ulpian's, however, in Dig. xlv. 4. 4, § 33, in which he says that a certain praetor whom he calls Cassius had not considered it needful to publish any metus causa exceptio, as he thought the exceptio doli sufficiently general to embrace intimidation as well as fraud, some civilians draw the inference that, while Aquilius Gallus may have invented the actio de dolo, Cassius was the author of the exceptio doli. But the inference is quite as legitimate that what Ulpian meant was while Cassius introduced the actio quod metus causa (which, unlike the actio de dolo, lay not only against the actual wrong-doer, but also against third parties who had profited by his wrong-doing), he thought a corresponding exception unnecessary, the already existing exceptio doli being sufficient for the purpose. This is the view adopted by Hänel, "die actio und exceptio doli," in the Archiv d. Civ. Praxis, vol. xii. pp. 410 sq., and Schneider, "die actio doli mali," in his Subsidiäre Klagen des röm. Rechts (Rostock, 1834), pp. 314 sq. The other view is espoused by Rudorff, "die Octavianische Formel," in the Z. f. gesch. RW. vol. xii. pp. 166 sq., and Vangerow in his Lehrb. d. Pandekten, 7th ed. vol. i. pp. 318 sq. The reasoning of these two very distinguished jurists is far from convincing. They say the exceptio doli was introduced long before the time of Aquilius. But that exceptio was exactly what Canius stood in need of when sued upon the literal contract into which Pythius had beguiled him ; if it had been introduced as early as Rudorff and Vangerow imagine, why should Cicero say Canius was helpless because Aquilius had not yet introduced his formulae de dolo ? May it not be that Cassius is a mistake for Gallus ? According to Augustinus (De nominib. jurisconsultor. Tarragona, 1579, col. 241, 242) the name thus shortened occurs more frequently in the Digest than the full name Aquilius Gallus (or Gallus Aquilius). It is not an improbable mistake in transcript ; for in early MSS. G and C are often almost indistinguishable, and long s frequently resembles l. This is so even in the Florentine Codex. [There was apparently a P. Cassius who was one of the praetors in the same year as Cicero and Aquilius Gallus. On the date of the actio and exceptio doli, see Girard, p. 411, n. 4.]

EDITOR'S APPENDIX

NOTE a. (See § 1, note 1)

HISTORICAL EPOCHS IN ROMAN LAW

Most modern writers on the history of the Roman Law, who have dealt with the internal development of the law as well as its external sources, have for the purpose of systematic treatment divided the subject into historic periods. Gibbon seems to have been the first to suggest this mode of treatment. In the 44th chapter of his Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire, he gives a threefold division for the period from the XII Tables to Justinian, viz. 1st, from the XII Tables to the birth of Cicero (i.e. from 303 U.C. to 648 U.C.); 2nd, from the birth of Cicero to the reign of Alexander Severus (i.e. 648 U.C. to 235 A.D.); and, 3rd, from Alexander Severus to the commencement of the reign of Justinian. He has justified this arrangement on the ground that thereby the history of the law is divided into periods of nearly equal length (about 300 years), which, with the pre-decemviral period, represent respectively the infancy, the adolescence, the maturity, and the decline of the law. This arrangement of Gibbon has been followed by some writers (notably by Hugo in his Lehrbuch der Rechtsgeschichte), but a good many have varied from it to a greater or less extent. It is now generally admitted that neither the birth of Cicero nor the reign of Alexander Severus are quite appropriate as epochs, as they do not mark any changes of special significance either in the internal or external development of the law, and it is more usual to find substituted for them the assumption of supreme power by Augustus and the reign of Diocletian or of Constantine respectively.

One of the most recent writers on the subject, M. Voigt, in his Römische Rechtsgeschichte, has adopted the following arrangement. Beginning with the XII Tables, for he holds that the period antecedent thereto is without proper materials for historic treatment, he makes the following fourfold division of the subject matter, viz. 1st, from the XII Tables to the enactment of the lex Aebutia, a statute whose date is uncertain but which he fixes between the years 513-517 U.C.; 2nd, from the lex Aebutia to the commencement of the empire under Augustus; 3rd, from Augustus to the division of the empire under Diocletian (305 A.D.); and, 4th, from Diocletian to the death of Justinian in 565 A.D.¹ The arrangement into five epochs adopted by Professor Muirhead in this work is, as regards the earlier periods, somewhat different from that of other writers, but is as convenient as any that has been suggested for the treatment of the subject.

NOTE b. (See § 29, note 1)

CAPITIS DEMINUTIO

Although the doctrine of capitis deminutio has been discussed in the most exhaustive manner by modern civilians, it cannot yet be said that there is anything like agreement regarding its import, or that the difficulties occasioned by some of the texts in the law sources have been surmounted. Of the many theories that have been brought forward it is doubtful if any one can be said to be more generally accepted than another. Nor is it likely that any solution of the difficulties will ever find universal acceptance, so vague and obscure on some points is the language of the classical jurists.

In primitive societies, as is well known, the currency of legal terms is exceedingly small. Ideas of an abstract or reflective kind are scarcely realised, or capable of being expressed. Accordingly, one finds that symbols of a simple and obvious character are seized upon to express the as yet scarcely conscious notions of abstract rules. Among the early Romans there were a variety of such symbols, and two of the commonest were manus and caput. Manus, the hand; and caput, the head: the former being used to express the notions both of power and property (potestas and dominium), the latter to express first the notion of an individual (homo, etc.), and then that of the freedom of an individual within either the state or the family.

This latter metaphorical signification of caput was acquired, as Mommsen has pointed out (Römisches Staatsrecht, iii. p. 8), at an early period in Roman history. First, in relation to public law, it meant civitas in a subjective sense, representing freedom of the individual within the State, or, in other words, the capacity of an individual to exercise the rights of citizenship. All inhabitants of Rome who were not cives were originally without caput. Slaves and ordinary peregrini were in this position. Hence the maxim, "Servus nullum caput habet." So iudicium capitis and poena capitis meant respectively an action involving a man's right of citizenship, and the penalty which deprived him of it. Life or liberty might also be involved in the action or penalty, but that was immaterial; the man who lost his citizenship was regarded as no longer free. Not till the ius gentium began to be recognised as a system was any clear distinction between libertas and civitas admitted by Roman law. In its second signification—viz. within the sphere of private rights, caput meant the state of independence of an individual, or freedom from subjection to another man's ius or potestas (sui iuris). It implied, accordingly, capacity to enjoy the rights of agnatio and gentilitas. Of these two significations it is impossible to say which is the older; probably they both belong to a period when the State was a gentile organisation. A person might possess caput in the first sense without possessing it in the second (e.g. a filiusfamilias), but not vice versa.

¹ Voigt, Röm. RG. pp. 5, 6. See also Cuq, Les Institutions juridiques des Romains, pp. xxviii. sq., who makes some judicious observations upon the successive historic phases of the law.

The expression "capitis deminutio" originally meant loss of caput in either of the foregoing senses. It did not mean, as is sometimes maintained, diminution or lessening, but always strictly loss of caput.¹ Loss of civitas constituted cap. dem. magna, loss of independence as regards private rights constituted cap. dem. minor. The jurists of the late republic or early empire, apparently from a theoretic love of symmetry and their well-known fondness for threefold classifications, developed this original notion of cap. dem. and divided it into three kinds, corresponding to their classification of persons. These were (1) cap. dem. maxima (or magna), which occurred in cases where a person lost his liberty; (2) cap. dem. media (or minor), where a person lost his citizenship without losing liberty; and (3) cap. dem. minima, where a person while retaining libertas and civitas lost his existing family rights. The cap. dem. maxima involved the other two, and the cap. dem. media involved the third (see Inst. i. 16; Dig. iv. 5, fr. 11; cf. Dig. xxxviii. 17, fr. 1, § 8). The idea probably in the minds of the jurists was that as mere loss of citizenship carried with it, quoad the individual, loss of rights under the jus civile, but left unaffected juris gentium rights within the state, loss of liberty, destroying as it did rights both under the jus civile and the jus gentium, was a greater cap. dem. This classification must have been unknown to the early law, which ignored jus gentium as part of the jus Romanorum. Moreover, in the law of Justinian it ceased in great measure to have practical significance, seeing that liberty and citizenship after Caracalla's constitution had become almost coextensive, and change of family through manus and mancipium had gone wholly into desuetude, and the forms and effect of emancipation and adoption fundamentally altered.

There are two other terms which have a close connection with caput which may here be noticed. These are status and existimatio. The former of these is a term which has been described by Dr. Hunter as much given to "wandering at large." In a general sense it means simply state or condition in which an individual is placed, but in a special juristic sense it is used by the classical jurists as synonymous with caput, so far, at any rate, as that term has application to private law (see Kuntze, Excursus, p. 369). Mr. Poste, in his edition of Gaius (p. 113), rightly enough translates cap. dem. as loss of status, where the passage in Gaius (i. 158) obviously refers to cap. dem. minima. On the other hand, existimatio, though sometimes loosely employed as an equivalent to caput and status (e.g. Dig. l. 16, fr. 103 ; Cic. p. Roscio, viii. 31), differs materially from them. It meant in a general sense personal dignity or honour (bona fama), but in a strict legal sense the sum of those rights and privileges which might be enjoyed by every citizen as such. Existimationis minutio indicated loss of honour (infamia) arising from personal conduct, carrying with it by the sanction of the law loss of civil rights to a greater or less extent. It implied in other words moral censure which carried with it legal punishment (see Greenidge, "Infamia" in the Roman Law, p. 5 sq.). Loss of existimatio, however, did not necessarily involve loss of caput nor vice versa. This is expressly stated by Justinian:—"Quibus autem dignitas magis quam status permutatur, capite non minuuntur ; et ideo Senatu motum capite non minui constat" (Inst. i. 16, 5).

¹ This is Mommsen's view. Should the spelling be deminutio or diminutio? The MSS. vary, that of the Gaian Codex having both forms; but the better opinion is that deminutio is the oldest form, and that between it and diminutio there was no original difference of meaning. By the classical jurists minutio is frequently used as the equivalent of deminutio. It is a suggestion of Heineccius (Antiq. Rom. Synt. i. 16, sec. 1) that caput was early used to signify the entry in the censorial register of a citizen's name, etc., and that when the name was erased there was said to be capitis deminutio. See Cuq, p. 200.

The occasions on which a man might suffer cap. dem. maxima and media are sufficiently obvious, and present little difficulty. It is not disputed that they always imply destruction or total loss of liberty and citizenship, one or both as the case may be (cf. supra, p. 122). But it is different with cap. dem. minima. As regards it, the doctrine which our author criticises (p. 123) is that of Savigny (following Niebuhr). Savigny held that c. d. minima, like the other two classes, always involved a change of jural capacity in the individual in deterius, as by one sui iuris becoming alieni iuris, or one in potestate or in manu becoming in causa mancipii. This degradation of legal capacity is patent in such cases as a paterfamilias being adrogated, or a woman sui iuris being married cum conventione in manum. Such persons come under the power of their adrogator or husband, and thereby lose their previous caput, and are in a worse position jurally than before. There were some analogous cases, such as erroris causae probatio and legitimatio, in the later law, though these are nowhere referred to in the texts in connection with cap. dem. minima. But in the case of a filiusfamilias being adopted the position is not so plain. He undoubtedly, as the texts tell us, undergoes cap. dem., but he has only passed from one patria potestas to another. Savigny (System d. h. r. R. ii. p. 60, and Beil. p. 443) explains this case by the reason given by Paul in the Digest (iv. 5. 5, 1)—viz. that in adopting a son it was necessary to first place him in causa mancipii, he must be "in imaginariam servilem statum deductus." Emancipation is explained in the same way. By emancipation a child who has been in potestate is made sui iuris, and its legal capacity is thus obviously not made worse but improved. But in order to be emancipated he must first, like one adopted, pass in servilem statum. Now, these explanations are, as regards cap. dem. in adoption and emancipation, satisfactory enough. But a difficulty arises on this theory when applied to the children of an adrogatus and to a filiusfamilias being married cum manu, cases in which there is no suggestion of a preliminary status servilis. As to adrogation, Paul is cited in the Digest as saying (Dig. iv. 5. 3. pr.), "Liberos qui arrogatum parentem sequuntur placet minui caput cum in aliena potestate sint et cum familiam mutaverint."

The children of an adrogated person are transferred along with their paterfamilias by a sort of universal succession into the power of the adopter by the simple act of adrogation. Savigny, however, regarded this as an exceptional case, and reading the word placet in the passage just cited as meaning no more than a juristic opinion, to which Paul did not himself express adhesion, he held that it was not a settled doctrine that children of an adrogatus did undergo capital diminution. Savigny also denied that a filiafamilias married cum manu underwent cap. dem., despite the fact that Gaius (i. 162) and Ulpian state quite generally that loss of caput was a consequence of coemptionate marriage. The arguments of Savigny are strongly controverted by Puchta (Instit. ii. p. 469) and Vangerow (Pandekten, i. sec. 34, anm. 1), among others, as inconsistent with the just-mentioned texts as well as with other evidence in the law sources, and they have not, on the whole, found many supporters among recent writers. The term placet in the passage cited from Paul must be read as expressing the common doctrine of the jurists, and the unqualified statement of Gaius as to coemptio cannot be explained away.

In Puchta's view capitis deminutio minima in the classical law meant no more nor less than familiae mutatio (meaning by familia the agnatic family), and it occurred in every case where a person, without his civic status being affected, lost his rights in his agnatic circle. This is, so far, in accordance with the passage above cited from Paul, where, it will be observed, he refers to mutation of the familia as one of the grounds on which the children of an adrogatus were held to suffer cap. dem., and for most other cases Puchta's test also holds good, and is, on the whole, more satisfactory than Savigny's. It is also in accord, so far, with the definition of Gaius—viz. "prioris status permutatio." But, none the less, this theory also meets with some serious difficulties. Apart from the apparently meaningless distinction it would create between the least and the two greater diminutions of caput, there are certain textual objections. When a son born in confarreate marriage was consecrated as flamen Dialis, or when a filiafamilias was taken for the office of virgo vestalis, he and she respectively became thereupon sui iuris. It is clearly stated by Gaius and Ulpian that the flamen and vestal virgin were, in virtue of their office, freed from patria potestas without any emancipation. Ulpian (Frag. x. § 5) says: "In potestate parentum esse desinunt et hi qui flamines Diales inaugurantur et quae virgines Vestae capiuntur." But it is equally certain that in neither case was there any capitis deminutio. Gaius (iii. 114) and Aulus Gellius (N. A. i. 12, 18) assure us of this. To meet this difficulty Puchta, and those who adopt his theory (e.g. Moyle, Justinian's Institutes, 1st excursus), while admitting that the flamens and vestal virgins were, ipso iure, freed from patria potestas, either decline to admit that they passed out of their agnatic family, so as to give rise to mutatio familiae in the full sense, or else they regard the cases as anomalous. But the view that the flamen and vestal virgin did not change their agnatic family seems untenable; the great weight of authority is against it (see Savigny, ut supra; Mommsen, R. SR. iii. p. 43; Madvig, Verfassung und Verwaltung des R. S. ii. 675). The whole basis of family rights rests on patria potestas; no one could be released from it without terminating at the same time both his family proprio jure and his agnatic kinship.

It will be observed that according to Muirhead (p. 123), who accepts generally Puchta's theory, the flamines and virgines vestales did become divested of all their family rights ; but, he adds, they were regarded as having entered, by their consecration to the gods, into a divine family. This, however, is an explanation which does not get rid of the difficulty. There is no such thing as a divine family in contemplation of law ; but even, on that assumption, we have mutatio familiae without capitis deminutio. It may of course be that these cases were treated merely as special exceptions to the general rule, but such an explanation is to be avoided if possible. Voigt (XII Tafeln, ii. p. 26 n.) explains them as belonging to fas rather than ius, and holds that cap. dem. had no application in matters relating to fas ; but this is a mere assumption.

There are some other theories which differ only slightly from that of Puchta, as, for instance, that of Böcking (Pandekten, sec. 58), who regards caput as the status of an individual, either as the head of a familia (proprio iure) or free member of such familia, and enjoying the legal capacity thereto attaching.

The most satisfactory theory seems to be that suggested by Mommsen, by which cap. dem. minima represents simply loss of previous status by an act of subjection of one person to another within the sphere of private law. Mommsen (Rom. SR. iii. p. 9) observes that cap. dem., in the view of the private law, is "der Uebertritt des privatrechtlichen freien Mannes in privatrechtliche Unfreiheit oder auch des privatrechtlichen unfreien Mannes in eine andere privatrechtliche Unfreiheit." Any citizen, therefore, who is by a juristic act brought under the power of another, whether it be under patria potestas, conjugal manus, or quasi-servile mancipium—incurs thereby c. d. minima. The only point apparently open to criticism on this theory is in relation to the alieno iuri subiecti, for they have, strictly speaking, no caput to lose. But assuming that the notion of c. d. was at first confined to the sui iuris, it would be quickly extended to those who had, so to speak, potential caput. Free persons alieni juris are sometimes said to have caput in familia in contrast with slaves (cf. the use of the term noxa caput sequitur). The prominent idea in the minds of the jurists was the act of subjection to the power of a stranger. Whatever free citizen underwent that (no matter what may have been his previous condition as member of a familia) was capite diminutus. In other words, all that was required was that there be an act of subjection to another's power, temporary or permanent. Where there was a change of family without such subjection there was no capital diminution. Applying this to the various cases that may arise, it would follow that death of one's paterfamilias, natural or civil, or consecration of a filiafamilias as vestal virgin, or of a filiusfamilias as flamen, although terminating patria potestas (and, as regards the two latter, terminating the agnatic family also), causes no loss of caput because there has been no act of subjection to ius alienum. But, on the other hand, in adrogation there is such loss, both as regards the adrogee and his children, because both are by the act of adrogation made subject to the headship of the adrogator. Paul may have had this in view when he said (Dig. iv. 5, fr. 3) that the children of an adrogatus underwent cap. dem. by adrogation, "cum in aliena potestate sint." Similarly, in the case of a non-paying debtor being addicted to his creditor and so placed in causa mancipii and, in the later empire, in the case of a child being legitimated. So, in emancipation of a filiusfamilias, the fact that the creation of a temporary condition of mancipium must take place as a preliminary step satisfies the test of subjection to another's power. And the adoption of a filiusfamilias stands in the same position as emancipation, except that here there is a double act of subjection—the filius being first placed in mancipio and thereafter in patria potestate. Again, in marriage cum manu, the wife from having been either sui juris or filiusfamilias becomes subject to the manus of the husband, and thereby loses caput. Or we may have a case of a wife in manu being freed from it by the husband. In this case if the marriage have been by coemptio the dissolution of manus can only take place by remancipation, and this involves the temporary placing of the wife in causa mancipii. As to the dissolution of marriage in a confarreate marriage by diffareatio the texts are silent. In Gaius' time confarreatio had ceased to create manus except quoad sacra. In all these cases, then, the test of subjection holds good.¹ But, of course, in all of them caput was lost only in relation to private rights; in the view of public law it was unaffected.

Some recent writers have discussed with great minuteness the doctrine of capitis deminutio, and have thrown interesting light upon it.² According to Cohn and H. Krüger the original use of the phrase capitis deminutio was confined to cap. dem. minima,—and it was not till the beginning of the empire that it was applied to the loss of caput in the sense of either citizenship or liberty. But in relation to cap. dem. minima, Krüger further holds that the phrase was originally applied only where there had been a conveyance of the subject of it by mancipation, with the effect, permanent or temporary, of reducing him to the quasi-servile condition of mancipium.³ Desserteaux, on the other hand, sees in the doctrine of cap. dem., historically considered, simply a generalisation of the effects of adrogation.⁴

¹ It cannot well be held that mere manumission e mancipio will, of itself, constitute cap. dem., as the Gaian MS. (i. § 162) seems to say. Accordingly, the text should be amended in some such way as Huschke (5th ed. p. 213) suggests. But assuming that it is to be taken literally, as Cohn (Beiträge, ii. 110 sq.) maintains, it would be a strong argument against the theory of Puchta.

² See Voigt (XII Tafeln, ii. 78), who adopts the theory of the original twofold classification of cap. dem. into magna and minor, and the works of H. Krüger, Cohn, and Karlowa, as cited on p. 121, n. 1; Desserteaux, Effets de l'adrogation, Paris, 1892.

³ Cf. review of his book by Kipp, Z. d. Sav. Stift. (R. A.), 1888, vol. ix. p. 159 sq.

⁴ See review by Audibert in Nouv. Rev. Hist. 1893, vol. x. p. 363.

NOTE c. (See § 30, note 69)

FORMS OF THEFT IN THE EARLY LAW

Furtum lance licioque conceptum, about which there was a provision in the XII Tables, but which was antiquated when Gaius wrote, is an interesting feature of ancient law. About its nature and origin, however, the sources give us the most meagre information, and accordingly it has been a favourite topic for speculation by writers of all periods. Various theories of the older civilians have been criticised in a monograph by Professor von Vangerow (De Furto concepto ex lege XII Tab., Heidelberg, 1845), and since Vangerow's time there has been no want of conjectures.

There is no dispute that furtum lance et licio was a solemn form of quest by an owner for articles stolen from him, and supposed to be concealed in another person's dwelling. Gaius (Inst. iii. § 192) says that it was required that the searcher "nudus quaerat linteo cinctus lancem habens." The term linteum he explains as meaning a cloth—consuti genus—by which necessarias partes tegerentur (i.e. a loin-cloth). Other ancient writers use the term licium instead of linteum. Thus A. Gellius (Noct. Att. xi. 18, 9) says, "furta quae per lancem liciumque concepta essent," and again (xvi. 10, 8), "furtorumque quaestio cum lance et licio." The term licium was sometimes applied to the short garment which the ancient Romans wore under their toga (leaving the legs and arms bare), and which indeed was their only garment when at work in the fields (= campestre). Accordingly it has been proposed by some writers to correct the MS. of Gaius by changing linteo into licio. But we meet with linteum in this sense in other writers, and, in particular, it seems to have been so used in religious rites. Huschke suggests (5th ed. of Gaius) the reading linteo licio. But whichever word be used, there is no doubt about Gaius' meaning, and there is no need to accept the opinion of some modern writers (e.g. Cuq, Inst. Jurid. p. 345, note 5), who charge Gaius with inaccuracy, in saying that the searcher was nudus save the loin-cloth. Gaius as a commentator on the XII Tables was particularly well acquainted with their provisions, and probably with the earlier treatises upon them (e.g. that of Sext. Aelius), and could hardly be mistaken. What was the reason of this rule requiring the searcher to go naked? The common explanation is that it was to prevent the searcher secreting the alleged stolen article about his person, which, in view of the heavy penalty to be paid in case of discovery, he might be tempted to do. Vangerow (op. cit.) surmises that it was intended by the Decemvirs as a protection to householders against unwarrantable search, as only those having serious grounds of suspicion would resort to so disagreeable a procedure as to appear naked in public. But a conjecture quite as probable as either of these is that of Von Jhering, who has seen in the rule a relic of old Aryan custom. We know from Aristophanes that a similar form of search existed in Greece (see supra, § 22, note 3), and it was also known to old German and Scandinavian law (see Grimm, Z. f. G. R. vol. ii. p. 91). According to Jhering (Vorgeschichte der Indoeuropäer, p. 15 sq.), the commonly received theory is meaningless, as the searcher's garments might easily have been examined beforehand, while it is hardly conceivable that the Decemvirs would have enacted a rule which would have tended to prevent self-respecting citizens from searching for their stolen goods. The loin-cloth was, in Jhering's view, just the ordinary garb of the early Aryans, as it may still be seen among the lower-class Hindoos, and its use in the house search by the Romans was thus the relic of what had been done by their ancestors, though its origin may have been wholly unknown to them.¹

Not less obscure than the purpose of the licium is that of the lanx or platter. Gaius (iii. § 193) frankly confesses that he was in doubt about it. He suggests two alternative hypotheses, viz. (1) to prevent the searcher, by his hands being occupied, from taking anything into the dwelling with him ; or (2) to enable him to carry away (openly) the article if found. But he seems to dispose of both of them by pointing out "neutrum eorum procedit si id quod quaeratur eius magnitudinis aut naturae sit ut neque subici neque ibi imponi possit." Festus, or rather Paulus Diaconus, s.v. lance et licio (Bruns, 4th ed. p. 270), says categorically, "Lance et licio dicebatur apud antiquos, quia qui furtum ibat quaerere in domo aliena, licio cinctus intrabat, lancemque ante oculos tenebat propter matrum familiae aut virginum praesentiam." This explanation, which, it will be noticed, corroborates Gaius as to the nudity of the searcher—for why otherwise should the face be hidden from the women?—is in accordance with the puerility of a number of the customs of uncivilised races, but it has not satisfied modern writers, especially those who seek for a rationale for primitive institutions. Various curious conjectures will be found noticed in the monograph of Vangerow above referred to. The most generally favoured theory is apparently that of Gaius' first alternative—Muirhead thinks it obvious (supra, p. 141)—viz. that the searcher having both hands occupied in holding the plate, suspicion of his bringing the stolen article with him might be excluded. This is so far supported by a gloss to the Turin MS. of the Institutes, in which it is said that the plate was held in both hands—"Nudus ingrediebatur discum fictilem in capite portans utrisque manibus detentus." A conjecture of Leist, Graeco-italische RG. p. 248 sq., which has attracted some attention, is of a different character. According to him the purpose of the platter was that the searcher might bring on it material for a libation to appease the household gods (Lares et Penates), whose sanctuary he was about to violate. The objection to this otherwise attractive conjecture is that it is wholly unsupported by evidence.²

The account given by Gaius (iii. §§ 191-193) of the relation of furtum lance licioque to furtum conceptum and furtum prohibitum has also given rise to difficulties, particularly as regards the penalties to be inflicted.

¹ This assumes that the home of the Aryans was in a warm climate.

² An anecdote of Macrobius (Saturn. i. 6) on furtum licio et lance is discussed in an interesting way by Esmein, Mélanges, pp. 237 sq. Esmein supports Leist's theory as to the lanx, and thinks also that the owner of the house had to take an oath that the thing stolen was not concealed in it.

The language of these passages is not clear, and there may be room for difference of opinion as to their true interpretation. But there is no need to charge Gaius with inaccuracy as Krüger has done (Z. d. Sav. Stift. vol. xv. pp. 291 sq.). The true meaning of the passages seems to be that the penalty for furtum lance et licio was prescribed by the XII Tables, and was the same as that for furtum manifestum. The actio furti concepti was, it is thought, later than the XII Tables, and was due to interpretatio of the jurists. When it is said by Gaius (§ 191) to be based on the Tables themselves, this is in accordance with a common habit of the jurists, of which we have a noted instance in the legitima tutela patronorum. Cf. Gai. iii. § 23 ; Wlassak, Processgesetze, i. p. 246, n. 12, and p. 259, n. 44.

The introduction of the simple actio furti concepti was to be expected, as with more civilised habits there would be a growing dislike to the search in the older form. There was no provision in the Tables, Gaius says in § 192, for the case of the owner of the house refusing to permit the search, and accordingly the praetors introduced the actio prohibiti with a fourfold penalty. Krüger (loc. cit.) thinks that the absence of a penalty for refusal to allow the search is inconceivable, but the answer is that the moral stigma attaching to such conduct would in early times be a sufficient deterrent. Probably at first such refusal was unknown ; it was only when moral sanctions began to lose their force that this happened, and then the praetors had to devise a remedy. For a different view as to furtum conceptum, see Jhering, op. cit. p. 16 ; cf. also Voigt, XII Tafeln, ii. pp. 567 sq.

NOTE d. (See § 53, note 14)

THE CONTRACT LITTERIS

Modern writers are much divided in opinion as to the characteristics of the literal obligation in the early jus civile. Since the publication of the first edition of this book a new theory has been propounded by Voigt, in a dissertation "Ueber die Bankiers, die Buchführung, und die Litteral-obligation der Römer" (Abhandl. d. K. S. Gesellschaft der Wissenschaften, 1887, vol. x. p. 515).¹ It has attracted considerable attention, and has been accepted by some writers of authority. According to Voigt the literal contract was borrowed by the Romans from the inhabitants of Latium, who in turn had taken it from the Greek communities of Southern Italy. Among these latter the methods of banking had been early established, and the bankers (trapezitae, argentarii) kept regular books for their accounts. Inter alia they kept a ledger or account current book (codex rationum mensae), and a special codex accepti et expensi in which loans and other debts were separately entered under the names (nomina) of their clients. Acting on this initiative, the Roman householders of the later republic kept a variety of books, and specially (1) a libellus patrimonii ; (2) a codex, or tabulae rationum, in which they entered all their business transactions, all items of outlay and receipt (e.g. by sales, purchases, etc.) ; and (3) a codex accepti et expensi, in which all their literal obligations (i.e. all transactions intended to have the effect of operating ipso facto a change on the state of their patrimonium) were entered. In this view the codex rationum was quite distinct from the codex accepti et expensi; it was the entry in the latter alone that constituted the literal contract; the entry in the former was only evidence of a transaction. When the creditor made an entry in the latter codex, he did so with the words "expensum fero" (hence expensilatio); it took the form of a fictitious loan to the debtor. On the other hand, the debtor made a corresponding entry in his codex, and in doing so he used the words "expensum refero." But entries in the codex accepti et expensi might be made for several purposes. Thus (a) to originate a literal contract (when it was strictly called expensilatio); (b) to novate an existing obligation (when the term nomina transcriptitia was applied); or (c) for extinguishing an existing literal obligation (when the term acceptilatio was applied). In (a) and (b) it was the posted entry in the creditor's codex that constituted the obligation (nomen); the corresponding entry in the codex of the debtor, though usual, was not essential. But the entry by the creditor could only be made with the sanction (jussus) of the debtor, original or delegated, though the notification of that jussus might be made in any informal way. In (c), on the other hand, it was the entry in the debtor's codex that was essential to discharge. The debtor made it, on the creditor's jussus, with the words acceptum fero, and the creditor made a corresponding entry in his codex (though this was not essential) with the words "acceptum refero." This theory, though ingenious, has not a few difficulties to contend with on the texts, and it has been adversely criticised by Niemeyer in Z. d. Sav. Stift. 1890, vol. xi. pp. 312 sq. For other views of the literal contract, more or less divergent, see Karlowa, Röm. RG. ii. pp. 746-757; Cuq, pp. 670-673; Girard, pp. 484 sq.; Schulin, Lehrbuch, § 76.

¹ See also Röm. RG. i. pp. 59-68.

The literal obligation of the Romans, whatever may have been its exact method, was certainly very peculiar, and would seem to us to have given dangerous scope for fraud. In modern practice entries in the books of bankers, merchants, etc., of debts due are treated as of great importance, but they never operate per se to constitute a debt. They are treated merely as evidence; testimonium præbent, like the nomina arcaria to which Gaius (iii. 131) refers. If the books have been kept regularly they will generally, if confirmed by oath of the creditor, be taken as conclusive proof of their contents, though it is always open to disprove them by habile evidence.

NOTE a. (See § 62, note 6)

THE NAME OF GAIUS

It has been more than once suggested that the complete absence of any reference to Gaius by any of his contemporaries or successors among the classical jurists may be due to the fact that he had another name or names by which he was known to them. Puchta (Institutionen, § 99, note cc.) refers to this, and says that the suggestion was at one time made that Gaius might be the same person as a certain Gabius Bassus, who is mentioned by Aulus Gellius (Noct. Att. ii. 4) and Macrobius (Saturn. i. 9). The latter speaks of this Bassus as governor of Pontus under Trajan. But, as Puchta observes, this suggested identity rests upon no basis of evidence whatever. More recently an endeavour has been made to identify Gaius with a certain Laelius Felix, who is also mentioned by Gellius (Noct. Att. xv. 27), and, if it be the same Laelius, twice cited in the Pandecta. Macrobius also refers to a M. Laelius, an augur, whom Huschke doubtfully identifies with Laelius Felix (see Roby, Introd. to Digest, p. clviii.). This attempt has been made with considerable ingenuity by a writer in the Cape Law Journal, February 1894. He arrives at the rather startling conclusion that the full name of the author of the Institutes was Gaius Laelius Felix, and that he was a freedman of some member of the gens Laelia. His main argument is that two passages in the Digest—viz. Dig. v. 4, fr. 3, and v. 3, fr. 43—in which Laelius is expressly cited by Paul, coincide in a remarkable way with two other Digest fragments attributed to Gaius. It is unnecessary to quote the texts; those who are curious about coincidences (for in any view there is nothing more) may turn to them. But in other respects the writer's arguments fail from lack of evidence. For surely if it be strange that Gaius is not quoted at all by any of the classical jurists, it would not much lessen our astonishment to find that he had been cited but twice by only one of them. In one of the passages indeed—viz. Dig. v. 4, fr. 3—Laelius is cited merely as authority for a statement of fact to which both Gaius and Julian bear evidence. Moreover, the conjecture in question involves, as the writer admits, two assumptions—(1) that Gaius was the praenomen of our jurist; and (2) that Laelius Felix had that praenomen. The first assumption is probably correct, though it is not universally admitted (see Huschke's Preface to his 5th ed. of Gaius). Gaius (Gavius) seems to have been sometimes used both as a nomen and also (cf. Paulus) as a cognomen. But the second assumption rests on no evidence beyond the fact that Gaius was a common praenomen of the Gens Laelia. It was not, however, the only one; the writer admits that Decimus was another, and the augur to whom Macrobius refers (Sat. i. 6, § 13) seems to have been called Marcus. Of the Laelius Felix cited by Paul we know absolutely nothing, except that Gellius tells us (if he be referring to the same Laelius) that he was author of a work, Ad Q. Mucium, from which he gives some extracts.

The veil of obscurity, therefore, that enshrouds Gaius' personality still remains to be lifted. That he has never been cited by any of the classical jurists is practically certain, for it is now generally admitted that the reference by Pomponius in Dig. xlv. 3, fr. 39, is to Cassius, one of the leaders of the Sabinian school (see Huschke, Preface to his 5th ed. of Gaius; Puchta, Inst. i. § 99 r.; supra, p. 301, n. 6). Accordingly the only satisfactory explanation of what seems a strange silence of the jurists regarding one who in the later empire became so great an authority is that Gaius was not a juris conditor, having never obtained the jus respondendi, and that he never held public office. This is the view taken by Muirhead (supra, p. 301) and by most recent civilians, and the terms of the Valentinianian Law of Citations strongly confirm it. Gaius, in short, was in all probability, as has been frequently said, merely a successful writer and teacher of law either at Rome or in Asia Minor; most probably a native of Asia Minor, who wrote and taught at Rome. None of the great imperial jurists, whose works are cited in the Digest, would regard a person in such a position as an authority, though some of them probably did not hesitate to borrow from his works in preparing their own treatises.

RELIQUIAE XII TABULARUM QUAE EXTANT OMNES¹

TABULA I

1. SI IN IUS VOCAT, ITO. NI IT, ANTESTAMINO ; IGITUR EM CAPITO.²
- 2 SI CALVITUR PEDEMVE STRUIT, MANUM ENDO IACTO.³
3. SI MORBUS AEVITASVE VITIUM ESCIT (QUI IN IUS VOCABIT)
IUMENTUM DATO. SI NOLET, AR CERAM NE STERNITO.⁴
4. ADSIDUO VINDE X ADSIDUUS ESTO ; PROLETARIO IAM CIVI QUIS
VOLET VINDE X ESTO.⁵
5. NEX . . . FORTI SANATI . . .⁶
6. REM UBI PACUNT, ORATO.⁷
7. NI PACUNT, IN COMITIO AUT IN FORO ANTE MERIDIEM CAUSSAM
COICIUNTO. QUOM PERORANTO AMBO PRAESENTES.⁸

¹ It has been thought sufficient to give only a few leading references to passages in the sources illustrating the fragments. For additional authorities and for various readings a general reference is made to Bruns, Fontes Iuris, 6th ed. (cura Mommsen and Gradenwitz), 1893 ; to Voigt, XII Tafeln, vol. i. p. 693 sq. ; and to Wordsworth's Fragments and Specimens of Early Latin, p. 513 sq. The version given is that of Schoell as adopted by Bruns.

² Cic. de Leg. ii. 4, 9 ; Gellius, xx. 1, 25 ; Festus, s.v. "em," "igitur" ; supra, p. 174.

³ Fest. s.v. "struere" and "pedem struit" ; Dig. l. 16, 233 pr. ; supra, p. 174, n. 7.

⁴ Gell. xx. 1, 25 ; Varro, de L. L. v. 140 ; Fest. s.v. "escit" ; supra, p. 175.

⁵ Cic. Top. 2, 10 ; Gell. xvi. 10, 5 ; Fest. s.v. "adsiduus," "vindex." It is thought that this law should be placed in Table III, but Mommsen and Gradenwitz (6th ed. of Bruns) have retained it in Table I. It is doubtful in what respect a vindex was required in the in ius vocatio. See supra, p. 192, n. 5 ; cf. Dig. ii. 4, 22, § 1 ; Gai. iv. 46 ; Lenel, Ed. Perp. p. 54 ; Wlassak, Prozessgesetze, i. p. 102, n. 34 ; Voigt, XII Tafeln, i. p. 578 and p. 701 n.

⁶ Fest. s.v. "Sanates," "Forctes" ; Gell. xvi. 10, 8 ; cf. Voigt, Tab. XI, 6 ; supra, p. 107, n. 12.

⁷ On pagunt for pacunt see Priscian, de A. G. x. 5, 32. Voigt places this and the three succeeding laws in Tab. II.

⁸ Quinct. i. 6 ; Gell. xvii. 2, 10 ; see Mommsen's note in 6th ed. of Bruns, p. 19.

8. POST MERIDIEM PRAESENTI LITEM ADDICTO.⁹
 9. SI AMBO PRAESENTES, SOLIS OCCASUS SUPREMA TEMPESTAS ESTO.¹⁰
 10. VADES . . . SUBVADES.¹¹

TABULA II

1. De rebus M aeris plurisve D assibus, de minoris vero L assibus sacramento contendebatur; nam ita lege XII tab. cautum erat. [At] si de libertate hominis controversia erat, etsi pretiosissimus homo esset, tamen ut L assibus sacramento contenderetur eadem lege cautum est (Gaius, iv. 14).

2. MORBUS SONTICUS, AUT STATUS DIES CUM HOSTE, QUID HORUM FUIT VITIUM IUDICI ARBITROVE REOVE, EO DIES DIFFENSUS ESTO.¹

3. CUI TESTIMONIUM DEFUERIT, IS TERTIIS DIEBUS OB PORTUM OBVAGULATUM ITO.²

TABULA III

1. AERIS CONFESSI REBUSQUE IURE IUDICATIS XXX DIES IUSTI SUNTO.¹

2. POST DEINDE MANUS INIECTIO ESTO. IN IUS DUCITO.²

3. NI IUDICATUM FACIT AUT QUIS ENDO EO IN IURE VINDICIT, SECUM DUCITO, VINCITO AUT NERVO AUT COMPEDIBUS XV PONDO, NE MINORE, AUT SI VOLET MAIORE, VINCITO.³

4. SI VOLET SUO VIVITO. NI SUO VIVIT, QUI EUM VINCTUM HABEBIT, LIBRAS FARRIS ENDO DIES DATO. SI VOLET PLUS DATO.⁴

5. Erat autem ius interea paciscendi, ac nisi pacti forent, habebantur in vinculis dies sexaginta. Inter eos dies, trinis nundinis continuis, ad praetorum in comitium producebantur, quantaque pecuniae iudicati essent, praedicabatur. Tertiis autem nundinis capite poenas dabant, aut trans Tiberim peragre venum ibant (Gellius, xx. i. 46-47).⁵

⁹ References in preceding note.

¹⁰ Gell. l.c.; Fest. s.v. "suppreum"; Macrobius, Sat. i. 3, 14. Suprema tempestas here refers to the time of adjournment. See Voigt, XII Taf. i. p. 515, n. 11. The Romans at the time the Tables were published had no definite divisions of the astronomical day; they reckoned by the rising and the setting of the sun. See Jhering, Vorgesch. d. Indoeurop. p. 152.

¹¹ Gell. xvi. 10, 8; cf. Voigt, Tab. V, 14; Bruns (6th ed.), p. 19.

¹ Dig. ii. 11, 2, § 3; Gell. xx. 1, 27; Fest. s.v. "Sonticum morbum" and "Reus"; Cuius, Inst. Jurid. i. 401. Mommsen prefers diffissus to diffensus, but the Codex of Festus has the latter.

² Cf. Voigt, Tab. I, 2; Fest. s.v. "portum," "vagulatio."

³ Gell. xx. 1, 42; cf. Gell. xv. 13, 11; Dig. xlii. 1, 4, § 5; supra, p. 190 sq.

⁴ Gell. xx. 1, 43; cf. Gai. iv. 21; supra, p. 191 sq.

⁵ Gell. xx. 1, 44; cf. Fest. s.v. "nervo"; Liv. viii. 28, 8; supra, p. 191, n. 3. On the words in jure, see Mommsen's note in 6th ed. of Bruns.

⁶ Gell. xx. 1, 45; see Dig. l. 16, 234, § 2.

⁷ See supra, p. 191 sq.

6. TERTIIS NUNDINIS PARTIS SECANTO. SI PLUS MINUSVE SECURRUNT, SE FRAUDE ESTO.⁶

7. ADVERSUS HOSTEM AETERNA AUCTORITAS [ESTO].⁷

TABULA IV

1. Deinde quom esset cito necatus tamquam ex XII tab. insignis ad deformitatem puer (Cic. de Leg. iii. 8, 19).¹

2. SI PATER FILIUM TER VENUM DUUIT, FILIUS A PATRE LIBER ESTO.²

3. Illam suam suas res sibi habere iussit, ex XII tab. claves ademit, exegit (Cic. Philip. ii. 28, 69).³

4. . . . Comperi: feminam—in undecimo mense post mariti mortem peperisse, factumque esse negotium, quasi marito mortuo postea concepisset, quoniam decemviri in decem mensibus gigni hominem, non in undecimo scripsissent (Gellius, iii. 16, 12).⁴

TABULA V

1. Veteres—voluerunt feminas, etiamsi perfectae aetatis sint, propter animi levitatem in tutela esse, . . . exceptis virginibus Vestalibus, quas etiam veteres in honorem sacerdotii liberas esse voluerunt: itaque etiam lege XII tab. cautum est (Gaius, i. 144-145).¹

2. Mulieris, quae in agnatorum tutela erat, res mancipi usu capi non poterant, praeterquam si ab ipsa tutore auctore traditae essent: id ita lege XII tab. cautum erat (Gaius, ii. 47).²

3. UTI LEGASSIT SUPER PECUNIA TUTELAVE SUAE REI, ITA IUS ESTO.³

4. SI INTESTATO MORITUR, CUI SUUS HERES NEO ESCIT, ADGNATUS PROXIMUS FAMILIAM HABETO.⁴

5. SI ADGNATUS NEO ESCIT, GENTILES FAMILIAM HABENTO.⁵

6. Quibus testamento quidem tutor datus non sit, iis ex lege XII agnati sunt tutores (Gaius, i. § 155).⁶

⁶ Gell. xx. 1, 48-52; Quinct. I. O. iii. 6, 84; Tertull. Apol. 4; supra, pp. 191 and 196-199.

⁷ Cic. de Off. i. 12, 37; cf. Voigt, Tab. V, 10; supra, p. 139, n. 57.

¹ For other readings than necatus, see Bruns, 6th ed. p. 21.

² Gai. i. 132; Ulp. x. § 1; cf. Gai. iv. 79; supra, p. 114.

³ See supra, p. 112.

⁴ Dig. xxxviii. 16, fr. 3, § 11; Leist, Gr.-It. RG. 37 n.; Voigt, XII Taf. ii. 294 n.; supra, p. 113.

¹ Cf. Gai. i. 157; Gell. i. 12, 18.

² Cf. Gai. i. 157; supra, p. 139, n. 58.

³ Gai. ii. 224; Ulp. xi. 14; Dig. xxvi. 2, 1, § 20; l. 16, 53 pr.; Cic. de Inv. ii. 50, § 148; see Bruns (6th ed.), p. 22; and Voigt, XII Taf. pp. 703-704; supra, p. 117, n. 3; p. 158, n. 3; and p. 162.

⁴ Voigt, Tab. IV, 2; Ulp. xxvi. § 1; Inst. ii. 13, § 5; Dig. xxviii. 2, 9, § 2; cf. l. 16, 195, § 1; supra, p. 163.

⁵ Ulp. in Collat. xvi. 4, 2; cf. Gai. iii. 17; supra, p. 163.

⁶ Cf. Dig. xxvi. 4, 6; Ulp. xi. 3; supra, p. 118.

7. (a) SI FURIOSUS ESCIT, ADGNATUM GENTILIUMQUE IN EO PECUNIAQUE EIU^s POTESTAS ESTO.⁷ (b) . . . AST EI CUSTOS NEC ESCIT.⁸

(c) Lege XII tab. prodigo interdicatur bonorum suorum administratio (Ulp. in Dig. xxvii. 10, 1, pr.). Lex XII tab.—prodigum, cui bonis interdictum est, in curatione iubet esse agnatorum (Ulp. Fr. xii. 2).⁹

8. Civis Romani liberti hereditatem lex XII tab. patrono defert, si intestato sine suo herede libertus decesserit (Ulp. Fr. xxix. 1).

EX EA FAMILIA IN EAM FAMILIAM.¹⁰

9. Ea, quae in nominibus sunt,—ipso iure, in portiones hereditarias ex lege XII tab. divisa sunt (Gordianus, Cod. iii. 36, 6). Ex lege XII tab. aes alienum hereditarium pro portionibus quaesitis singulis ipso iure divisum (est) (Dioclet. Cod. ii. 3, 26).¹¹

10. Haec actio (familiae erciscundae) proficiscitur e lege XII tabularum (Gaius in Dig. x. 2, 1 pr.).¹²

TABULA VI

1. CUM NEXUM FACIET MANCIPIUMQUE, UTI LINGUA NUNCUPASSIT, ITA IUS ESTO.¹

2. Cum ex XII tab. satis esset, ea praestari, quae essent lingua nuncupata, quae qui infitatus esset, dupli poenam subiret, a ICtis etiam reticentiae poena est constituta (Cic. de Off. iii. 16).

3. Usus auctoritas fundi biennium est, sit etiam aedium; at in lege aedes non appellantur et sunt ceterarum rerum omnium quarum annuus est usus (Cic. Top. iv. 23).²

4. Lege XII tab. cautum erat, si qua nollet eo modo (usu) in manum mariti convenire, ut quotannis trinotio abesset atque eo modo cuiusque anni (usum) interromperet (Gaius, i. § 111).³

5. (a) SI QUI IN IURE MANUM CONSERUNT . . . (b) Et mancipationem

⁷ See Dig. l. 16, 53 pr.; Mommsen, SR. iii. p. 22, n. 5; supra, p. 120.

⁸ See note in Bruns' 6th ed. p. 23.

⁹ Inst. i. 23, 3; Voigt, Tab. VI, 9, 10, and authorities there cited; supra, pp. 121, 206, n. 2.

¹⁰ Dig. l. 16, 195, § 1. "Ex ea familia [qui liberatus erit eius bona] in eam familiam [revertuntur]" is suggested by Momms. (SR. iii. p. 22, n. 5), who understands by familia the gens. See Voigt, Tab. IV, 4-6, who suggests "pecunia ex ea familia in patroni familiam redito"; Gai. iii. §§ 40, 49; Collat. xvi. 8, 2.

¹¹ Cf. Dig. x. 2, 25, §§ 9, 13; supra, p. 168.

¹² Cf. Dig. x. 2, 25, § 9; Gell. i. 9; see Pernice, Z. d. Sav. Stift. iii. p. 70; supra, p. 169 and p. 187, n. 3.

¹ Cf. Fest. v. "nuncupata"; Cic. de Orat. i. 57, 245; Vat. Frag. 50; supra, p. 61, n. 27; p. 133, p. 161, p. 263, and p. 264, n. 24.

² Gai. ii. 54; see Burckhard, Z. f. RG. vii. p. 79; supra, p. 127, n. 3, p. 139, and p. 136, n. 42.

³ Cf. Gell. iii. 2, 13; Macrobian. Sat. i. 3, 9; Karlowa, Röm. RG. ii. p. 163; supra, p. 111.

et in iure cessionem lex XII tab. confirmat (Paul, Manual, in Fr. Vat. 50).⁴

6. Postulant ut rem integram in patris adventum differat (scil. Ap. Claudius), lege ab ipso lata vindicias det secundum libertatem (Livius, iii. 44).⁵

7. TIGNUM IUNCTUM AEDIBUS VINEAVE ET CONCAPIT NE SOLVITO.⁶

8. Lex XII tab. neque solvere permittit tignum furtivum aedibus vel vineis iunctum neque vindicare, . . . sed in eum, qui convictus est iunxisse, in duplum dat actionem (Ulpian in Dig. xlvii. 3, 1 pr.).⁷

9. . . . QUANDOQUE SARPTA, DONEC DEMPTE ERUNT. . . .⁸

TABULA VII

1. XII tabularum interpretes "ambitum" parietis circuitum esse describunt (Varro, de L. L. v. 22). Sestertius duos asses et semissem (valet) quasi semis tertius. . . . Duo pedes et semis "sestertius pes" vocatur (Maecianus, de assis distrib. 46).¹

2. Sciendum est in actione finium regundorum illud observandum esse, quod (in XII tab.) ad exemplum quodammodo eius legis scriptum est, quam Athenis Solonem dicitur tulisse. Nam illic ita est: 'Εάν τις, etc. (Gaius in Dig. x. 1, 13).²

3. (a) In XII tab.—nusquam nominatur villa, semper in significatione ea "hortus" in horti vero "heredium" (Plin. H. N. xix. 4, 50). (b) [Tugu]ria a tecto appellantur (domicilia rusticorum) sordida.³

4. Usus capionem XII tab. intra quinque pedes esse noluerunt (Cic. de Leg. i. 21, 55).

5. SI IURGANT. . . . E XII (tab.) tres arbitri fines regemus (Cic. de Leg. i. 21, 55).⁴

6. Viae latitudo ex lege XII tab. in porrectum octo pedes habet, in anfractum, i. e. ubi flexum est, sedecim (Gaius in Dig. viii. 3, 8).⁵

7. VIAM MUNIUNTO: NI SAM DELAPIDASSINT, QUA VOLET IUMENTA AGITO.⁶

8. (a) SI AQUA PLUVIA NOCE[BI]T . . .

(b) Si per publicum locum rivus aquae ductus privato nocebit, erit

⁴ Cf. Gell. xx. 10, 7, 8; supra, p. 137, n. 47; p. 174, n. 6.

⁵ Dig. i. 2, 2, § 24.

⁶ Supra, p. 127 and n. 2. As to the word concapit, see Archiv. Giurid. xxx. p. 30; Cuq, Inst. Jurid. p. 278 n.; Czyhlarz, Ztschft. f. P. u. Ö. Recht, xxi. p. 85.

⁷ Inst. ii. 1, § 29; Dig. vi. 1, 23, § 6; cf. Dig. xli. 1, 7, § 10.

⁸ See Festus, s.v. "sarpta."

¹ Festus, s.v. "ambitus"; supra, p. 140, n. 60.

² Supra, p. 95.

³ See Voigt, Tab. VIII, 6; Dig. l. 16, 180; Festus, s.v. "Tuguria."

⁴ Cic. de Rep. iv. 8, 8 (ap. Non.); supra, p. 187, n. 3, and p. 189.

⁵ Cf. Voigt, Tab. V, 4; Varro de L. L. vii. 15; Festus, s.v. "Viae."

⁶ Festus, s.v. "Viae"; Cic. p. Caec. 19, 54; cf. Voigt, Röm. RG. p. 29; Bruns, 6th ed. p. 26 note.

actio privato ex lege XII tab., ut noxa domino sarciatur [caveatur ?] (Paul in Dig. xliii. 8, 5).⁷

9. (a) Lex XII tab. efficere voluit, ut XV pedes altius rami arboris circumcidantur (Ulpian in Dig. xliii. 27, 1, § 8). (b) Si arbor ex vicini fundo vento inclinata in tuum fundum sit, ex lege XII tab. de adimenda ea recte agere potes (Pomponius in Dig. xliii. 27, 2).⁸

10. Cautum est lege XII tab. ut glandem in alienum fundum procidentem liceret colligere (Plinius, H. N. xvi. 5, 15).⁹

11. Venditae vero res et traditae non aliter emtori acquiruntur, quam si is venditori pretium solverit, vel alio modo satisfecerit, veluti expromissore aut pignore dato ; quod cavetur . . . lege XII tab. (Justin, Inst. ii. 1, § 41).¹⁰

12. Sub hac condicione liber esse iussus, "si decem milia heredi dederit," etsi ab herede abalienatus sit, emtori dando pecuniam ad libertatem perveniet : idque lex XII tab. iubet (Ulpian, Fr. ii. 4).¹¹

TABULA VIII

1. (a) QUI MALUM CARMEN INCANTASSIT. . . .¹

(b) Nostrae contra XII tab. cum perpauca res capite sanxissent, in his hanc quoque sancendam putaverunt : si quis occentavisset sive carmen condidisset, quod infamiam faceret flagitiumve alteri (Cic. de Rep. iv. 10, 12).²

2. SI MEMBRUM RUP[s]IT, NI CUM EO PACIT, TALIO ESTO.³

3. MANU FUSTIVE SI OS FREGIT LIBERO, CCC, [SI] SERVO, CL POENAM SUBITO.⁴

4. SI INIURIAM [ALTERI] FAXSIT, VIGINTI QUINQUE POENAE SUNTO.⁵

5. . . . RUP[s]IT . . . SARCITO.⁶

6. Si quadrupes pauperiem fecisse dicetur actio ex lege XII tab.

⁷ Cf. Voigt, Tab. VIII, 9 ; Dig. xl. 7, 21 pr. ; Glück-Burckhard, Pand. Serie der Bücher 39 und 40 (iii. 52 sq.).

⁸ Cf. Voigt, Tab. VIII, 6, 7.

⁹ Cf. Dig. xliii. 28, 1 ; l. 16, 236, § 1.

¹⁰ Dig. xviii. 1, 19 ; supra, p. 128, n. 4, and p. 129.

¹¹ Cf. Dig. xl. 7, 25 ; xl. 7, 29, § 1 ; supra, p. 115.

¹ See Plin. H. N. xxviii. 2, 17.

² Festus, s.v. "occantassit" ; Paul, Sent. v. 4, 6 ; Hor. Sat. ii. 1, 81.

³ Gai. iii. 223 ; Gell. xx. 1, 14 ; Paul, Sent. v. 4, 6. See Beaudouin in Nouv. Rev. Hist. xi. 641 ; supra, p. 102. With membrum ruptum may be compared "mayhem" in English law. Mayhem meant the destruction of those members of the body which were important for defence in fight, as an arm, an eye, a foretooth. Thus the loss of an ear or jawtooth was not mayhem. See Blackstone, Com. 8th ed. vol. iii. p. 121. It is not improbable that a similar test was applied under the XII Tables.

⁴ See Gai. iii. 223 ; Collat. ii. 5, 5 ; Gell. xx. 1, 32 ; supra, p. 140.

⁵ Cf. Gell. xx. 1, 12 ; Collat. ii. 5, 5 ; Fest. 371 b, "Viginti quinque poenae in XII significat XXV asses" ; supra, p. 188.

⁶ Cf. Voigt, Tab. VII, 13 ; Festus, s.v. "rupitias" ; supra, p. 140.

descendit, quae lex voluit aut dari id quod nocuit, . . . aut aestimationem noxiae offerri (Ulpian in Dig. ix. 1, 1 pr.).⁷

7. Si glans ex arbore tua in fundum meum cadat, eamque ego immisso pecore depascam, Aristo scribit . . . neque ex lege XII tab. de pastu pecoris, quia non in tuo pascitur, neque de pauperie—agi posse (Ulpian in Dig. xix. 5, 14, § 3).⁸

8. (a) QUI FRUGES EXCANTASSIT . . . (b) . . . Neve alienam segetem pellexeris. . . .⁹

9. Frugem quidem aratro quaesitam furtim noctu pavisse ac secuisse puberi XII tab. capital erat, suspensumque Cereri necari iuebant,—impubem praetoris arbitratu verberari noxiamve duplionemve decerni [decidi?] (Plin. N. H. xviii. 3, 12).¹⁰

10. Qui aedes acervumve frumenti iuxta domum positum combusserit, vinctus verberatus igni necari (XII tab.) iubetur, si modo sciens prudensque id commiserit; si vero casu, id est negligentia, aut noxiam sarcire iubetur, aut, si minus idoneus sit, levius castigatur (Gaius in Dig. xlvii. 9, 9).¹¹

11. Cantum est XII tab., ut qui iniuria cecidisset alienas (arbores), lueret in singulas aeris XXV (Plin. N. H. xvii. 1, 7).¹²

12. SI NOX FURTUM FAXIT, SI IM OCCISIT, IURE CAESUS ESTO.¹³

13. LUCI . . . SI SE TELO DEFENDIT . . . ENDO FLORATO.¹⁴

14. Ex ceteris autem manifestis furibus liberos verberari addicique iusserunt (Xviri) ei, cui furtum factum esset . . . ; servos autem furti manifesti prensos verberibus affici et e saxo praecipitari; sed pueros impuberes praetoris arbitratu verberari voluerunt noxiamque—sarciri (Gellius, xi. 18, 8).¹⁵

15. (a) Concepti et oblati (furti) poena ex lege XII tab. tripli est (Gaius, iii. 191). (b) . . . LANCÆ ET LICIO . . .¹⁶

16. SI ADORAT FURTO, QUOD NEC MANIFESTUM ERIT . . . [DUPLIONE DAMNUM DECIDITO].¹⁷

17. Furtivam (rem) lex XII tab. usi capi prohibet (Gaius, ii. 45).¹⁸

18. (a) Nam primo XII tabulis sanctum, ne quis unciario fenore amplius exerceret (Tacit. Ann. vi. 16). (b) Maiores nostri . . . in ⁷ Cf. Inst. iv. 9 pr.; supra, p. 116.

⁸ Cf. Voigt, Tab. VII, 10.

⁹ See supra, p. 140, and authorities in note 68.

¹⁰ See Mommsen's note to this text in Bruns, 6th ed.; supra, p. 140.

¹¹ See supra, p. 140.

¹² Cf. Dig. xlvii. 7, 1; Gai. iv. 11; supra, p. 140.

¹³ Macrob. Sat. i. 4, 19; Dig. ix. 2, 4, § 1; Gell. viii. 1; xi. 18, 7; xx. 1, 7; supra, p. 140.

¹⁴ Cf. Cic. p. Tull. xx. 47; xxi. 50; Dig. xlvii. 2, 55, § 2; ix. 2, 4, § 1; Collat. vii. 3, 2; supra, p. 140.

¹⁵ Cf. Gai. iii. 189; Gell. xx. 1, 7; supra, pp. 116, 141.

¹⁶ Cf. Voigt, Tab. VII, 4 and 6, 7; Gai. iii. 192-194; Gell. xi. 18, 9, and xvi. 10, 8; supra, pp. 141 and 428 sq.

¹⁷ Gai. iii. 190; Gell. xi. 18, 15; supra, p. 141.

¹⁸ Cf. Gai. ii. 49; Just. Inst. ii. 6, § 2; Dig. xli. 3, 33 pr.

legibus posiverunt, furem dupli condemnari, feneratorem quadrupli (Cato, de R. R. proem.).¹⁹

19. Ex causa depositi lege XII tab. in duplum actio datur (Paul, Sent. ii. 12, 11; Coll. x. 7, 11).²⁰

20. (a) Sciendum est suspecti (tutoris) crimen e lege XII tab. descendere (Ulpian in Dig. xxvi. 10, 1, § 2). (b) Sed si ipsi tutores rem pupilli furati sunt, videamus an ea actione, quae proponitur ex lege XII tab., adversus tutorem in duplum, singuli in solidum teneantur (Tryphonius in Dig. xxvi. 7, 55, § 1).²¹

21. PATRONUS SI CLIENTI FRAUDEM FAXIT, SACER ESTO.²²

22. QUI SE SIERIT TESTARIER LIBRIPENSVE FUERIT, NI TESTIMONIUM FARIATUR, IMPROBUS INTTESTABILISQUE ESTO.²³

23. Ex XII tab. de testimoniis falsis poena . . . qui falsum testimonium dixisse convictus esset, e saxo Tarpeio deiceretur (Gellius, xx. 1, 53).

24. (a) SI TELUM MANU FUGIT MAGIS QUAM IECIT . . .²⁴

(b) Aries subicitur ille in vestris actionibus, si telum manu fugit magis quam jecit (Cic. Top. xvii. 64).

25. Qui "venenum" dicit, adicere debet, utrum malum an bonum; nam et medicamenta venena sunt (Gaius in Dig. l. 16, 236 pr.).

26. Primum XII tab. cautum esse cognoscimus ne quis in urbe coetus nocturnos agitare (Latro, Declam. in Catil. 19).

27. His (sodalibus) potestatem facit lex (XII tab.), pactionem, quam velint, sibi ferre, dum ne quid ex publica lege corrumpant: sed haec lex videtur ex lege Solonis translata esse (Gaius in Dig. xlvii. 22, 4).²⁵

TABULA IX

1, 2. "Privilegia ne inroganto: De capite civis nisi per maximum comitiatum ollosque, quos censores in partibus populi locassint, ne ferunto" (Cic. de Leg. iii. 4, 11).—Leges praeclarissimae de XII tab. translatae duae, quarum altera privilegia tollit, altera de capite civis rogari nisi maximo comitiatu vetat (Cic. de Leg. iii. 19, 44).¹

3. Dure autem scriptum esse in istis legibus quid existimari potest? nisi duram esse legem putas, quae iudicem arbitrumve iure datum, qui ob rem dicendam pecuniam accepisse convictus est, capite poenitur (Gellius, xx. i. 7).

4. Quaestores constituebantur a populo qui capitalibus rebus praeessent; hi appellabantur quaestores parricidii, quorum etiam meminit lex XII tab. (Pomponius in Dig. i. 2, 2, § 23).

¹⁹ See supra, p. 91 and n. 5.

²⁰ Supra, p. 136, n. 39.

²¹ Cf. Inst. i. 26 pr.; Cic. de Or. i. 36, 166-167; supra, p. 120.

²² Cf. Voigt, Tab. IV, 14. Serv. in Aen. vi. 609; supra, p. 9, n. 2, p. 101.

²³ Gell. xv. 13. "Sierit," i.e. Siverit testarier, means "have suffered oneself to be called as a witness"; supra, p. 67 note.

²⁴ Cic. p. Tull. xxii. 51; supra, p. 102. On this law see Bruns (6th ed.), p. 33.

²⁵ See supra, p. 109.

¹ Cf. Cic. p. Domo, xvii. 43; Cic. de Rep. ii. 36, 61; p. Sest. 30, 65.

5. Lex XII tab. iubet eum, qui hostem concitaverit, quive civem hosti tradiderit, capite puniri (Marcian in Dig. xlviii. 4, 3).

6. Interfici indemnatum quemcunque hominem etiam XII tab. decreta vetuerunt (Salvianus Massil. de Gubern. Dei, viii. 5).²

TABULA X

1. HOMINEM MORTUUM IN URBE NE SEPELITO NEVE URITO.¹

2. . . . HOC PLUS NE FACITO : ROGUM ASCEA NE POLITO.²

3. Extenuato igitur sumptu, tribus riciniis et tunica purpurae et decem tibicinibus, tollit etiam lamentationem (Cic. de Leg. ii. 23, 59).³

4. MULIERES GENAS NE RADUNTO, NEVE LESSUM FUNERIS ERGO HABENTO.⁴

5. (a) HOMINE MORTUO NE OSSA LEGITO, QUO POST FUNUS FACIAT.

(b) Excipit bellicam peregrinamque mortem (Cic. de Leg. ii. 24, 60).⁵

6. (a) Haec praeterea sunt in legibus—: servilis unctura tollitur omnisque circumpotatio—Ne sumptuosa respersio, ne longae coronae nec acerrae praetereantur (Cic. de Leg. ii. 24, 60). (b) Murrata potione usos antiquos, indicio est quod—XII tab. cavetur, ne mortuo indatur (Festus).

7. QUI CORONAM PARIT IPSE PECUNIAVE EIUS (HONORIS) VIRTUTISVE ERGO ARDUUITUR EI . . .⁶

8. . . . NEVE AURUM ADDITO.—CUI AURO DENTES IUNCTI ESCUNT, AST IM CUM ILLO SEPELIET URETVE, SE FRAUDE ESTO.⁷

9. Rogum bustumve novum vetat propius LX pedes adici aedes alienas invito domino (Cic. de Leg. ii. 24, 61).⁸

10. Forum, id est vestibulum sepulcri, bustumve usu capi vetat (Cic. de Leg. ii. 24, 61).

TABULA XI

1. (Decemviri) cum X tabulas summa legum aequitate prudentiaque conscripsissent, in annum posterum Xviros alios subrogaverunt;—qui duabus tabulis iniquarum legum additis,—conubia—ut ne plebi cum patribus essent, inhumanissima lege sanxerunt (Cic. de Rep. ii. 36, 37).¹

2. Tuditanus refert,—Xviros, qui decem tabulis duas addiderunt, de

² See Cic. p. Domo, iv. 9.

¹ Cic. de Leg. ii. 23, 58. Interment and cremation seem to have been about equally common among the early Romans, though some gentes (e.g. the gens Cornelia) insisted upon the former. Nearly all Italian cities bear evidence of the dead having been carried outside the walls; probably the reason was to avoid risk of fire within the city.

² Cic. de Leg. ii. 13, 59; Wordsworth, Fragments, etc. p. 535.

³ See Clark, Early Roman Law, p. 17; Wordsworth, l.c.

⁴ Cic. de Leg. ii. 23, 59; Serv. in Aen. xii. 606; Plin. H. N. xi. 37, 157. See Clark, op. cit. p. 18.

⁵ Clark, op. cit. pp. 19-20.

⁶ Plin. H. N. xxi. 3, 7; Cic. de Leg. ii. 24, 60; Clark, op. cit. p. 20.

⁷ Cic. de Leg. ii. 24, 60.

⁸ See Festus, s.v. "rogum," "bustum."

¹ Cf. Dion. x. 60; Voigt, Tab. XI, 4.

intercalando populum rogasse. Cassius eosdem scribit auctores (Macrob. Sat. i. 13, 21).²

3. E quibus (libris de rep.) unum ἱστορικὸν requiris de Cn. Flavio, A. f. Ille vero ante Xviros non fuit . . . Quid ergo profecit, quod protulit fastos? Occultatam putant quodam tempore istam tabulam, ut dies agendi peterentur a paucis (Cic. ad Att. vi. 1, 8).³

TABULA XII

1. Lege autem introducta est pignoris capio, velut lege XII tab. adversus eum, qui hostiam emisset nec pretium redderet; item adversus eum, qui mercedem non redderet pro eo iumento, quod quis ideo locasset, ut inde pecuniam acceptam in dapem, id est in sacrificium, impenderet (Gaius, iv. § 28).¹

2. (a) SI SERVUS FURTUM FAXIT NOXIAMVE NOXIT, . . .

(b) Ex maleficiis filiorum familias servorumve . . . noxales actiones proditae sunt, uti liceret patri dominove aut litis aestimationem sufferre, aut noxae dedere . . . Constitutae sunt . . . aut legibus aut edicto: legibus velut furti lege XII tab. (Gaius, iv. 75-76).²

3. SI VINDICIAM FALSAM TULIT, SI VELIT IS . . . TOR ARBITROS TRIS DATO, EORUM ARBITRIO . . . FRUCTUS DUPLIONE DAMNUM DECIDITO.³

4. Rem, de qua controversia est, prohibemur (lege XII tab.) in sacrum dedicare: alioquin dupli poenam patimur,—sed duplum utrum fisco an adversario praestandum sit, nihil exprimitur (Gaius in Dig. xliv. 6, 3).

5. Interrex Fabius aiebat in XII tab. legem esse, ut quodcunque postremum populus iussisset, id ius ratumque esset (Liv. vii. 17, 12).⁴

INCERTAE SEDIS FRAGMENTA¹

² Cf. Dig. l. 16, 98.

³ See note to this frag. in 6th ed. of Bruns, p. 38; Cic. p. Murena, xi. 25; supra, p. 246.

¹ Fest. s.v. "daps"; supra, p. 215.

² Inst. iv. 9 pr.; Dig. ix. 4, fr. 2, § 1; Fest. s.v. "noxia"; supra, p. 116.

³ Fest. s.v. "vindiciae" (Bruns, 6th ed. ii. p. 48); see Bekker, Akt. i. 84 n.; Voigt, Jus Nat. iii. 705-712; Esmein, Mélanges, p. 191; Cuq, Inst. Jurid. p. 417, n. 2; supra, p. 184, n. 22; p. 187, n. 3.

⁴ Cf. Liv. ix. 33, 9; Cic. p. Balbo, 14, 33.

¹ See Bruns, 6th ed. pp. 39-40; Wordsworth, op. cit. p. 588.

INDEX

- Acceptilation, 260
- Accrual (adcretio) amongst heirs, 167
- Actiones*, Classes of: a. arbitrarie, 341 sq.; bonae fidei, 267 sq., 337; ficticiae, 339 sq.; in factum, 340; juris honorarii, 339; why praetorian actions had to be raised within a year, 241; a. stricti juris, 188, 257; utiles, 339; practical disappearance of some of those distinctions in later empire, 361
- Actiones, Legis*, see "Legis actiones"
- Actiones*, Particular: a. auctoritatis, 130 sq.; de dolo, 341; de pensi, 157; de positi, 136 n. 39, 339 n. 12; de rationibus, distrahendis, 141; de tigno juncto, 141; empti (its successive phases), 267 sq.; ex stipulatu, 257, 265, 337; familiae erciscundae, 158, 167; fiduciae, 135 sq.; furti (the various actions of the XII Tables), 141; Pauliana, 236; Publiciana, 253 sq.
- Adcretio* (accrual) amongst heirs, 167
- Addictio debitoris in manus injectio*, 195; distinction between judicati and addicti, ibid. n. 20; no addictio in case of nexal debtors, 148, 151; status of addicti, 197; provisions of Poetilian law in reference to them, 158
- Aditio hereditatis*, 166; tempus deliberandi, 397; entry cum beneficio inventarii, ib.
- Adjudication, 138, 338 and n. 10
- Adjudicatus, see "Addictio"
- Adoption,—its purpose originally, 29; a. of a paterfamilias, see "Adrogation"; a. of a filiusfamilias, 30, 115 sq.; effect, 30, 124; Justinianian amendments, 391
- Adrogation (or adoption of a paterfamilias), —its purpose, 29; how accomplished, 30; incompetent to plebeians in regal period, 47; effects, 124 n. 5, 125, 168
- Adsertor libertatis* (in status-actions about freedom or slavery), 185
- Aediles, Curule, their institution, 85; their edicts, 242
- Aediles, Plebeian, 82, and n. 4
- Aelianum, Jus*, 247 and n. 12
- Aelius Gallus*, 248, 383 n. 20
- Aes et libram*, Origin of the negotium per, 57; conveyance per, see "Mancipation"; loan per, see "Nexum"; marriage per, see "Coemptio"; solutio per, 59 n. 17; testament per, see "Testament"; justification of the procedure per aes et libram, 61 n. 27, 67 and n. 15
- Aes confessum* of XII Tables meant nexal loan, 150, 192 sq., 418 sq.
- Aes rude*, 58
- Aes signatum* of Serv. Tullius, 58 and notes 13, 15
- Africanus, Sext. Caec., 300
- Agency, 256
- Ager publicus*, 87-89
- Ager vectigalis*, 393
- Agnates and Agnation, as distinct from the gens, unknown in regal period, 43 and n. 3; agnatic tutory and inheritance invented by Decemvirs to meet necessities of the plebeians, 117 sq., 163 sq.; who were agnate, 118 sq. and notes 9, 11; relation dissolved by capitis deminutio, 124, 166; tutory of agnates under XII Tables, 119; their succession, 163; limitations put upon it, 164, 270, 274 sq.; a successio graduum, amongst them first admitted by Justinian, 395; preference of agnates over cognates entirely abolished by his Novels, ib.
- Agrarian legislation of republic, 87 sq.
- Alaric's Breviary (Lex Rom. Visigoth.), 371
- Album, The praetor's, 238, 334
- Amicitia*, 106

- Antestatus*, 272 n. 9
 Aquilian stipulation, 257
 Aquilius Gallus, 248
Arbitria and judicia, 187 sq.; arbitrium litis aestimandae, 185
Ashburnhamer Rechtsbuch, 405 note
Auctorem laudare, 180 n. 10
Auctoritas and Auctoritatis actio, 180 sq.; limited to two years, 182
Auctoritas patrum (in legislation), 83
Authenticæ in Code, 410
Authenticum (Bolognese version of Novels), 406, 410
- Bankruptcy,—the Rutilian edict about it, 236; how post-mortem b. avoided, 166
 Barter, its conversion into sale, 263
 Basilica, The, 403
Beneficium inventarii, 426
 Bernardakis's Sinaitic papyri, 373
 "Bina jugera," The, of Varro and Pliny, 36 sq.
 Bills of Exchange, 243 n. 2
 Bishops' courts,—their institution, jurisdiction, and procedure, 357 sq.
 Blood-feud, its early suppression, 53
 Bologna and the Glossarists, 406 sq.
 "Bona paterna avitaque," 32, 121
Bonae fidei action,—what involved in, 267 sq.; intentio of, 337; exceptio doli superfluous in, 343
Bonae fidei possessio, 255
 "Bonam copiam jurare," 154
Boni mores as a regulative of public and private order, 21
 Bonitarian ownership (in bonis habere) of res Mancipi, 41 n. 16; a result of Publician edict, 252 sq.; distinction between it and Quiritarian ownership abolished by Justinian, 392
Bonorum, Emptio, see "Emptio bonorum"
Bonorum possessio, 271 sq.; nature and probable origin, 271; b. p. secundum tabulas, 272 sq.; b. p. contra tabulas, 273 sq.; its practical abolition by later Justinianian law, 394; b. p. ab intestato, 274 sq.; the praetorian order of intestate succession and admission of cognates, 275 sq.; how b. p. obtained, 276, 396; refused in absence of testamenti factio, 330 n. 9; immediate effect, 273; heir's actions granted to bonorum possessor under fiction of heirship, 339 sq.
 Brachylogus, The, 405
Breviarium Alaricianum, 371
Burgundionum, Lex Romana, 372
 Byzantine jurisprudence, 402, 403
- "Capite poenas dabit" of decemviral manus injectio, 195 sq.
Capitis deminutio: meaning of caput, 121, 422; degrees of c. d., 122; c. d. minima in particular, 122-124; its consequences, 124-126; not involved in servitium of nexus, 151
 Capito and Labeo, 296 sq.
 Caracalla's general grant of citizenship, 318 sq.
 Carvilius Ruga and his divorce, 112, 234 note
 Cassian treaty of 262 U.C., 211
 Cattle and sheep as media of exchange 57 and n. 8
Cautio damni infecti, 349; c. de dolo, ib.; c. judicatum solvi, ib.; c. praedibus praediisque, 142; c. usufructuaria, 349
 Censors, Institution of, 85; their regimen morum, 210 sq. and n. 9
 Centumviral court,—its creation, composition, and functions, 72 sq.; c. causas, 176 sq. and n. 14, 337; centumviralis hasta, 73 n. 11
Certi conductio, 338
Cessio bonorum, 93, 153
Cessio in jure, see "In jure cessio"
 Christianity, Establishment of,—its influence on the law generally and specially, 355-357
 Cicero's book de jure civili in artem redigendo, 247 n. 13
 Citations, Valentinianian law of, 363 sq.
 Citizen and non-citizen under jus civile, 103-108; citizen's conubium, commercium, and actio, 104; his capacity generally, 121; he alone could make a testament, 48 n. 17
 Clientage in regal period, 8 sq.; how affected by XII Tables, 110
Codex, Gregorianus, 366
Codex, Hermogenianus, 366
Codex, Justinianus, the 1st edit., 377 sq.; J. Cod. repetitae praelectionis, 385, 386; its relation to the Digest, 385; its sources, 386; MSS. and editions, 410
Codex, Theodosianus, 367 sq.
Codices accepti et expensi, 259, 424
 Codicils, Introduction of, as adjuncts to testaments, 332; latterly effectual though standing alone, 395; witnesses required, ib.
Coemptio,—origin of, 63; nature, 64, 413 sq.; how dissolved, 113 and n. 10; Gaius' account of, 413 sq.; c. fiduciae causa, 44 n. 7, 135 and n. 37
 Cognates (kinsmen generally),—their position among plebeians prior to

- XII Tables, 35 sq. ; by Tables preference given to agnates in tutory and succession, 117 sq., 163 sq. ; by praetors c. admitted to succession on intestacy on failure of agnates, 275 ; provided they had testamenti factio with deceased, 330 n. 9 ; who included among cognati of edict, 275 ; c. put by Justinian on a par with agnates, 395 ; the word cognati in the pages of the lay writers, 413
- Cognatio, Servilis*, 391
- Collatio Legum Mosaicar. et Romanar.*, 369
- Collation by emancipati admitted to bonor. possessio contra tabulas, 274 ; its extension in Justinianian law, 398
- Collectio de tutoribus*, 404
- Colonatus* (servitude of the glebe), 358-360
- Colonial latinity, 249 sq.
- Comitia centuriata*, 48 n. 16
- Comitia curiata*, 6, 48 n. 15, 64
- Comitia tributa*, — its institution and organisation, 82 sq.
- Commerce, Growth of, after first Punic war, — its influence on the law, 226 sq.
- Commercium*, 104 and n. 6 ; its concession by treaty to non-citizens, 107-108 ; enjoyed by colonial and Junian latins, 249, 339
- Commodate, 157, 268, 339 n. 12
- Compounding for capital or corporal punishment, 69 sq., 102, 338 n. 11
- Concilium plebis*, — its legislative competency, 82-84
- Concubinage, 285 and n. 6
- Condictio*, 219 sq. ; c. causa data causa non secuta, 263 ; certi c., 336 ; incerti c., 336 sq. ; c. triticaria, 219, 221, 336
- Conditionem, Legis actio per*, 217-222
- Confarreatio*, — a patrician marriage-ceremony, 26 ; incompetent to plebeians, 34, 63 ; how dissolved, 113 ; declared creative of manus only quoad sacra, 323
- Confessio in jure*, 192, 193, 418
- Consensual contracts, 261-268
- Consilium domesticum*, 32, 85, 112, 233
- Consortium* (amongst heirs), 45 and n. 8, 167
- Constitutions, The imperial, in earlier empire, 293-295 ; edicta — their character then, 293 sq. ; rescripta and decreta, 294 sq. ; the i. c. in later empire, 353 sq.
- Consuetude, see "Custom"
- Consulate, — effects of its institution, 79-81
- Consultatio veteris jurisconsulti*, 370
- Contract, Law of, in regal period and early republic, 49 sq., 143-157 ; insufficiency of bare agreement to create c., 143 ; omnipotence of word and form, 144 ; what if bare agreement fortified with oath or appeal to Fides, 49, 157 ; the formal contracts of the early jus civile, 144 sq. ; nexum in particular, see "Nexum" ; development of the law of c. in the latter half of the republic, 255-270 ; verbal c., see "Sponsio" and "Stipulation" ; literal, 258 sq. ; real, 268 sq. ; consensual, 163, 261-268 ; innominate, 328
- Conubium*, 26, 104 and n. 6 ; the essential pre-requisite of justae nuptiae and patria potestas, 114 n. 14 ; not enjoyed by plebeians in regal period, 34, 63 ; the Canuleian law, 84 ; c. with non-citizens by treaty, 104 sq. ; none between citizens and colonial or Junian latins, 249, 317
- Corpus Juris Civilis*, 407 and n. 1 ; MSS., texts, and editions, 407-411
- Coruncanus, Tib., 247
- Credita pecunia*, 259
- Cretio hereditatis*, 166
- Crime and private wrong, Line between, at first not well defined, 69 ; criminal offences in early regal period, 18, 53, 65
- "Cum nexum faciet mancipiumque," etc., 61 n. 27, 131 n. 22, 161, 263, 264 n. 24
- Curatory of lunatics, spendthrifts, etc., in patrician Rome, 117 ; under XII Tables, 120 ; c. of minors established by Marc. Aurelius, 326 sq.
- Curiae*, 6, 47
- Custom or consuetude, Early, 20 ; importance of c. as a factor of the law at all times, 243 ; the sanction of rights in early law, 49 n. ; the making of custom, 244, 245
- "Damnas esto," 146 and n. 8
- "Damnum decidi oportere," 338 and n. 11
- Debt, Law of, in early republic, 89-93 ; treatment of nexal debtors, see "Nexum" ; of judgment debtors, see "Manus injectio" ; their incarceration in later law, 201
- Decemviri, Judices*, of Valerio-Horatian laws, 73, 82 sq., 207 sq.
- Decemviri legibus scribundis*, 94

- Decemviri litibus judicandis*, 74 and n. 17 and 19
- Decreta*, Imperial, in early empire, 294 sq.; their authority enhanced by Justinian, 354
- Decretum divi Marci* (punishing self-help), 295 note
- Dediticiancy, Aelia-Sentian, 316; abolished by Justinian, 391
- Delatio hereditatis*, 166
- Delegation, 261 and n. 17
- Deliberandi*, Heir's jus, 397
- Demonstratio* of formula, 336 n. 8
- Depensum*, 157
- Deposit,—the action in duplum of XII Tables, 136 n. 39; the formulae in jus and in factum of the praetorian system, 339 n. 12
- Detestatio sacrorum, 30
- Dictatum de consiliariis*, 404
- Diffarreatio*, 113
- Digest, Justinian's instructions for its preparation, 378 sq.; its compilation, 379; its completion, 381 sq.; the sources drawn upon, 382 sq.; order of sequence of books, titles, and fragments, 383-385; dig. vetus, infortiatum, and dig. novum, 406; MSS., texts, and editions, 408-410
- Diocletian, multitude of his rescripts, 307, 367; excellence of many of them, 307
- Disherison of children, see "Testament"
- Distress, see "Pignoris capio"
- Divorce in regal period, 27 n. 11; in early republic, 112 sq.; formula of d., 112; increasing frequency of d. in later republic, 233; d. in the classical period, 324; legislation of later empire, 356 sq.; that of Justinian in his Novels, 388
- Dolo, Actio de*, 341
- Domestic consilium, 32, 35, 112, 233
- Dominium bonitarium* of res Mancipi, see "Bonitarian ownership"
- Dominium ex jure Quiritium*, meaning, 40; applied to res nec Mancipi as well as res man., 127 and n. 3; civil and natural modes of acquiring, 127; nudum jus Quiritium, 254 and n. 16; abolition by Justinian of distinctions between d. ex j. Quir., d. bonitarium, and nudum jus Quir., 392
- Domum ductio* in manus injectio, 195, 199 n. 35
- Domus familiaeque*, meaning of, 24 n.
- Donatio propter nuptias*, 389
- Dos* and Dotis dictio of early jus civile, 112 and n. 5, 143; d. d. of classical law, 112 n. 5; the lex Maenia de dote, 234 note; Justinian's legislation about dos, 388
- Dosithei Fragmentum de manumissionibus*, 313
- Dualism in institutions of early law, 5
- Ductio uxoris in domum mariti*, 323 n. 1
- Dupondii*, 400
- Edicts of the Emperors, their character in early empire, 293 sq.; the edicts or leges edictales of the later empire, 353 sq.
- Edicts of the Magistrates, 238-242; antiquity of practice of publishing edicts, 238; those of urban praetor, 238-241; spoken of as viva vox jur. civilis, 240; their aim, ib. n. 5; edicta repentina and perpetua, 238, 239; ed. tralatitia, 239; gradual enlargement of e. t., 239 sq.; e. proper and app. of styles, 240; forms of edictal provisions, 240, 241; e. of peregrin praetors, provincial governors, and curule aediles, 242 sq.
- Edictum perpetuum* (consolidated) of Salvius Julianus, 289-291; history, 289; what embodied in it, 289 sq.; arrangement, 290
- Edictum Theodorici*, 371
- Editions of Institutes, 407; of Digest, 409; of Code, ib.; of Novels, 410
- Emancipation,—early procedure in, 62 n. 25; Justinianian simplification, 391; was a capitis deminutio, 123; was it originally meant as a boon to child or a penalty on parent? 114 sq.; its result in law, 25, 123; put an end to patria potestas and agnation, 165; father not required testamentarily to institute or disinherit emancipated child, 274; but praetor gave latter bonor. poss. contra tabulas on condition of collation, ib.; by jus civile he had no right of succession on intestacy either direct or collateral, 166, 274; by edict unde liberi praetors admitted him to intestate succession of parent along with unemancipated children, 275; and later imperial legislation admitted him collaterally as if never capite minutus, 395
- Emblemata Triboniani*, 382 n. 15
- Emphyteusis*,—its introduction, 392; amendments of Zeno and Justinian, 393
- Emptio bonorum*, 339; actions granted to b. emptor under fiction of heirship, 340

- Episcopalis audientia* (bishop's court), —institution, jurisdiction, and procedure, 357 sq.
- Epistula Hadriani* introducing beneficium divisionis, 295 note
- Equity, 233, 241
- Eviction, Warranty against, in mancipation, 130-132, 262; did it arise ipso jure? 131; the stipulatio duplae, 265; liability for e. eventually held implied in sale, 268
- Exceptions, 342 sq.; ex. doli, 343; unnecessary in a bonae fidei iudicium, ib.; ex. rei venditae et traditae, 236, 253; ex. non numeratae pecunias, 236
- Execution under system of legis actiones, see "Manus injectio"; under formular system, 344; under system of later empire, 362
- Exhereditatio* (disinheritance) of children, see "Testament"
- Expensilatio* (literal contract), 258-261
- Expiatio*, 52
- Exposure of children, law of Romulus, 28; XII Tables, 114; prohibited by Valentinian, 324 n. 3; prohibition renewed by Justinian, 389
- Extraordinaria cognitio*, 344 sq.
- Familia*, meanings, 24 and n. 2; familia pecuniariae, 63, 64 n. 7; familiae emptor, 64, 159-161; familiae mutatio, see "Capitis deminutio"; sacra familiae, see "Sacra"
- Family, The,—its organisation in regal period, 24 sq.; its legal aspects, 26 sq.; its domestic aspects, 30 sq.; the plebeian f. as compared with the patrician, 34 sq.; law of the f. under the XII Tables, 110 sq.; the f. in the later republic, 233 sq.; changes in the early empire, 323 sq.; law of the f. in the Justinianian legislation, 387-391
- Fas*, 15-18; little of it in XII Tables, 101
- Fenus unciarium*, 91
- Fictions, legal, 273, 339
- Fideicommissa* (mortis causa trusts),—what led to their introduction, 227, 330; universal and singular f., 331; relative positions of heir (trustee) and beneficiary, ib.; regulation by Trebellian and Pegasian senatusconsulta, ib.; equiparation of singular f. with legacies, 397; oral f. by a person on deathbed declared binding on heir ab intestato, 395
- Fides*,—deification by Numa, 22 sq.; appeal to F. a safeguard of obligation, 49, 157; its seat in the right hand, 50 n. 2
- Fiducia*, 133-136; mancipatory lex fiduciae, 134; purposes of f., 135 sq.; actio fiduciae, 185; usureceptio fiduciae, 136 sq.; fiduciary coemption, 44 n. 7, 135 and n. 37
- Filiusfamilias* and paterfamilias, see "Patria potestas"
- Fisci*, Fragmentum de jure, 313
- Flavianum, Jus*, 246
- Florentine MS. of Digest, 408
- Forci sanatesque* (of XII Tables), 107 n. 12
- Foreigners, Influx of, after first Punic war,—its influence on the law, 226 sq.; capacities and disabilities of f., see "Non-Citizens"
- Form, Conservatism of R. L. in matters of, 144; all forms had their historical utilitarian explanation, ib.
- Formula Fabiana*, 314 n. 24
- Formular system of procedure, 334-344; its introduction, 230 sq.; its characteristic, 231, 334; the Aebutian and Julian laws, 230 sq., 335; transition from the legis actiones,—in personal actions by the simplification of the procedure per condemnationem, 335-337; and in vindicationes by the introduction of that per sponsionem, 337; paving the way for the formula petitoria, 338; parts of a formula, 336 n. 8; formulae in jus and in factum conceptae, 338 sq.; intentiones, of former, 338; actiones utiles, 339; act. ficticiae, 339 sq.; act. in factum, 340; act. arbitrariae, 341 sq.; exceptiones, etc., 342 sq.; elasticity of the system, 344; its abandonment in the later empire, 360 sq.
- Fragmenta Vaticana*, 370
- Fragmentum de jure fisci*, 313
- Furtum*, see "Theft"
- Gaius, 301-303, 431; his Institutes and the Verona codex, 308-310
- Gallus Aquilius, see "Aquilius Gallus"
- Gens*,—Organisation of, in regal Rome, 6 sq.; how far affected by XII Tables, 109 sq.; gentile settlements, 38; jurisdiction of g., 69, 210; its tutorial and curatorial functions, 33, 117, 120, and n. 16; how far its sanction necessary to marriage of sui juris female member, 109; its right of succession in regal period, 43; by XII Tables postponed to agnates, 163 sq.

- Gentium, Jus*, of Rome, 226
 Glossarists, The, and their treatment of the Justinianian books, 405 sq.
 Graeco-Roman jurisprudence, 402, 403
 Greece, Decemviral mission to, 94
 Greek law in XII Tables, 95
 Gregorian Code, 366 sq.
 Guardianship, see "Tutary" and "Curatory"
 Guilds, Numa's, 11
- Harmenopuli Manuale*, 403
Hasta, Centumviralis, 73 n. 11
 Hercules, The ara maxima of, 50
Hereditas (see "Succession"),—its delation by testament, see "Testament"; on intestacy, see "Intestate Succession"; necessary and voluntary heirs, 166; ipso jure vesting of h. in former, ib.; acceptance by latter, see "Aditio"; accrual (adcretio) amongst heirs, 167; heres eadem persona cum defuncto, 168; heir's liability for deceased's debts, ib.; its limitation by entry under inventory, 397; heir's liability for family sacra, see "Sacra familiae"
Heredium, 37 sq.; was it alienable? 39 sq.
 Hermogenian Code, 366 sq.
Herus, derivation and meaning, 40 n. 12
 Historic periods of Roman law, 421
Homo sacer, see "Sacer esto"
Hospitium, 106 sq.
Hostis, see "Non-Citizen"
 Husband and Wife, Law of, among patricians of regal period, 25-27, 31; among plebeians, 34 sq.; under XII Tables, 110-113; in later republic, 233; in early empire, 233, 285 sq., 323 sq.; in later empire, 356 sq., 387 sq.
 Hypothec, 251 sq., 328
- Imperium, magisterial,—quasi-judicial intervention in virtue of it, 206 sq., 345 sq.
 Imprisonment for debt after Poetilian law, 152 sq.
 "In bonis" tenure of res Mancipi, see "Bonitarian ownership"
Incerti condictio, 336 sq.
Infamia, 285 n. 6, 424
 Infanticide, 28
 Ingratitude,—its consequences in law, 22 n. 2
 Inheritance, see "Hereditas"
In integrum restitutio, 350
In jure cessio, 137, 180 n. 9; involved no warranty of title, 131
- In jus vocatio* of XII Tables, 174
 Institutes, Justinian's, 380 sq.; MSS., texts, and editions, 407
Institutio and instructio, 247 n. 14
Intentio of formula, 336-338
Interdictio igni et aquae, 54 n. 15
 Interdiction of spendthrift, 32, 110, 121, 206 n. 2
 Interdicts under jus civile, 206; under praetorian rules, 345-348; characteristic, 346; varieties, ibid.; uti possidetis and utrubi, 347 sq.
 Interest, see "unciarium fenus"
 International law, 103, 211
 Interpolations in Digest, 336 n. 7, 382 n. 15
Interpretatio of republic, 97, 98 n. 6, 246
 Intestate succession (see "Succession"), Law of, among patricians in regal period, 48 sq. (and see "Sui heredes" and "Gens"); among plebeians, 48; i. s. of agnates, after sui heredes but before gens, introduced by XII Tables, 163 sq. (and see "Agnates and Agnation"); artificiality of rules of jus civile as to i. s. of agnates, 164, 274; praetorian amendments, 275; admission of cognates, 275 sq. (and see "Cognates"); admission of i. s. as between mother and child, 332 sq.; Justinian's amendments on law of i. s. in his Code, 395; amendments by his 118th and 127th Novels, 395; rights, etc., of heir ab intestato, see "Hereditas," "Bonor. Possessio"
 Intransmissibility of debts in early law, 168
Inventarii, Heir's entry cum beneficio, 397
 Irnerius and the Glossarists, 405 sq.
Italicum, Jus, 250 n. 4
- Judex, The single,—an institution of Serv. Tullius's, 75; his position, 244; his disappearance, 360
Judex domesticus, 32
Judicati,—manus injectio against, 196 sq.; distinction between j. and addicti, 195 n. 20
Judices decemviri of Valerio-Horatian laws, 74, 82 sq., 207 sq.
Judicia and arbitria, 187 sq.
 Judicial procedure,—the arrangements of Serv. Tullius, 71-75; procedure per legis actiones, 172-205, 219-222; j. p. outside the legis act., 205-212; j. p. per formulas, 230 sq., 334-344; j. p. extra ordinem, 344 sq.; quasi-judicial p. in virtue of the imperium, 345-350;

j. p. per libellum conventionis, 361 sq.;
 j. p. in the bishops' courts, 357 sq.
Judicis postulationem, Leg. actio per,
 187-190
Judicium de moribus, 234
 Julianus, Salvius, 299 sq.; his consolidation of the praetorian edict, 289 sq.
 Junian latinity, 317 sq.; abolished by Justinian, 391
Juramentum calumniae, 362
Jurgia and lites, 70 note 6, 189
 Jurisdiction in regal period, 68-70; juris- dictio of magistrate and judicium of judge during republic and early empire, 175 sq.; who invested with ordinary j. in later empire, 361; j. of bishops, 357 sq.
 Jurists of later republic, 246 sq.;
 honourable position held by professional j. in early empire, 284; notices of the most eminent, 296-307
Jus, primitive meaning, 18; its embodiments, 20; its prevalence in XII Tables over fas, 101; meaning of j. in later law, 378
Jus Aelianum, 247 and n. 12
Jus civile, j. gentium, and j. naturale distinguished, 226 n. 4
Jus Flavianum, 246
Jus gentium, The Roman, 226 sq.
Jus honorarium, 226 sq.
Jus Italicum, 250 n. 4
Jus Latii, 249
Jus liberorum, 286, 383, 395
Jus naturale in early empire, 280-283; distinguished from jus gentium, 281; its characteristics and fundamental principles, 281-283; illustrations, 282
*Jus nexi mancipii*que, 107 and n. 12
Jus novum, 288
Jus Quiritium, Nudum, 254 and n. 16
Jus respondendi, see "Responsa pru- dentium"
Jus vitae necisque of paterfamilias, 29;
 its restriction in the early empire, 346;
 its complete disappearance in Justinianian law, 389
Jusjurandum, see "Oath"
Justae nuptiae, see "Marriage"
 Justinian, 376; chronology of his collections, 377; his first Code of statute-law, 377 sq.; commission to compile Digest, 378-380; his "quingenta decisiones," 380; his Institutes, 380 sq.; publication of the Digest, 381; second edition of his Code, 385; his Novels, 386; characteristics of his own legislation, 387; his law-books in the courts and schools, 399-402; their fate in the East, 402 sq.; their transmission to Italy, 404; their fate in the West, 403-407

Kings, their criminal jurisdiction, 68 sq.; origin of their civil jurisdiction 70 sq.

Labeo and Capito, 296 sq.

Lance licioque furtum, 141, 428 sq.

Land, Early distribution of, 36 sq.; the public lands, 87-89

Latinity,—colonial, 250; Junian, 317 sq.; legatum latini, 318 n. 13;
 Junian l. abolished by Justinian, 391

Laudatio auctoris (in a rei vindicatio),
 180 n. 10

Laudemium (in emphyteusis), 394

Law-schools, The Roman, 400; course of study, 401

Legacies (legata),—meaning of legare, 46
 n. 9, 158 n. 3; restrictions on a testator's freedom of bequeathing l., 238 note, 270; the various forms of l., 329; the Sc. Neronianum, 330; equiparation (by Justinian) of l. with singular trust-gifts, 397

Leges generally: Leges regiae, 20 sq.;
ll. sacratae, 81 sq.; leges (comitial) displaced by senatusconsulta, 288; ll.
generales or edictales of later empire, 353 sq.; ll. datae as distinguished from ll. latae, 288; ll. mancipii, 183
 sq. (See "Lex")

Leges, Particular: L. Aebutia, 230 sq., 335; L. Aelia Sentia, 315 sq.; L. Apu- leia, 238 note; L. Aquilia, 214, 238 n.; L. Aternia Tarpeia, 57 n. 8, 183 n.
 18; L. Atilia, 237 n. 2; L. Atinia, 238 n.; L. Calpurnia, 218, 221; L.
Canuleia, 84; L. Cicereia, 238 n.;
L. Cincia de donis, 237 n. 2; L.
Claudia (de tut. mulier.), 287, 326;
L. coloniae Juliae Genetivae, 154 and
 n. 33, 417 sq.; L. Cornelia (de spon- sorib.), 238 n.; L. de imperio Vespasi- ani, 287; L. XII Tabularum, see "Twelve Tables"; L. Falcidia, 235
 n. 4, 238 n., 270; L. Fufia Caninia, 286; L. Furia de sponsu, 238 n.; L.
Furia testamentaria, 202, 270; L.
Hortensia, 83, 93; L. Julia de adult.
coercendis, 284; L. Julia de maritand.
ordinib., 285; L. Julia de vicesima, 318 n. 15; L. Julia et Papia
Poppaea, 285 sq., 356; Ll. Julia et Titia, 237 n. 2; Ll. Juliae judicia- riae, 286, 335; L. Julia municipalis,
 154 n. 35; L. Junia Norbana, 286,
 317 sq.; Ll. Liciniae Sextiae, 85 sq.,
 89, 91; L. Maenia de dote, 234; L.

- Malacitana*, 287 and n. 12, 416; L. Marcia, 202; L. metalli Vipascensis, 288 and n. 18; L. Papiria (de sacrament. exigundis), 416; L. Pinaria, 181 n. 11; L. Plaetoria, 238 n., 326; L. Poetilia Papiria, 91, 153-155, 200; L. Publilia (415 U.C.), 83 sq.; L. Publilia de sponsorib., 157, 195 n. 18; L. Regia, 287 n. 11; L. Rubria, 243; L. Salpensana, 287 and n. 12; L. Silia, 217 sq.; L. Terentilia, 86 sq.; L. Valeriae Horatiae, 82 sq.; L. Vallia, 202; L. Voconia, 44 n. 5, 238 n., 270
- Legis actiones* generally, 172-177; meaning of lege agere, 174 n. 6; varieties of l. a., 173; character and purpose, 174; in jus vocatio, 174; magistrate in jure, 175; litis contestatio, ib.; judge in judicio, 175; centumviral court, unus judex and tres arbitri, 176 sq. See "Sacramentum," "Judicis postulatio," "Condictioem," L. A. per," "Manus injectio," "Pignoris capio"
- Legislation in regal period, 20; in earlier republic, 81-84; in later republic, 237; l. of senate in place of comitia, 288; emperors sole legislators, 379 sq.
- Legitim (portio legitima), introduction of, 235 and n. 4; Justinianian law as to, 397
- Legitimate birth, rule of XII Tables, 113
- Legitimation in Justinianian law, 388, 391
- Legitimus*, meaning, 118
- Lenel, Edictum perpetuum, 291 n. 11
- Lenel, Palingenesia, 383 n. 21
- Lex*, meanings, 19 n. 7; etymology, ib.
- Lex Dei* or Collatio Leg. Mosaricar. et Romanar., 369 sq.
- Lex Rom. Burgundionum*, 372
- Lex Rom. Visigothorum*, 371; earliest channel of Roman law in Central and Western Europe, 404
- Libellus conventionis* and procedure of later empire, 362 sq.
- "Liberi" of praetorian succession on intestacy,—who included, 275
- Liberti*, succession to, in XII Tables, 437
- Libripens* in mancipation, 57 and n. 11
- Literal contract, 258 sq., 419 sq., 430
- Literature and philosophy, Spread of, after first Punic war,—how it influenced the law, 232 sq.
- Literature, Jurisprudential, of classical period, 296-307, 308-314
- Lites* and jurgia, 70 n. 6, 189
- Litigation, Reckless or dishonest,—how checked, 205 n. 14
- Litis contestatio* in legis actiones, 175, 181; under formular system, 335 n. 2; under that of the libellus conventionis, 362
- Litis denuntiatio*, 362
- Loan per aes et libram, see "Nexum"; l. of the jus gentium (see "Mutuum"), 286 sq.; impignoration of the borrower himself or his services in security, 148, 419
- Longi temporis possessio* remodelled by Justinian, 392
- Lunatics, Curatory of, 117, 120, 437
- Maeciani Assis distributio*, 312
- Mancipation (mancipium, mancipatio): meaning of mancipare, and rationale of m., 58 sq., 61 and n. 27, 66 sq. and n. 15; Gaius's description of it, 56; its origin, 57; its regulation by Serv. Tullius, 57, 58; its employment for creation of marital manus (see "Coemptio"), 63, and in testamentary dispositions (see "Testament"), 64 sq.; originally a real sale and transfer. 58, 128; with coined money became an imaginary sale,—really a formal conveyance, 129 sq.; m. the appropriate form of conveyance of res Mancipi, 129; could res nec Mancipi pass by it? 137; ceremonial, original and modified, 59, 128; was there a formula recited by both parties? 131 sq.; effects of m., 129 sq.; in particular,—warranty against eviction, 130-132; leges Mancipii engrafted on the business per aes et libram, 133 sq., 65 n. 8; last mention of m. as still in use as a conveyance, 129 n. 10; substitution for it of solemnis traditio in conveyance of immovable res Mancipi, 392; simple tradition substituted for it by Justinian in all cases, 392
- Mancipii in causa*, 116
- Mancipi, Res*, see "Res Mancipi"
- Mancipium*, various meanings, 61. (See "Mancipation")
- Manumission, Modes of, 315 sq.; amendments of Aelia-Sentian law, 316 sq.; of L. Junia Norbana, 317 sq.; of Justinianian legislation, 391
- Manus*,—its extensive meaning in early law, 24 n. 3, 40, 60 and n. 22; husband's m. over wife, 26 sq.; in manum conventio by confarreation (see "Confarreatio"), ib.; by coemption (see "Coemptio"), 63; by a year's uninterrupted cohabitation as husband and wife (usus), 111; modes of dissolution, 113; in manum conv. was a cap.

- deminutio minima*, 125 ; involving a universal acquisition for the husband, 168 ; without liability under the jus civile for his wife's debts, 125 ; though otherwise under praetorian rules, 126 ; unpopularity of marital manus in early empire, 323 sq. ; and its eventual entire disappearance, 387 ; fiduciary manus, 44 n. 7, 135 and n. 37
- Manus consortio* (in sacramental action in rem), 178 sq. and n. 6
- Manus injectionem*, Leg. Act. per,—Gellius's description of it, 190 sq. ; against whom employed, 192 sq. ; procedure against a nexus, 150 sq. ; against a judicatus or judgment-debtor, 193 sq. ; "capite poenas dabat"—meaning, 195 sq. ; "partis secanto"—meaning, 198 sq. ; Kohler's view, 418 sq. ; attempted reconstruction of provisions of XII Tables about m. i., 199 and n. 38 ; effect of Poetilian law on m. i., 153, 200 sq. ; m. i. pro judicato, 201 ; m. i. pura, ib.
- Manuscripts of Corpus Juris Civilis, 407 sq. ; of Institutes, 407 ; of Digest, 408 sq. ; of Code, 410 ; of Novels, 411
- Marriage: the justae nuptiae of the patricians of the regal period, 26 ; plebeians had no j. n. before the time of Serv. Tullius, 63,—only matrimonia, 84 sq., 111 ; plebeian j. n. accomplished by coemptio, 63 ; the Canuleian law sanctioning inter-marriage of the orders, 84 ; non justae nuptiae or juris gentium m. of the later republic and early empire, 227 ; its effects, ib., 330 ; the free justae nuptiae of the empire, 323 ; was ductio uxoris in domum mariti essential to its completion ? ib. n. 1 ; requisites of m. in Justinianian law, 388 ; second marriages, ib.
- Materfamilias*, who so called, 31 and n. 22 ; mf. as distinguished from uxor, 111 n. 2
- Matrimonium*, original meaning, 35
- Mayhem*, 439 n.
- Membrum ruptum*, 102, 439 n.
- Minors, Curatory of, 326 sq.
- Missiones in possessionem*, 349 sq.
- Modestinus, Herennius, 306 sq.
- Money : media of exchange before money coined, 57 ; aes rude, 58 ; aes signatum of Serv. Tullius, ib. and notes 13, 15 ; coinage of Decemvirs, 129 ; successive reductions in weight of the as, 416
- Morals, Decline of, in latter half of re-public,—how it influenced the law, 233 sq.
- Moribus, Judicium de*, 234
- Movables,—was there any property in them in regal period ? 40 sq.
- Mutuum*, 269 sq.
- Natural law, see "Jus naturale" ; n. 1. older than civil, 41
- Naturalis ratio*, 283
- Nexum* and Nexus,—occasional ambiguity of words, 147 ; Mamilius, Quint. Mucius, and Ael. Gallus on their meaning, 415 sq. ; nexum a contract of loan of money per aes et libram, 145-155 ; its position before Serv. Tullius, 66 ; his regulation of it, 66 ; the ceremonial after coined money in use, 146 sq. ; its effects, 147 sq. ; manus injectio by creditor sanctioned by XII Tables under words "aeris confessi," 192 sq., 418 ; subsequent domum ductio, but without addictio, 148 sq., 151, 194 sq. ; status of nexus in detention, 90, 151 sq. ; nexi vincti solutique, 155 n. 36 ; nexi liberatio, 149 and n. 18 ; abuses of nexum and maltreatment of the nexi, 90-92, 152 ; consequent prohibition of nexum by the Poetilian law, 91, 152 ; provisions of the statute for relief of existing nexi, 153 sq.
- Nomen arcarium*, 259 ; n. transcripticum, 258 sq., 419 sq.
- Non-citizens,—their position under the jus civile, 103-108 ; under the influence of the jus gentium, 249 sq. ; peregrinus, 105 n. 8 ; recuperatory procedure between citizens and non-citizens, 210 sq. ; fictitious actions to or against peregrins under praetorian system, 340 ; colonial and Junian latins, "see Latinity"
- Novels (novellae constitutiones), Post-Theodosian, 369 ; Justinian's, 386 ; Julian's Latin epitome of them, 400, 404 ; their MSS., texts, and editions, 410
- Noxae deditio*, 115 sq. ; n. d. of filius-familias unknown in Justinianian law, 389 sq.
- Nudum jus Quiritium*, 254 and n. 16
- Numa's guilds, 11
- Nuncupata, Verba*, in mancipation, 132 sq.
- Oath as safeguard of obligation, 50, 156 ; reference to o., 220 n. 2
- Obligation, Law of, under XII Tables, 142-158 ; prominence of o. ex delicto,

- 148, 157; paucity of those ex contractu (see "Contract"), 148; by XII Tables many breaches of contract punished as offences, 157; o. ex re, 157; o. to restore unjustifiable gains, 256 and n. 2
- Oratio principis* initiating Sct., 288
- Oculi, Jus*, 26 n. 7
- Palingenesia*, 383
- Pandects, see "Digest"
- Papinianus, Aemilius, 303 sq.
- Papirius Justus, 366 n.
- Parent and Child,—the relation when latter in potestas, see "Patria potestas"; when emancipated, see "Emancipation"; when issue of non justae nuptiae (or juris gentium marriage), 227, 330; p. and c. in Justinianian law, 389-391
- Parricidium*, 53 n. 13
- "Partis secanto" of decemviral legislation against insolvent debtors, 198 sq.; Kohler's view of it, 418 sq.
- Patented counsel, Responses of, see "Responsa prudentium"
- Paterfamilias*, 24 sq., 122
- Patria potestas*,—its origin in custom, 113; its nature, 27 sq., 31 sq., 122; resulted from justae nuptiae (see "Marriage"), 114 and n. 14; adoption (see "Adoption" and "Adrogation"), 29; and legitimation of children by a mistress, 391; but not from non justae nuptiae (or juris gentium marriage), 227; how p. p. came to an end, 24 sq., 32, 123 sq. (see also "Emancipation"); provisions of XII Tables in reference to it, 114 sq.; domestic jurisdiction of paterfamilias, 32, 68, 210 sq.; limited liability of p. for debts of filiusfamilias under praetorian rules, 256; relaxation of p. p. by introduction of peculium castrense, 322 sq.; further relaxations of classical period, 324 sq.; remains of p. p. in Justinianian law, 389-391
- Patricians, their position in early law, 6 sq.; meaning of patricii, 35 n. 41; the p. family in regal period, 24 sq.; the p. order of succession, 43 sq.; the strife between p. and plebeians, 80 sq.
- Patron and client, see "Clientage"
- Patron and freedman, see "Manumission"; p.'s right of succession to f., 276 n. 25
- Paulus, Julius, 306; his Sententiae, 311
- Peculium profectitium*, 325; p. castrense, 322 sq.; p. quasi-castrense, 323 n. 15; the peculia of filiifamilias in Justinianian law, 390; the 118th Novel on the p. castrense vel quasi, 390
- Pecunia credita*, 220 sq., 259
- Peregrinus*, see "Non-Citizen"
- Perjury, 50
- Personality,—only paterfamilias had complete, 122; quoad jus civile those subject to him were representatives of his persona, ib.
- Petri Exceptiones Leg. Romanar.*, 405
- Pignoris capionem, Leg. act. per.*,—its nature, 202; when employed, 156 and n. 38, 203; effect, 204
- Pignus*, 142 n. 72, 251; p. in causa judicati captum, 362
- Plebeians, The, of early Rome, 9 sq.; their position, 12; their domestic relations in regal period, 34 sq.; had no justae nuptiae before time of Serv. Tullius, 63,—only matrimonia, 34 sq., 110; afterwards got justae nuptiae by coemption, 64, and manus by usus, 111; early distributions of land among them, 39; their order of intestate succession in regal period, 48 sq.; their substitute for a testament, 64; strife between them and patricians, 80 sq.; attainment of general equality of private rights by XII Tables, 96; right of intermarriage with the patricians by the Canuleian law, 84, and eventually, by a series of statutes, substantial political equality, 81-86
- Plebiscita*, 82, 237; ranked with leges, 84
- Pledge, see "Pignus"
- Pomponius, Sextus, 300
- Pontiffs,—their judicial and quasi-judicial functions, 70 sq., 74 note 18, 209 sq.; their functions in adrogations, 30, in matters of testament, 47, and in the actio sacramento, 181 sq.; their interpretation, 246 sq.
- Possessio, Bonae fidei*, 254 sq.
- Possessio, Bonorum*, see "Bonor. Poss."
- Possession, Roman law of, somewhat uncertain, 327 and note
- Possessionem, Missio in*, 349
- Possessiones*, 87 sq.
- Postulatio, Judicis*, see "Jud. post."
- Praedes litis et vindictiarum* in sacramental procedure, 181, 184 sq.
- Praestare*, 338 n. 11
- Praetors: institution of the praetorship, 85; office of the urban p., 228; the peregrin p., 229; their edicts, see

- "Edicts of the Magistrates"; the p. not specially the mouthpieces of equity, 241; praetorian amendments often the product of years, 271
Praetorian stipulations, 258, 348 sq.
Primogeniture,—no privilege of, 45
Procedure, see "Judicial procedure"
Proculians and Sabinians, 297 sq.
Prodigus, see "Spendthrift" "Promise,"—possible etymology, 50 n. 2
Property, originally included in manus, 40, 126; early law of p., 36 sq.; p. civil and natural, 41; was there any p. of movables in regal period? 40 sq.; law of p. under XII Tables, 126-142; offences against p. in XII Tables, 140-142; changes in law of p. in later republic, 250-255; the law of p. in the Justinianian legislation, 392-394, see "Dominium et jure Quiritium," "Bonitarian ownership"
Propinquity, computation of degrees, 119 n. 14
Provincial conquests,—how they influenced the law, 231 sq.; p. governors,—their edicts, 242; p. land, 250
Prudentium, Responsa, see "Resp. prud."
Publician edict and action, 252-255, 340
Pupils, Tutorship over, see "Tutorship"

Quaestiones ac monita, Lombardic, 405
Querela inofficiosi testamenti, 235 sq., 270; substantially displaced by Justinian's legislation, 397
Quiritarian right,—origin of king's jurisdiction in questions of, 70 sq.; Q. ownership, see "Dominium ex jure Quiritium" Quiritium, Meum est ex jure,—significance, 126 sq.

Raudusculum, 59
Ravenna, reported transfer of Roman law-school to, 405
Real contracts, 268 sq.
Recuperatio by treaty with foreigners, 107, 108; its nature, 211 sq.; its employment inter cives, 212
Regal period,—elements of population, 8-13; regulatives of public and private order, 14-23; institutions of private law anterior to Serv. Tullius, 24-54; Servian reforms, 55-75
Religion and morals, Decline of, in latter half of republic,—how it influenced the law, 233 sq.
Religious element in law, 15
Remancipation, 113
Rescripta, Imperial, 294 sq.; their diminished authority in later empire, 353 sq.; Justinian's declaration as to them, 354
Res mancipi and nec mancipi,—distinction due to Serv. Tullius, 56; meaning of r. m., 60; what were r. m.? 61; why so called, 62; consequence of defective conveyance of r. m., 41 n. 16; in bonis tenure of r. m., ib., 252, 254; r. n. m. might be held ex jure Quiritium, 127; could r. n. m. pass by mancipation? 137; distinction abolished by Justinian, 392
Responsa prudentium, 291-293; origin of jus respondendi, 291 sq.; form and value of r., 292 sq.; their regulation by Hadrian, 293; out of use after middle of third century, 307
Restitutio, In integrum, 350
Revenge, Blood, 51 sq.; vestiges of it in XII Tables, 102 n. 12
Romano-barbarian Codes, 371 sq.
Roscio com., Cicero pro, 259
Rutilian bankruptcy arrangements, 153 n. 31, 236

Sabine rape, 26 n. 6
Sabini libri III de jure civili, 298
Sabinians and Proculians, 297 sq.
Sacer esto and Sacratio capitis, 17, 52 sq. and n. 14
Sacra familiae,—importance of perpetuating, 25 and note 5; heir's liability for, 169
Sacramentum, Leg. actio per,—general idea, 177; procedure in vindication of land, 177-181; the manus consertio, 178 sq.; the sacramento provocatio, 180 sq.; the deposit ad pontem, 181, 417, for which praedes sacramenti substituted, 416; what it all meant, 71, 182-184; effect of judgment, 184 sq.; sacramental procedure in other cases, 185-187
Sacrae, Leges, 81 sq.
Sacratio bonorum, 27, 52 n. 12
Sale, Stages in the history of, 163, 164, 262-268; the decemviral provision that property of thing sold should not pass till price paid, 128 and n. 4, 129 sq.
Satisfactio secundum mancipium, 265
Scaevola, Q. Cervid., 303 sq.
Scaevola, Quint. Mucius, P. f., 248
Seals to testaments, etc., 162, 272 n. 9
Secession of plebeians, First, 81; second, 82; third, 92
Sectio bonorum, 198 and n. 32
Self-help in regal period, 51, 69 sq.; remains of it in XII Tables, 102; the decretum divi Marci, 295 note

- Senatusconsults take place of leges, 288 ; already numerous in time of Claudius, 287 and n. 10
- Senatusconsults, Particular ; Sc. Macedonianum, 325 ; Sc. Orphitianum, 333 ; Sc. Pegasianum, 332 ; Sc. Tertullianum, 332 ; Sc. Trebellianum, 332 ; Sc. Vellaeianum, 294 n. 3
- Sepulture, 442 n.
- Servilis cognatio*, 391
- Servitude of the glebe, see "Colonatus"
- Servitudes in XII Tables, 142 ; creation of s. by pacts and stipulations, 251 and n. 8 ; s. in classical period, 328
- Servius Sulpicius Rufus, 248
- Servius Tullius,—his reforms, 55-75 ; institution of census, 55 ; consequences, 56 sq. ; his amendments on the course of justice, 68-75 ; his fifty laws about contracts and crimes, 65, 72, 86
- Sex : originally no privilege of s. in succession of sui heredes, 44 ; but females practically under fetters, ib. ; disabilities imposed on them by Voconian law, 270 ; limitation by "interpretation" of their right of succession as agnates, 165, 270 ; praetorian relief, 275 ; Justinianian equalisation, 395
- Sinaitic papyri, Bernardakis's, 373
- Slaves : domestic position of s. in regal period, 38 sq. ; provisions of XII Tables in reference to them, 115 sq. ; slave jure civili a thing, jure naturali a person, 121 ; limited liability of owner for debts of s., 256 ; improved position of s. in Justinianian law, 391 ; enfranchisement of s., see "Manumission"
- Soldiers, Exceptional privileges of, 319 sq. ; testamentum militare, 320 sq. ; peculium castrense, 322 sq.
- Solutio per aes et libram*, 59 n. 17, 149 and n. 18
- Spendthrift, Interdiction of, 32, 110, 121, 206 n. 2
- Sponsio*,—derivation of word, 215 ; confined to citizens, 216, 257 and n. 7 ; heir of sponsor at one time not bound, 216 n. 9. (See "Stipulation")
- Sponsio et restipulatio tertiae partis*, 217 sq.
- Sponsionem*, Procedure in real actions per, 337 sq.
- Stationes jus publice docentium*, 298
- Statu liberi*, 115
- "Status conductive dies cum hoste," 211
- Stipulation,—its introduction, 213-216 ; derivation of word, 214 ; theories as to origin of s., 214 sq. ; forms,—sponsio (σπένδειν and σπονδή), promissio, etc., 215 sq. ; a formal contract, 216 ; its expansion in latter half of republic, 256-258 ; stipulatio habere licere, 265 sq. ; s. duplae, ib. ; s. Aquiliana, 257 ; praetorian stipulations, 348 sq.
- Stoics, Philosophy of the,—its influence on the law, 232 note
- Succession, Universal, to the living,—by in manum conventio, see "Manus" ; by adrogation, see "Adrogation" ; by bonorum emptio, see "Emptio bonorum" : to the dead,—by inheritance, see "Hereditas," testamentary, see "Testament," or on intestacy, see "Intestate succession" ; by usucapio pro herede, see "Usucapio pro herede" ; by bonorum possessio, see "Bonor. poss." ; by trust, see "Fideicommissa"
- Sui heredes*,—who included amongst a man's, 165 ; real nature of their succession, 47 and n. 14 ; by jus civile and praetorian rules testator had either to institute or disinherit them, 162 ; consequences of praeterition, 273 ; the Justinianian law on praeterition and disinheritance, 396 sq. ; avoidance of a testament by subsequent emergence of s. h. who had not been provided for, 163 ; under jus civile, s. h. had the first place on intestacy, 43, 47, 163 ; had no preference over emancipated children in praetorian or imperial intestate succession, 275 ; no privilege of males or of primogeniture among s. h., 44, 45 ; they were necessary heirs, 166, and took per stirpes, 167
- Sui juris*, 119 and n. 13
- Summa Perusina*, 405
- Suretyship, 256
- Syrian collection of Ante-Justinianian law, 374
- Tabula Heracleensis*, see "Lex Julia municipalis"
- Talion in XII Tables, 102, 439 n. 3
- Terminus*, worship of, 37
- Testament (see "Succession")—what ? 159 ; only a citizen could make a t., 48 n. 17 ; original incapacity of women to do so, 44 n. 7 ; the t. calatis comitiis, 47, 158 ; the t. in procinctu factum, 47 ; difficulty experienced by plebeians in making a t., 64 ; their makeshift for it, 64 sq. ; the t. per aes et libram in its inchoate condition, 64, 159-161 ; its second and third

- stages, 161 sq.; necessity of testator's instituting or disinheriting sui heredes, see "Sui heredes"; how he had to deal with emancipated children, see "Emancipation"; instituted heir required to have testamenti factio with testator, 339; substitutions, 166; subsidiary provisions, 329; the so-called praetorian t., ib.; the t. of the Justinianian law, 394; J.'s legislation about disherison, praeterition, etc., 396 sq.; rights, etc., of heir, etc., under or in opposition to a testament, see "Hereditas," "Bonor. possessio"; querela inofficiosi testamenti, see "Querela"; testamentum militare, 320 sq.; testamentary trusts, see "Fideicommissa"; codicils, see "Codicils"
- Texts of Institutes, 408; of Digest, 409; of Code, 410; of Novels, 411
- Theft and its forms and actions, 140 sq., 428 sq.
- Theodorici, Edictum*, 371
- Theodosian Code, 367 sq.; Theodosian and post-Theodosian Novels, 369
- Theophilus's Paraphrase of the Institutes, 401 sq.
- Tignum junctum*, 127, 141
- Tipucitos, 403 n. 4
- Transmission (transmissio) of heir's jus adeundi, — Justinian's amendment, 397
- Tribonian, 378 sq.; his "emblems," 382 n. 15
- Tribunate, Institution of, 81; functions of tribunes, 81, 91
- Trinocialis usurpatio*, 35 n. 43, 111
- Turin Gloss on Institutes, 404
- Tutary over Pupils in regal period, 33, 116; t. of male agnates (tutela legitima) introduced by XII Tables, 119; tut. leg. ended by capitis deminutio, 124; the office of a tutor, 120; the actio de rationibus distrahendis, 141; removal of tutor as suspect, 207; regulation of t. over p. by oratio divi Severi, 325; tutory-at-law opened to cognates, and exceptionally even to females, 391
- Tutary over Women in patrician Rome, 33, 116; its justification, 33 n. 34; tutory of agnates, 119; fiduciary t., 44 n. 7; tutela legitima of agnates abolished by l. Claudia, 287, 326; entire disappearance of t. over w. in later classical law, 326
- Twelve Tables, — the complaints that evoked them, 86 sq.; their compilation, 94; sources, 95; remains, 96 sq.; reconstruction, 98 sq.; arrangement and most authoritative versions, 99 n. 8; general characteristics, 100 sq.; the texts of, 434-443
- Ulpianus, Domitius, 305; Fragmenta Ulpiani, 310, 311
- Unciarium fenus*, 91
- Usucapio*, The, of XII Tables, 138 sq.; amended in latter half of republic, 251; remodelled by Justinian, 392
- Usucapio pro herede*, — origin, 48 sq.; nature, 170 sq., 136 n. 42
- Usufruct and quasi-usufruct, 327
- Usureceptio fiduciae*, 136 sq.
- Usury, Laws to repress, 91
- Usurpatio*, 111
- Usus*, see "Custom"
- Usus*, marriage by, 111 n. 1
- "Uti legassit suae rei ita jus esto," — original application, 158 and n. 3; extension, 162
- Uxor* and materfamilias, — distinction, 111 n. 2
- Vadimonium*, 144, 263 n. 23
- Valentinianian "Law of Citations," 363 sq.
- Valerius Probus, — his "Notae Juris," 312
- Vatican Fragments, 370
- Vectigalis, Ager*, 393
- Vengeance, Private, in early law, 51 sq.
- Verba nuncupata* in a mancipation, 132 sq.
- Vesting of an inheritance, 166 sq.
- "Veteres" of later republic, 247 sq.
- Vindex* in manus injectio against a judgment-debtor, 194, 195, and notes; no room for him in m. i. against a nexal debtor, 151; in the XII Tables, 192 n. 5, 434
- Vindicare*, meaning, 182 n. 15; etymology, ib.
- Vindicatio, Rei*: per sacramentum, 177-187; per sponsionem, 337 sq.; per formulam petitoriam, 338
- Vindiciae*, 184 n. 22, 443
- Vindicta* in sacramental real action, 179; in manumission, 316
- "Vis civilis et festucaria," 183
- Visigothorum, Lex Romana*, 371
- Voconiana ratio*, 270
- Warranty against eviction in mancipation, 130 sq.; did it arise ipso jure? 131
- Witchcraft, 140
- Women, see "Manus," "Sex," "Testament," "Tutary over women"

By G. H. J.
10/15/20

Printed by R. & R. CLARK, LIMITED, Edinburgh.

LIGHT

BY

PROFESSOR P. G. TAIT

Second Edition. Crown 8vo. Price 6s.

"A clear, concise, and eminently intelligible statement of the principal laws of Light as now known. . . . Very well adapted to the needs of the student. . . . A valuable addition to the literature of science."—Scotsman.

PROPERTIES OF MATTER

BY

PROFESSOR P. G. TAIT

Third Edition. Crown 8vo. Price 7s. 6d.

"The work is clearly written, and . . . is well calculated to stimulate a student's reflective powers, and is a very able introduction to the study of physics."—Westminster Review.

DYNAMICS

BY

PROFESSOR P. G. TAIT

Crown 8vo. Price 7s. 6d.

"The book is a clear and masterly exposition—illustrated by diagrams wherever necessary—of a subject on which Professor Tait has long been regarded as an authority. Behind theoretical knowledge, in his case, lie many years of practical teaching, and there is evidence on almost every page of close appreciation of the needs of students. The manual is, in fact, a notable accession to the resources of those who are engaged in teaching the higher aspects of physical science."—Speaker.

LONDON: A. & C. BLACK, SOHO SQUARE

INTRODUCTION

TO

A L G E B R A

FOR THE USE OF SECONDARY SCHOOLS AND TECHNICAL COLLEGES

BY
G. CHRYSTAL, M.A., LL.D.

HONORARY FELLOW OF CORPUS CHRISTI COLLEGE, CAMBRIDGE;
PROFESSOR OF MATHEMATICS IN THE UNIVERSITY OF EDINBURGH

In One Volume. Small Crown 8vo. 456 pages. Price 5s.

“Professor Chrystal is one of the greatest geniuses among mathematicians, and the stamp of his individuality is on all his work. . . . Dr. Chrystal’s book is thoroughly original, and will doubtless secure the careful attention of teachers.”—British Weekly.

“The most lucid, practical, and rational text-book of all the similar works with which I am acquainted.”—Daily Mail.

“Admirably lucid, and often strikingly original in his methods of demonstration.”—Liverpool Post.

“As a junior text-book of Algebra, it stands unrivalled.”—Educational News.

“This is a class-book of a very high character, and is a very complete work on the subject, being thoroughly up-to-date in every particular.”—Secondary Education.

LONDON: A. & C. BLACK, SOHO SQUARE

ALGEBRA

AN ELEMENTARY TEXT-BOOK

FOR THE

HIGHER CLASSES OF SECONDARY SCHOOLS AND FOR COLLEGES

BY

G. CHRYSTAL, M.A., LL.D.

HONORARY FELLOW OF CORPUS CHRISTI COLLEGE, CAMBRIDGE; PROFESSOR OF MATHEMATICS IN THE UNIVERSITY OF EDINBURGH

In Two Volumes. Post 8vo. Cloth.

Volume I. (Third Edition). 584 pp. Price 10s. 6d.

„ II. 588 pp. „ 12s. 6d.

SOME PRESS OPINIONS.

“It is the completest work on Algebra that has yet come before us, and in lucidity of exposition it is second to none. The author views his subject from the high ground of the educationist, without reference to the exigencies of established examinations; yet neither the candidates who are training for such nor the teachers who prepare them will act wisely if they neglect his lessons.”—Athenæum.

“The explanations are admirably clear, and the arrangement appears to be a very good one. No teacher of the higher classes in our schools or of students preparing for the University examinations should be without this book. There is nothing like it in English, and it forms an excellent introduction to the various applications of Algebra to the higher analysis.”—Academy.

“A work of singular ability and freshness of treatment. It is not a book for elementary classes, but it will be an excellent work to put into the hands of some of our sixth-form pupils.”—Nature.

LONDON: A. & C. BLACK, SOHO SQUARE

PRINCIPLES OF POLITICAL ECONOMY

BY

J. SHIELD NICHOLSON, M.A., D.Sc.

PROFESSOR OF POLITICAL ECONOMY IN THE UNIVERSITY OF EDINBURGH
SOMETIME EXAMINER IN THE UNIVERSITIES OF CAMBRIDGE
LONDON AND VICTORIA

In Two Volumes. Demy 8vo.

Vol. I. price 15s. Vol. II. price 12s. 6d.

PRESS NOTICES OF VOL. I

"We have, however, found much acute and trenchant criticism of Mill's and other doctrines, a great deal of valuable information, and full consideration of the claims of economic history."—Speaker.

"The book is essentially a good and thoughtful book, which will be helpful to students, and interesting to the general reader."—Westminster Gazette.

"His expositions are lucid and careful."—Daily News.

"We have no hesitation in affirming our belief that his treatise is destined to attain a wide circulation, and to exercise considerable influence, and that it will occupy a place in contemporary economic literature as deservedly high as it promises to be eminently useful."—The Economic Journal.

"It is undoubtedly an important contribution to the systematic study of Political Economy, alike in its historical and in its more speculative aspects."—The Times.

"His book is a good one, enlivened with many facts, and sound on all fundamental questions."—Literary World.

"While the book is admirably adapted to serve its primary purpose as a text-book, it may be cordially recommended to the general reader who wishes to find a clear and judicious guide in the examination of economic problems."—The Guardian.

"While not pretending to the originality and analytical criticism of the one (Professor Sidgwick), he keeps closer to facts, gives more emphasis to what is really important in the science, and is more fearless and independent in statement. While failing to reach the directness and systematic fulness of the other (Professor Marshall), he avoids his fault of using a mass of technical phraseology and almost pedantic detail. The consequence is he is more readable than either."—Scotsman.

LONDON: A. & C. BLACK, SOHO SQUARE

MONEY

AND ESSAYS ON

PRESENT MONETARY PROBLEMS

J. SHIELD NICHOLSON, M.A., D.Sc.
PROFESSOR OF POLITICAL ECONOMY IN THE UNIVERSITY OF EDINBURGH

Fourth Edition, Revised and Enlarged
In Crown 8vo. Price 7s. 6d.

“Never, perhaps, have the essential principles of currency been set forth in a shape so free from technical detail, and yet without any sacrifice of scientific precision.”—Economic Journal.

BY THE SAME

HISTORICAL PROGRESS

AND

IDEAL SOCIALISM

Second Edition
In Crown 8vo. Price 1s. 6d.

“He has put his case with so much lucidity and epigrammatic force, that, however numerous those who disagree with his conclusions, there can scarcely be any who will not apprehend his meaning.”—Economic Journal.

BY THE SAME

STRIKES

AND SOCIAL PROBLEMS

In Crown 8vo. Price 3s. 6d.

“He deserves the thanks of the thoughtful public for having shown how such questions as he deals with can be profoundly and yet popularly treated.”—Scotsman.

LONDON: A. & C. BLACK, SOHO SQUARE

In Crown 8vo. Cloth. Price 5s.

AN INTRODUCTION TO CHEMICAL THEORY

By ALEXANDER SCOTT

M.A. (CANTAB.), D.Sc. (EDIN.), F.R.S.E.

Jacksonian Demonstrator in the University of Cambridge

"We can most strongly recommend this book to the notice of teachers as a guide to the studies of their more advanced pupils."—Chemical News.

"The book is well written, and gives a vast amount of valuable information in a concise and intelligible style."—Edinburgh Medical Journal.

"Has endeavoured very successfully to explain in a clear and simple manner the fundamental laws of chemistry, and to show, by well-selected illustrations, the development of chemical theory in recent times."—National Observer.

Crown 8vo. Cloth. Price 1s. 6d. net each

CHRISTIANITY AND HISTORY

By ADOLF HARNACK

Translated, with the Author's sanction, by THOMAS BAILEY SAUNDERS
With an Introductory note

"It is highly interesting and full of thought. The short introductory note with which Mr. Saunders prefaces it is valuable for its information and excellent in its tone."—Athenæum.

"The lecture itself is weighty in its every word, and should be read and reread by those desiring to have in a nutshell the central positions of modern Christianity."—Christian World.

THE VITALITY OF CHRISTIAN DOGMAS AND THEIR POWER OF EVOLUTION A STUDY IN RELIGIOUS PHILOSOPHY

By A. SABATIER, D.D.

Dean of the Faculty of Protestant Theology, Paris

Translated by MRS. EMMANUEL CHRISTEN

With a Preface by

The Very Rev. the Hon. W. H. FREMANTLE, D.D., Dean of Ripon

"This interesting and able volume. We cannot speak too highly of the manner in which Mrs. Christen has translated it. She has rendered into clear and vigorous English, not the mere words, but the thoughts and arguments of the original."—Pall Mall Gazette.

"Professor Sabatier has done an excellent service to liberal Christians of all denominations."—New Age.

MONISM: OR THE CONFESSION OF FAITH OF A MAN OF SCIENCE

By PROFESSOR ERNST HAECKEL

Translated from the German by J. D. F. GILCHRIST

"We may readily admit that Professor Haeckel has stated his case with the clearness and courage which we should expect of him, and that his lecture may be regarded as a fair and authoritative statement of the views now held by a large number of scientifically educated people."—Times.

LONDON: A. & C. BLACK, SOHO SQUARE

AN INTRODUCTION TO STRUCTURAL BOTANY

By D. H. SCOTT, M.A., PH.D., F.R.S.

PART I.—Flowering Plants (3rd Edition)
Illustrated with 113 figures

PART II.—Flowerless Plants (2nd Edition)
Illustrated with 114 figures

In two Volumes. Crown 8vo. Cloth. Price 3s. 6d. each

PRESS OPINIONS

"In noticing elementary books in these pages, we have lamented nothing more than the want of a book which should do for structural botany what Prof. Oliver's Lessons has long done for the study of the principal natural orders. It seems hard to realise that this grievance is no more, and that we possess such a book in our own language, and a book that no honest critic will fail to assess at a higher value than any known book in any language that has the same scope and aim. Nothing could well be more plain and simple, or more severely accurate or better judged from beginning to end."—Journal of Botany.

"As an introduction to botany, which is all that this work pretends to be, this is so excellent, that we commend it most heartily to all who desire to be well grounded in the first principles of each department of botany, not of one only."—The Gardeners' Chronicle.

"An introduction to the study of structural botany has long been a desideratum in this country. . . . Dr. Scott's little book supplies this need in a most admirable manner, and he has thoroughly earned the gratitude both of teacher and student alike for the freshness and clearness with which he has presented his subject."—Nature.

"It is very conscientiously done, and the illustrations are very numerous and very good."—Pall Mall Gazette.

"Clearly written in plain language, and consist of first-hand knowledge expressly arranged for this definite end. Such books are the grammar of botany."—Nature Notes.

"This admirable little publication."—Guardian.

"It stands out from the ever-increasing crowd of guides, text-books, and manuals, in virtue not only of originality of design, but also of the fact that the subjects treated have been specially investigated for the purpose of the book, so that we have not the mere compilation of a book-man, but an account based on the results of the author's own observation."—Natural Science.

"Students of botany will welcome the second part of Dr. D. H. Scott's Introduction to Structural Botany which has just appeared. . . . The language is clear and not unnecessarily technical, which is a great advantage to a beginner. We believe many are deterred from the fascinating study of botany by the extremely numerous technical terms with which so many manuals abound. . . . The illustrations are clear and well explained; many of them are original, others chosen from the works of specialists in the various subdivisions. We do not remember reading a clearer description of the growth of ferns than that in the chapter on vascular cryptograms."—Westminster Review, April 1897.

LONDON: A. & C. BLACK, SOHO SQUARE

EARLY GREEK PHILOSOPHY

BY JOHN BURNET, M.A.

FELLOW OF MERTON COLLEGE, OXFORD

Demy 8vo. Cloth. Price 10s. 6d.

"Mr. Burnet has placed English readers under a deep obligation by the publication of his studies in 'Early Greek Philosophy.' The work is no mere historical sketch such as we have had to be content with up till now, but a thoroughly critical presentation of the teaching of some of the earliest speculators on the nature of things."—Westminster Review.

"In writing a history of 'Early Greek Philosophy,' Mr. Burnet enters into competition with formidable rivals; but we have no hesitation in saying that formidable as these rivals are, this latest history, taken all in all, is the best. He has, in short, put into our hands the most readable and the most trustworthy history of early Greek philosophy."—British Weekly.

"The book is a valuable and interesting addition to the literature of Greek philosophy."—Athenæum.

"We recommend this book cordially to all who are interested in philosophy; to those who do not know the history of early Greek philosophy, because it will give them a clear and accurate picture of a period of thought which possesses both great importance and a singular fascination; to those who do, because it will give them the opportunity of reading these thinkers again."—Speaker.

"It is only just to the author to say that he has conferred a great benefit on the accurate study of Greek philosophy by his valuable treatise."—Morning Post.

"It is impossible in the space at our command to do justice to a work containing so much research. The author has made good his claim to a place in the front rank of English scholarship. He has a rare gift of lucid exposition."—Daily Chronicle.

"The book is a remarkable example of unwearied research, and of original and independent work in the interpretation of the often confused and obscure remains of these early thinkers."—North British Daily Mail.

LONDON: A. & C. BLACK, SOHO SQUARE

WORKS BY THE LATE W. ROBERTSON SMITH, M.A., LL.D.

PROFESSOR OF ARABIC IN THE UNIVERSITY OF CAMBRIDGE

Demy 8vo. Price 15s. net.

LECTURES ON THE RELIGION OF THE SEMITES

THE FUNDAMENTAL INSTITUTIONS

New Edition. Revised throughout by the Author.

Demy 8vo. Price 10s. 6d.

THE OLD TESTAMENT IN THE JEWISH CHURCH

A COURSE OF LECTURES ON BIBLICAL CRITICISM

Second Edition. Revised and much Enlarged.

Post 8vo. Price 10s. 6d.

THE PROPHETS OF ISRAEL

AND THEIR PLACE IN HISTORY

TO THE CLOSE OF THE EIGHTH CENTURY B.C.

New Edition

WITH INTRODUCTION AND ADDITIONAL NOTES

BY

THE REV. T. K. CHEYNE, M.A., D.D.

ORIEL PROFESSOR OF THE INTERPRETATION OF HOLY SCRIPTURE AT OXFORD CANON OF ROCHESTER

LONDON: A. & C. BLACK, SOHO SQUARE

Black's Series of School Text-Books

In Small Crown 8vo, bound in Cloth

Price 1s. net per Volume

BLACK'S SCHOOL GEOGRAPHY

EUROPE. By L. W. LYDE, M.A., Headmaster of the English Side, Glasgow Academy.

NORTH AMERICA. By L. W. LYDE, M.A.

THE BRITISH ISLES. By L. W. LYDE, M.A.

BLACK'S LITERARY EPOCH SERIES

Edited by L. W. LYDE, M.A.

XIX.-CENTURY PROSE. By J. H. FOWLER, M.A., Clifton College.

XIX.-CENTURY POETRY. By A. C. M'DONNELL, M.A., Armagh Royal School.

BLACK'S SCHOOL SHAKESPEARE

Edited by L. W. LYDE, M.A.

A MIDSUMMER-NIGHT'S DREAM. By L. W. LYDE, M.A.

KING LEAR. By Miss PH. SHEAVYN, M.A., Lecturer on English Literature, Somerville College, Oxford.

BLACK'S SIR WALTER SCOTT CONTINUOUS READERS

THE TALISMAN. By W. MELVEN, M.A., Glasgow Academy.

QUENTIN DURWARD. By H. W. ORD, B.A., Blackheath School.

THE SCOTT BATTLE-PIECES. By J. HIGHAM, M.A., Carlisle Grammar School.

BLACK'S SHORT HISTORIES

Price 2s. per Volume

THE ENGLISH PEOPLE IN THE NINETEENTH CENTURY. By H. DE B. GIBBINS, M.A., Litt.D.

BLACK'S HISTORICAL FRENCH READINGS

Edited by Professor CLOVIS BÉVENOT, Mason College, Birmingham

Price 2s. net per Volume

THE AGE OF RICHELIEU. By A. JAMSON SMITH, M.A., Headmaster of Camp Hill Grammar School, Birmingham.

THE AGE OF LOUIS XI. By F. B. SMART, Eastbourne College.

BLACK'S HISTORICAL LATIN READERS

Edited by GEORGE SMITH, M.A., Assistant Master at Rugby School

Price 2s. per Volume

THE CONQUEST OF ITALY AND THE STRUGGLE WITH CARTHAGE.

By E. G. WILKINSON, M.A., Manchester Grammar School.

THE FOREIGN EMPIRE. 200 TO 60 B.C. By H. W. ATKINSON.

Volumes in Preparation

A MANUAL OF ESSAY WRITING FOR HIGHER FORMS OF SECONDARY SCHOOLS

By J. H. FOWLER, M.A.

Assistant Master at Clifton College, Editor of 'XIX.-Century Prose.'

BLACK'S TALES FROM FRENCH HISTORY FOR ELEMENTARY FORMS

Edited by F. B. KIRKMAN, B.A.

I. LES GAULOIS ET LES FRANCS.

LONDON: A. & C. BLACK, SOHO SQUARE

